5. The camp at Guayabo Dulce was under the personal supervision of Harrison. Up to the time of my inspection of Guayabo Dulce I had a very favorable opinion of Capt. Harrison (due entirely to unofficial personal actions), and was agreeably surprised at the appearance of his men. I believed that he had maintained a normal routine of drills, inspections, and inspections.

6. The Seventieth Company joined this regiment during August, 1920, Santo Domingo City. While it was in Santo Domingo City it was a detriment for the bad characters of the provost company. (Two hundred and tenth) and the Forty-fourth Company. Captain William M. Marshall, who at that time commanded the provost company, made the above statement to me.

7. On December 26, 1920, Luis Batista, a native bodega keeper, had been running a licensed dance near the camp. On this date he had sold liquor to marines, which was unusual, and about 4 p. m. had left bodega in charge of a small boy and had gone to Hato Mayor. There was no authorized liberty this day; nevertheless, the acting sergeant of the 5th allowed men to leave the camp. The gunnery sergeant was under arrest. The first sergeant showed utter lack of reliability and force. He was where the captain was, but did not send for him when conditions became serious. He undoubtedly knew exactly where the shooting was taking place, but it was the nerve to take strong measures. I believe the only criticism that the captain deserves is for being out of camp for two nights in succession. I think that he had confidence in his first sergeant. Events showed this confidence to have been misplaced.

8. I am of the opinion that this most unfortunate and disgraceful affair due to the leadership of a few bad characters, the unreliability of the commissioned officers, the unusual amount of liquor sold to marines, dislike of a British subject known as "English," and a fancied grievance against English and one or two natives.

9. I recommend that no further action be taken.

1. Returned for additional information, as follows:

(a) What authority had Capt. Harrison to be absent from Guayabo Dulce from 5 p. m. December 25 to 4.30 a. m. December 27?

(b) At what hour, exactly, was the outbreak reported to Capt. Harrison and what action did he take?

(c) Why was the gunnery sergeant under arrest on December 26?

(d) Had Capt. Harrison reported that his noncommissioned officers were unreliable?

(e) Did Capt. Harrison know that liquor was being or had been sold to members of his command?

Subject: The running amuck of the Seventieth Company, Fifteenth Regiment detailed at Guayabo Dulce, Dominican Republic, on the night of December 26, 1920.

1. Returned.

- (a) No authority was required, inasmuch as he was visiting a detachment of his company.
- (b) At or about 4.30 a. m., he at once returned to Guayabo Dulce; there he found Capt. Hart, One hundred and fourteenth Company, Hato Mayor, Dominican Republic. At reveille both officers inspected the camp and the command.
- (c) Gunnery Sergt. Schmidt was awaiting result of recommendation for trial by general court-martial for drunkenness; some time prior to December 26, 1920, he again became drunk, so was placed in arrest in his tent.
- (d) No.
- (e) Capt. Harrison knew that his men obtained liquor, but had been unable to locate the vendors.

2. Capt. Harrison came to Chicharones on December 25 to have dinner at my house. It was raining and very muddy that evening, so Capt. Harrison stayed in camp that night. He stayed over on Sunday, December 26, for no particular reason. During the afternoon of December 26, Sergt. Rice, of the Chicharones detachment, shot himself through the foot while out hunting. As there was no other way of getting him to the hospital in Macoris, Capt. Harrison took my Ford car and drove in to Macoris with Sergt. Rice. It was dark when he returned to Chicharones, and as he did not like to walk through the mud in the dark he again stayed in camp. Before this date I had thought that Capt. Harrison was spending considerable time out of his camp, so I spoke to Lieut. Col. Huey and Maj. Campbell about him. They both spoke very well of him, so I made up my mind that he knew what he was doing and therefore said nothing to him.

Generally his trips to Chicharones were for part of a day only. He is a very good cabinetmaker and had spent some time repairing my household furniture. Until the events of December 26, Capt. Harrison had every reason to believe that his first sergeant was reliable. I had seen the man at Guayabo Dulce and had stated that he looked like a good "old timer," and I believe had congratulated Capt. Harrison on having an old first sergeant. It seems to me that this same sort of thing might have happened on some occasion when Capt. Harrison was absent on strictly duty status; such being the case, no officer is entirely safe in ever leaving his camp in charge of a noncommissioned officer; yet it is manifestly impracticable to have two or more officers in every camp.

2. The within correspondence indicates that Capt. Harrison had authority to go to Chicharones to make inspection of a detachment of his company, but does not indicate any necessity for his prolonged absence. Although his regimental commander had cognizance of his presence at Chicharones on December 25 and 26, neither the regimental nor battalion commander had specially authorized such an absence. The length of his absence seems to have been left to Capt. Harrison's discretion. If he had returned to Guayabo Dulce on the 26th it is probable that most of the trouble would have been avoided. It is also true that if a request had been made for authority to remain at Chicharones that such request would have been approved. It is also true that with only one officer at a post it is necessary that he leave the post in charge of the noncommissioned officer. At certain times it is necessary for the officer to be absent on patrol or other duty, leaving a noncommissioned officer in charge. In this case the results were most deplorable.

3. The offenders are all being tried by general court-martial. In the absence of other instructions from the military governor it is my intention to write a letter of reprimand to Capt. Harrison for the bad judgment and lack of interest shown by him in not returning to his command on the completion of inspection at Chicharones. It is not believed that a case for general court-martial can be made against Capt. Harrison. A letter will also be addressed to the regimental commander.

4. Attention is invited to the frequency of inspections made by the battalion commander.

5. Return of papers requested.

ject: The running amuck of the Seventieth Marine Company at Guayabo Dulce, D. R., on the evening of December 27, 1920.

erence: (a) Report of board of investigation, dated December 29, 1920; (b) commanding general's first indorsement on letter, same subject, 263-3-F, dated February 26, 1921.

. From the time the Seventieth Company joined this battalion we had considerable trouble with them. Several general courts-martial, numerous summary courts-martial, and other minor punishments were awarded.

. This company was located at four different posts, viz, Chicherrones, Guayabo Dulce, Morquecho, and Canada del Agua. The three company officers were stationed as follows: Capt. W. H. Harrison at company headquarters, Guayabo Dulce; First Lieut. E. A. Craig at Chicherrones; and Second Lieut. A. Wachler at Canada del Agua; First Lieut. L. G. De Haven of the One hundred and fourteenth Company was in command at Morquecho.

. As battalion commander, I made inspections two or three times a month. owing to the fact that I at this time had nine posts under my command, this was as often as I could cover the ground. In addition, Capt. Harrison, as company commander, inspected his posts frequently.

. No special orders were issued regarding the holiday season, as conditions at this sector at that time were excellent and the outposts have orders to patrol and watch conditions at all times. At the time that this incident took place Capt. Harrison was at Chicherrones, one of his posts, and only an hour's ride from his camp at Guayabo Dulce. To the best of my knowledge he had been absent from his station about 24 hours. An exact statement can be obtained from Capt. Harrison, who is now on duty at San Pedro de Macoris.

. Capt. Harrison is young and inexperienced, but to the best of my knowledge his attention to duty has always been excellent. Whether an older officer could have foreseen and prevented this occurrence is a question, as the duty in this battalion requires the officers to be absent from their posts frequently, and at times for several days.

1. Referred. The military governor can not understand how an act of vandalism of such magnitude as is reported to have occurred at Guayabo Dulce could have taken place and could have been perpetrated by members of the forces of occupation if proper discipline had been exercised by the commanding officer and other officers of the detachment. It is considered that the commanding officer of a detachment should be held directly responsible for such state of discipline in his detachment which permitted the perpetration of these acts of violence. It is understood that a board of investigation, held in this case, attached no culpability to the officers on duty with this detachment, and, if this be the case, it is directed that a further investigation be ordered to determine as to whether proper discipline and supervision over the troops under their command had been enforced by these officers.

FEBRUARY 24 1921

From: Military governor of Santo Domingo.

To: Commanding general Second Brigade, United States Marines.

Subject: The running amuck of the Seventieth Marine Company at Guayabo Dulce, Dominican Republic, on the evening of December 28, 1920.

Reference: (a) Report of board of investigation, dated December 29, 1920.

1. This is the worst example of absence of all discipline and of permissiveness that I have ever seen in a military force. Apparently, there was no control exercised by officers or noncommissioned officers over the Seventieth Company. The men could get all the intoxicating liquor they desired, could bring it into camp and drink it in the mess hall or in their tents without hindrance.

2. This running amuck by the Seventieth Company will do more harm to worthy Dominicans than all the good work done by the military forces in Santo Domingo.

3. It is apparent that the company commander failed to instill any discipline or esprit de corps into his men, or to demand a proper soldierly attitude, noncommissioned officers or men, or any idea of duty or obligation to the service.

4. It is the opinion of the military governor that the company commander of the Seventieth Company on this date should be brought to trial by a court-martial for grave neglect of duty, and as responsible for the conduct which permitted such a breach of discipline and outrage on the local scene to occur.

5. It is also desired to know whether inspections had been made by higher officers of the regiment in order to bring this serious condition of command to the attention of the higher officers, and whether this dangerous state of discipline was known to the senior officers.

THE CRIME AT GUAYABO DULCE.

Two days ago Messrs. Luis M. Bautista, Felix Astacio, and Thomas S. Richardson, residents of the Guayabo Dulce section, jurisdiction of Hato Mayor, were in our office and gave us a complete account of the depredations committed by a group of American soldiers stationed at said place on the property of honest laborers, including the informants.

Mr. Bautista informs us that while out with his wife soldiers arrived at his home, where there is a store, and, after drinking their fill of liquor, destroyed many things, sprinkled kerosene about, and set fire to the building, and, to prevent anyone from extinguishing it, they fired many shots.

He said also, corroborated by Messrs. Astacio and Richardson, that the same thing occurred at the homes of Israel Guzman, Felix Astacio, Francisco Hernandez, and Thomas S. Richardson. Those of Messrs. Manuel Mota, Domingo Sasso, and Sasso Santana were merely pillaged.

"We believe," said Mr. Richardson, "that this act was due to a predominant sentiment of revenge, as, in accordance with regulations of the military authorities, we refused to sell liquor to the soldiers. We do not know whether the crime will be punished as it should be, though superior officers went to inspect, but we do ask that justice be done us by those in authority or that we be paid an indemnity for the damage to the fruit of our labor as the only means of subsistence."

We ask not only that the sufferers be paid for damages sustained but that the culprits be severely punished as a guaranty to society.

STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY LIEUT. COMMANDER ARTHUR H. MAYO, (SC), U. S. NAVY.

The figures submitted by Senor Pon and incorporated into the report were taken from chapter I of executive order 357, dated November 28, 1920, budget for 1920, and from the résumé of receipts and disbursements on page 84 of the executive order. Chapter I deals with the estimated balance December 31, 1919, unappropriated; the estimated receipts; the estimated deductions for debt and other customs charges; certain sums reserved for orks in project; and a reserve fund. The resume gives the totals of the budget appropriations for the year 1920, and shows, as indicated in Senor Pou's statement, an estimated surplus of $41,830.36. All these are estimates made in 1919, published and in general circulation.

There follows below a statement of the actual receipts and disbursements for 1920. Budget appropriations were increased during the year until the total authorized appropriations for 1920 for budgetary purposes (general administration expenses) amounted to $5,343,701.11. In addition, special appropriations for the prosecution of public works were enacted.

It will be noted that the figures given by Senor Pou for actual receipts from customs and other sources are incorrect, the receipts having amounted to the figures given in the above statement which are even larger than those submitted by Senor Pou.

In arriving at the actual surplus for the year 1920, Senor Pou has merely deducted the estimated receipts from the figures given by him as actual receipts and has assumed that the difference should increase the surplus from $41,830.36 to $3,274,949.73. Senor Pou has entirely neglected the fact that 80% of all customs receipts over the amount estimated (over collections of $3,000,000, in fact) is, under the existing loan contracts, required to be devoted to additional amortization. He has also neglected the special appropriations made during 1920 for public works and the expenditures therefrom.

The statement made that the Military Government's bank accounts with the International Banking Corporation was overdrawn in the amount of $70,451.27 on December 31, 1920, is not correct. The balance in the current account, which it is assumed Senor Pou refers to, on December 31, 1920, amount: $157,102.81.

1158 INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMIN

The total balance in the International Banking Corporation on December 31, 1920, as per general ledger was $550,727.22, divided as follows:

Dominican Republic current account	$157,102.81
Fidelity fund	6,577.12
Survey fund	30,544.00
Amortization fund, 1918 loan	230,729.00
Amortization fund, coupon account	85,026.00
Liquidation Lottery Padre Billini	20,000.00
Total	$550,727.22

There was in addition the following sums on deposit to the credit of the Republic in the banks indicated, both also designated depositaries:

Banco Territorial e Agricultura de Puerto Rico	$50,000.00
American Foreign Banking Corporation	54,000.00

Under authority of the State Department dated January 28, 1921, the issuance of certificates of indebtedness to a total of $1,200,000 was authorized. These were to be repaid from bond issue if such bond issue had been floated prior to their maturity. A total of $800,000 of certificates were negotiated through the International Banking Corporation and paid on June 30, 1921, for the proceeds of the $2,500,000 loan of June 1, 1921.

The statement that there existed on December 31, 1920, a debit balance of Messrs. W. R. Grace & Co., of New York, purchasing agents of the Government is correct. This debit balance amounted to $689,554.25 and covered supplies and equipment for the prosecution of public works and other activities of the Government.

Executive order No. 88, creating the fidelity fund, provided that the money could be invested in such loans as the executive authority might approve. With the authority of the military governor the sum of $85,000 from this fund was loaned to the Dominican Central Railroad at an interest rate of 4 per cent which has since been repaid with interest.

The $2,500,000 loan was sold to the Equitable Trust Co. of New York by Speyer & Co. at a discount of 3 1/4 per cent. A statement of the proceeds is as follows:

Face of loan	$2,500,000.00
Discount	72,500.00
Total	$2,427,500.00

The proceeds, $2,427,500, were paid to the International Banking Corporation in New York by the bond purchasers for the account of the Dominican Republic. Acting under the instructions of Lieut. Commander Arthur H. Mayo of the United States Navy, the officer then administering the affairs of the Department of state of finance and commerce, the International Banking Corporation disposed of this sum as follows:

Paid to International Banking Corporation to liquidate $800,000 face value certificates of indebtedness plus accrued interest	$816,333.00
Paid to W. R. Grace & Co. in liquidation of account	724,992.00
Transferred to treasurer of the Republic in Santo Domingo	886,173.00
Total	$2,427,500.00

The sums disbursed for expenditure for public works from the date the loan was requested, November 28, 1920, to the present time have amounted to $2,237,796.97.

No change has been made in method of administration of the railroad management of which is in the hands of a general manager under contract with the military government. Regular reports of operations have been furnished by the railroad to the department of state of fomento and communications and accounts have been duly submitted to the auditor of the Republic each month. No income has been realized by the railroad since July, 1920, due to the fact that large sums have been devoted to upkeep and betterment and to the further fact that present economic conditions have reduced the freight carried by the railroad.

Abraham Khoury was shot and wounded in the left arm on November 19, 1919, in San Pedro de Macoris, during a disorder between marines and men.

the Guardia Nacional Dominicana. The investigation indicated that the shot had been fired by an enlisted man of the Guardia Nacional Dominicana tended for a marine. Settlement was made by the payment of $1,500, which was charged to the appropriation under article 8 for unprovided expenses of the executive power.

There is attached hereto a signed statement of the International Banking Corporation, dated January 15, 1921, giving the treasurer the status of the deposit accounts of the Dominican Government with that bank as of December 31, 1920. A statement showing the reconciliation between the bank's statement and the books of the Government is also attached hereto. In explanation, it may be stated that the books of the Government and those of the bank are hardly likely to agree upon any particular date, due to the fact that checks drawn may be outstanding or sums may be in transit for deposit. It should be noted that the Government, for statistical purposes and for its immediate information, divides its current funds into a number of subheads. For the purpose of furnishing early information to the officials of the treasury department, a daily statement is prepared showing this division into subheads, and it is apparently from such a statement that Señor Pou took his information, it was insufficiently acquainted with the accounts of the Government to properly interpret the said statement. There is given below the status of the account as of December 31, 1920, as taken from the general ledger:

Dominican Republic current account. International Banking Corporation	$157, 102. 81
Deposit with Banco Territorial de Puerto Rico	50, 000. 00
Deposit with American Foreign Banking Corporation	54, 000. 00
Fidelity fund	6, 571. 83
Survey fund, deposit account	39, 544. 75
Survey fund, invoice account	72, 481. 00
Loans to municipalities	74, 925. 00
Mortization fund, 1918 bonds	239, 799. 89
Mortization fund, coupon account, 1918 bonds	87, 698. 91
Liquidation Lottery Padre Billini	20, 009. 89
Dominican Central Railroad loan	85, 000. 00
General suspense account	2, 194, 892. 58
Guardia Nacional Dominicana	345, 746. 58
Total	3, 427, 772. 38

The figures given in the schedule attached to Señor Pou's statement as to customs and internal-revenue collections are incorrect. The actual customs receipts were $6,298,798.87. Receipts from other sources amounted to $4,244,526.56.

Respectfully submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. We will stand adjourned until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning (Whereupon, at 3.35 p. m., the committee adjourned until 9 a. m., Thursday, December 15, 1921.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Santo Domingo City.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

Present: Senators McCormick and Oddie. Also present: Messrs. Howe, Knowles, and Angell.

Senator McCormick. Mr. Knowles, in order that we may dispose of our time to the best advantage, let me say that I am advised that the committee has an engagement to receive certain business men at 10 o'clock; that at 11 o'clock it has an engagement with the archbishop. It will probably rise this afternoon, or a little after noon, not to sit again. Let me ask you if your remaining witnesses fall into categories—classifications?

Mr. Knowles. They do.

Senator McCormick. What classifications—general in their terms?

Mr. Knowles. The witnesses that we have on this list include Fabio Fiallo, newspaper man—Senator McCormick. Let us dispense with the names.

Mr. Knowles. As to subjects?

Senator McCormick. Yes.

Mr. Knowles. Relate to the manner in which the censorship was enforced in the country as the reason why natives did not make complaints to military leaders. Instructions from military officers to the native bookkeepers to pass certain accounts of military officers without demanding proof or vouchers of account, which is contrary to the constitution and law of the country.

Imprisonment of members of the Dominican Congress, and efforts made by the representatives of the United States Government to effect the election of a certain man for President.

Attempts made by the representatives of the United States Government to prevent revolution in the country.

Denial by a man specifically charged with certain acts alleged as the basis of the cause of the American intervention and occupation.

Acts of cruelties and atrocities committed in other sections than those already testified to.

Proof of discrimination between Americans and Dominicans in the matter of salary for the same class of work and positions.

Violation of the civil-service law recognized by the military government, and the refusal of the military governor to receive complaint as to such violation.

The testimony of the President de jure of the Dominican Republic, Dr. Enriquez y Carvajal, as to pressure brought upon him as President of the country to accept a certain plan of the United States that had been rejected by the previous Dominican administration, and the consequent orders that came and resulted in the overthrow of the Dominican Government.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, at this point, since I have been asked what testimony we have to produce, that we have testimony to produce of the violation of certain laws of the country in respect to the exportation of the money of the country; certain information and demands for information respecting the purchase of sugar by the military government.

Senator McCormick. Well, now, Mr. Knowles, there are 12 items. How many days, in your judgment, would it take to hear, not all the witnesses it is possible to do that in that as far as in your judgment it would be better to do that than to do that.

MR. KNOWLES. I should say that if the committee should sit as I have said the committee would sit in the capital, much of that testimony would be produced.

SENATOR McCORMICK. That is not a direct answer to my question. I am asking you to do it to-day or to-morrow.

MR. KNOWLES. But it was announced that it was leaving on the 19th inst. in the future here.

SENATOR McCORMICK. That is to say if it would sit two more days would it not sit in the future in two days?

MR. KNOWLES. We could produce testimony on every one of those.

SENATOR McCORMICK. Well, I mean would you be satisfied, would you say that had been covered in two days' session?

MR. KNOWLES. I would not like to say, Mr. Chairman, that we were able to produce testimony, that as the committee is to sit in judgment upon the testimony produced—if we have five witnesses on a certain point have time to produce only one, that we ought to be asked to be satisfied that.

SENATOR McCORMICK. I have not asked you to be satisfied with anything.

MR. KNOWLES. Oh, I thought you did.

SENATOR McCORMICK. No. I have not asked you to do anything. I am asking to discover what might be done to meet your views.

MR. KNOWLES. Well, I can not tell you how much I would appreciate additional two days.

SENATOR McCORMICK. Well, Mr. Knowles, of course, the committee was adjourned one day at the beginning, at your request.

MR. KNOWLES. You can charge that day to my account.

SENATOR McCORMICK. Subsequent days have been occupied with two very largely with one; the circumstances environing the landing of troops prevalent to the issuance of the proclamation.

MR. KNOWLES. And I am sure the chairman will admit it is a most important topic.

SENATOR McCORMICK. Well, the chairman neither alleges nor admits anything. If it is important, that is for you to determine. Wherein lies its importance at the expense of these other subjects?

MR. KNOWLES. Because, Mr. Chairman, if it proves to be a fact that the occupation was unwarranted—and we can not prove that fact by the atrocities, we could not prove that fact by proving violations of the laws of the occupation occurred—we could not prove that fact by any of the hundred witnesses as to the outrages, the homes that were burned, and those things, because they don't bear upon the question as to the right function of the original occupation that brought those here in this territory who subsequently committed or are alleged to have committed these things; that the great question involved, as I understand, in this investigation of the rights of this matter is as to whether the United States had by law, or by anything else that it can put forward in justification of it, the right to send troops upon this territory and occupy this land.

I might say that I would be almost willing to stand upon that alone—the testimony that might be produced would go exclusively at this stage to the United States Senate to determine that one vital point. When I say I am termining—and if it is determined affirmatively for the United States Senate might be the United States can doubt or question the right of the nation to produce any kind of testimony as to what has been committed or the actions under that occupation, but if—

SENATOR McCORMICK. You mean to be determined by a committee of the United States Senate?

MR. KNOWLES. Yes; as to its action. As to what resolution it will be bearing upon the subject. Because I think that it is not only the purpose of this committee to receive and hear and judge of such testimony will make that testimony the basis of some kind of report and recommendation to the United States Senate.

SENATOR McCORMICK. Now, let me suggest, Mr. Knowles, that outside the record, the subject which appears to preoccupy many minds is the terminating the occupation, quite as much as that of the original landing and issuance of a proclamation. Personally—I don't want to argue at this time and until I have considered the whole problem—the initial landing the issuance of the proclamation, and the question to which you advert, there are two sides to occupancy of this character. I do not want to attribute to the counsel a purpose which he has not declared, and I make that very clear, that if it were his purpose to raise the issue of trespass and damage, for example—if there were a claim lying against the United States by reason of the occupation, there would also occur to anyone considering the matter the study of precedents in such cases, under which the occupied country has paid not only for the civil administration under the military occupation, but the entire cost of the military occupation, as counsel probably knows. But I had in mind that the preoccupation which I find as I go about is with the termination of the occupation.

So far as I have followed the hearings, none of the witnesses—and I say in no critical spirit—has spontaneously proposed a plan and the successive steps necessary to be taken, in the light of the administrative problem or the fiscal problem or the financial problem. And if this ground is to be covered at the rate at which we have gone, I should say not two days but two weeks would be necessary to hear the witnesses.

Does counsel care to make at this time the suggestion as to which he and I made some reference personally a little while ago, regarding the hearing of witnesses at a later date, or in another manner?

MR. KNOWLES. I would be very glad indeed to conform my plans to any that will be agreeable to the committee that will give the witnesses an opportunity to appear before the commission, or any representative, to be heard—I won't say committee.

Senator McCORMICK. As the counsel knows, it is not a matter of what is agreeable to the committee. The committee or the members of the committee have other responsibilities, and at some sacrifice to each individual member of the committee and some sacrifice of other responsibilities, has come voluntarily to assume the burden, voluntarily to hold hearings on the spot. I do not want any misconception to be put upon the committee's efforts in this matter.

Upon the assumption that the committee will not sit after midday or later today, what suggestion has counsel to make, in view of the fact that between 10, 10 or a little after, and 11.30 the committee will have to suspend these hearings?

MR. KNOWLES. I will see if I can suggest some practical plan, but as I see that the chairman has stated is going into the record, I want to touch on two points. First, as to why nothing has been yet suggested referring to the plan of evacuation. Unless I am mistaken as to the purport of the resolution of the United States Senate—which I regret that I have not at my hand—that resolution authorizing the appointment of this committee, with its instructions as to the investigation, related to two subjects, the first—and as it would appear the Senate seemed to consider most important—was the occupation of Dominican territory by the United States.

Senator McCORMICK. Well. I want to distinguish between occupancy (which I consider both coterminous and contemporaneous with administration) and the entrance of armed forces within the territory of the Republic.

MR. KNOWLES. But as I am addressing myself, Mr. Senator, to the resolution as it was passed, I can only take the wording of that resolution and say that the Senate evidently intended that there was a distinction between occupation and administration; otherwise it would not be the usual way of the United States Senate of expressing itself by vote of the Senate on a resolution.

As to the second point for the investigation, it was administration. Now, I suggest that neither of those two words by the greatest stretch of the meaning of either can include suggestions as to in what way there shall be an evacuation.

As to the other point the distinguished chairman made, that precedent exists that should it be found after careful and serious consideration of this question by the United States Government and people that there has been—and it is established that in effect the United States Government is a trespasser in this country—that there are precedents in far away China and in dark Africa that placed the cost of the unjust occupation upon the natives, I believe the time has come and will be so declared by the United States when that precedent shall no longer prevail where there has been wrongful occupation.

Senator McCORMICK. At this stage of the game I venture that we have not decided that the occupation is unjust.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; I say "if" and I presume the Senator had "if" in mind in the comment that he made, so I am addressing myself only to the if of the proposition, that if it is proven and if the United States does decide—as I believe it will—that this occupation was unjust and illegal, never can I believe nor do I believe the Senator will favor that any act of wrong committed in this country without the consent of the Dominican people will be charged on single dollar against the natives of this country.

Senator McCORMICK. That is a statement of one side of the question.

Mr. KNOWLES. How far I understood the Senator correctly—

Senator McCORMICK. The Senator has not suggested that in those instances or in any particular instance where the revenues of the occupied territory defrayed the cost of the occupation an injustice was done the inhabitants of the countries.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, that I may know if I understand the Senator's point aright—

Senator McCORMICK. The Senator made no suggestions and passed no judgment as to the justice or injustice done in the cases to which he alluded as precedents. Counsel did otherwise, if he will permit me to say so.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I am speaking as to the justice of the application of the precedent—I think you used the words—

Senator McCORMICK. I thought that counsel spoke not as to the justice of the application of the precedent, but to the justice of the course of the occupation power in the cases. I misunderstood you.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; Mr. Chairman, I addressed myself solely to the justice of these precedents mentioned by the Senator.

Senator McCORMICK. Mr. Knowles, before the committee arises, and in view of the number of topics and the probable number of witnesses, after consulting with my colleagues, I wonder if you would not take time now to estimate as carefully as may be the number of witnesses actually necessary to cover the ground—the number of persons?

Mr. KNOWLES. I will, Senator.

Senator McCORMICK. And the number of days.

(The Chambers of Commerce of the city of Santo Domingo and St. Pedro Macoris appeared before the committee, represented by the following gentlemen: Mr. P. A. Ricart, Mr. Jesus Cobian, Mr. C. M. Gueira, Mr. J. Ismael Perez, and Mr. A. R. Nanita.)

The CHAIRMAN. Will you sit down, gentlemen? You are very welcome. I am some member of the chamber to act as its spokesman?

Mr. RICART. The Chamber of Commerce of Industry and Agriculture of Santo Domingo, before treating of the business which has brought about the present interview, desires to take advantage of this opportunity to bring forth before the honorable Senators of the United States the following declarations:

The chambers of commerce unite in this protest of the Dominican people in respect to the occupation of the territory of the Republic by North American troops, and it is sincerely and honestly felt by all the members and by all the Dominican people that there should be expressed to the honorable committee of Senators the strong hope that soon there will be returned to the Dominican people the enjoyment of their attributes and rights of a free republic, absolutely independent and absolutely sovereign.

Our mission to the Senators is to try to obtain for our country the same advantages which others enjoy with the great American Nation. It is practically proved that our import duties are a protector of American industry and American products, and it appears to be just that this country obtain as compensation, some reciprocity, tending to help our producers, who at the present abnormal time, brought about by the temporary crisis which is world wide, we have not been able to justify. We would not be justified unless we made some effort that our impoverished farmers obtain some help that would help to stimulate those who are dedicating the best part of their lives to making the land produce the fruits which nourish and sustain us.

Every government of the world protects agriculture with wise laws, its commerce, its industries, and everyone who struggles to obtain not only his own personal welfare but also the aggrandizement of his country. There is no occasion more propitious than the present one to suggest to you the necessary on the part of the American people to have our tobacco and sugar enjoy the same advantages as those enjoyed by our neighbor, Cuba. We permit ourselves to place in your hands an exposition carefully drawn up concerning what I have just stated, which we respectfully commend to you.

is an opportunity to reiterate that all you can possibly do for the restoration of our sovereignty, to which we have an indisputable right and of which we have been unjustly despoiled, for the welfare of our beloved Republic, and will be a debt of gratitude which the Dominican people will ever owe to the American Nation and its worthy representatives.

Mr. President, Mr. McCormick. Mr. President, it is within the confines of the chairman's committee at this time to answer you only informally and personally, and, of course, the committee as a whole has not had time to consider your proposition, and because, furthermore, the negotiation of commercial treaties is upon the initiative of the President. But I am at liberty to voice my personal opinion and that of my colleague who is with me here. We believe the principle that what you propose regarding the admission of Dominican products to the American market is absolutely just. As the chamber of commerce knows, all of the countries which border upon the Caribbean Sea are suffering greatly by reason of the diminution of their exports and of the fall in price of those exports. In a relative sense I believe that Cuba has suffered deeper and more drastic crisis than that which you have suffered in Santo Domingo. She is seeking financial assistance in New York to-day. Doubtless, members of the chamber have heard, in the neighboring country of Haiti, that it has almost been consumed under very advantageous terms. Scarcely a day passes when to New York or to Washington there do not come the entreaties of some European or South American country, either officials or bankers, seeking assistance.

I am sure that my colleagues, like myself, will charge themselves with an interest in the encouragement of your agriculture and the relief of the financial crisis in the Dominican Republic, in so far as it may be relieved, in so far as they are able by their advice and influence to relieve it.

I thank you very cordially for coming to-day, and in the same spirit and in the in which we offer our cooperation we bespeak yours in the solution of every difficult and complex financial problem.

Mr. RICHART. The chamber of commerce joins me in thanking you cordially. The data referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

SANTO DOMINGO, December 8, 1921.

Members of the United State Senate in charge of the investigation of Dominican-American affairs, Santo Domingo city.

HONORABLE SIRS: The executive of the Dominican Confederation of Labor, which institution we have the honor to be members, respectfully has the honor to report: That from the moment Santo Domingo was occupied by the United States forces this federation has protested, and continues to protest, against this act of force, our understanding being that there is no legal authority which has been obtained by usurpation.

It is the firm belief of the Dominican laborer that under such conditions of oppression as those to which he has now been reduced against his will, with no possibility of putting into effect methods for the betterment of his situation, no government of the people nor for the people which would encourage the passage of beneficial laws, existence is impossible, and the American military occupation constitutes the death of our desires, progress, the welfare of our citizens, and their protection.

The Dominican laborer, through regular representatives, has made declarations to the same military government under whose control we now are, to the government at Washington, and, finally, to the third congress of the Mexican Federation of Labor, which took place not long ago in Mexico City, and there were gathered together labor representatives from all of the countries of the South American Continent, but without result.

It has been demonstrated and duly proved that the Dominican Republic has failed to comply with the obligations which were imposed upon it by article 3 of the third clause of the Dominican-American treaty, nor has it in any isolated any other clause; that therefore there does not exist any real, or apparent, reason for military occupation, and for a government which is absolutely no benefit to the citizens, and which shows no respect for the rights of the small countries which form part of the American Continent; also taking into consideration that the State Department at Washington declared that the military occupation did not take place because the Dominican government violated clause 3 of the Dominican-American treaty, but because of the political necessity which existed at the time, due to the great war, the Dominican Confederation of Labor therefore hopes that you will be able to find the real national sentiment of the Dominican people who have been invaded and unjustly governed by American military forces, and that you will inform the honorable Senate of your country, which is the most powerful of the Americas, and of which you have the honor to be citizens, that the claims and demands of the Dominican Republic are just, and that the American military forces should be removed at once, and that the Republic should be restored to the free enjoyment of her liberty, which will be a service on your part in the cause of liberty and justice.

Very respectfully,

_____, Presidente

SANTO DOMINGO, R. D., Diciembre 8 de 1921.

Señores Miembros del Senado de los Estados Unidos del Norte Americano y la Comision investigadora del Caso Dominicano, Americano, Ciudad.

DISTINGUISHED CABALLEROS: El Comité Ejecutivo de la Confederación Dominicana del Trabajo que tenemos la honra de integrar, tiene la ocasión de exponerles, muy respetuosamente, que desde el instante mismo que se realizó la Intervención Militar en Santo Domingo por tropas del Ejército de los Estados Unidos de Norte América ha protestado i sigue protestando de todo acto emanado de esa autoridad que por la fuerza nos oprime, por que entiende que esa autoridad usurpada es ilegítima.

Es criterio firme del Obrero Dominicano que dentro de una atmosfera de esclavitud como a la que lo tienen sometido contra su voluntad, sin las garantías suficientes para poner libremente, en practica los anhelos de mejoramiento que tiene derecho a aspirar, sin un Gobierno del Pueblo i para el Pueblo, propenda a la creación de Leyes beneficiosas, no puede vivir, que la Intervención ha sido i es funesta para la consecución de esos legítimos fines, para el progreso del País, para la vida de los ciudadanos, i para el Tesoro de sus Arcas.

El Obrero Dominicano por medio de sus Representantes naturales ha presentado exposición al propio Gobierno Militar que lo sojuzga, al Gobierno de Washington, i por último, al tercer Congreso de la American Federation of Labor, tuvo verificativo en la ciudad de Mexico ultimamente, donde concurrieron representantes obreros de las Repúblicas Sur Americanas que pueblan el Continente, sin que el clamor de la Justicia que demandó fuese satisfecho.

Nuestros Obreros piden día a día en un ardiente grito de su amor a la independencia, el abandono inmediato de su territorio por las tropas del Estadunidense, su libre determinación sin perjuicio de cualquiera otra reclamación a que tiene derecho, por los daños morales i materiales que le han sido causados por orden del Gobierno de Washington.

Está demostrado i probado evidentemente que la República Dominicana jamás ha faltado a los compromisos contraídos en la cláusula tercera del Convenio Dominicano-Americano, ni ha violado ninguna otra cláusula, que habiendo motivos ni aparentes ni reales para ser ocupada militarmente, ni que permanezcan aún en toda su magnitud gobernándola sin provecho alguno para el respeto a la libertad a los Pueblos debiles que forman el Continente Americano, i despues de haber sido declarado por el Departamento de Estado de Washington, posteriormente que la ocupacion militar se verificaba no por voluntad de parte del Gobierno Dominicano a la precitada cláusula, sino por necesidad política del momento, toda vez que iban a tomar parte en la guerra mundial que se desarrollaba en aquel entonces, mucho menos.

Por tanto, la Confederación Dominicana del Trabajo espera que ustedes seréis intérprete fieles del sentimiento nacional del Pueblo Dominicano, mas i gobernado injustamente por tropas del Ejército de los Estados Unidos de Norte América, é informareis al Honorable Senado de la Nación mas poderosa de América de la cual sois dignos ciudadanos, que la República Dominicana tiene razon en sus quejas i demanda i que debe de ser desalojada inmediatamente por las tropas del Ejército Americano i devuelta al goce de su libre determinación, por lo que hareis un servicio a la libertad i a la justicia.

Muy respetuosamente,

L. M. PONCERRATE,

SANTO DOMINGO, Diciembre 15 de 1921.

l Honorable Comisión de Senadores de los Estados Unidos de América en into Domingo, Palacio.

HONORABLES SEÑORES: La Cámara de Comercio de Santo Domingo y la de Pedro de Macoris desean aprovechar la oportunidad que les ofrece la ta oficial a este país de la Comisión investigadora nombrada por el Senado os Estados Unidos, para someterle, respetuosamente, el presente Memorán- i. relativo a las mutuos ventajas que derivarian los Estados Unidos y la ública Dominicana, si llegaran a celebrar un tratado de Reciprocidad ercial.

os lazos comerciales entre los Estados Unidos y la República Dominicana tan íntimos, en razón de su situación geográfica y de las relaciones polítics desde hace muchos años existen entre ambos países, que no parece necesario licar, prolijamente, en que se fundan dichas ventajas.

relativamente, la pequeña República Dominicana es el mejor cliente de los ndos Unidos y los Estados Unidos el mejor cliente de nuestro país. La lencia natural de la corriente del comercio en ambas naciones ha ido mándose y acentuándose en ese recíproco intercambio de productos, con lusión de casi toda otra nación, de tal modo, que puede decirse que la tidad de artículos que actualmente nosotros compramos o vendemos a otro s que no sea los Estados Unidos, es relativamente insignificante en comación con nuestro volumen de negocio con Norte América. Los siguientes os estadísticos, tomados de fuente oficial, lo prueban elocuentemente:

Sin embargo, es preciso admitir que la Guerra Mundial, obligando a las ciones de Europa a desatender su comercio antillano o imposibilitando las concurrir a nuestro mercado, ha favorecido grandemente esa tendencia tural determinada por la proximidad geográfica.

No sería pues, extraño, que la vuelta a la normalidad de aquellas naciones npobrecidas o aniquiladas por la guerra, las indujera nuevamente a buscar parte de nuestro comercio que anteriormente le correspondía y aun a tratar e obtener una parte mayor. No obstante que reconocemos la conveniencia e en el sentido de abaratar el costo de los artículos importados, trae consigo na concurrencia de otros competidores, es nuestra firme creencia que si la épública Dominicana i los Estados Unidos pudi eran celebrar un tratado en irtud del cual se aseguraran permanentemente o por largo período, las recí- rocas ventajas de poder consumir a menor precio los productos de cada uno, mbos países saldrían gananciosos.

De nuestros principales productos de exportación, solo el cacao y el café ntran libres en los Estados Unidos por estar exonerados de derechos; pero el azúcar, que actualmente paga el derecho prohibitivo de 2 cts. por tiene que concurrir en condiciones muy desfavorable a ese mercado. tabaco dominicano no pueda ser exportado a los Estados Unidos, a causa los derechos exorbitantes con que está gravada su introducción.

Es preciso hacer resaltar la condición desventajosa en que se encuentra el azúcar dominicano. Las antillas inglesas, por virtud de arreglos hechos con el Canada, gozan alif de una Tarifa preferencial que las asegura la exclusividad de aquel mercado; el azúcar cubano tiene, en virtud del Tratado de Reciprocidad Comercial celebrado con los Estados Unidos un descuento un 20% sobre los derechos de aduana, y desde luego, los productos de Puerto Rico, por ser parte del territorio americano, entran a los Estados Unidos de toda exención aduanera. Esta situación, decididamente desfavorable, venido a empeorarse con la promulgación de la reforma de la Tarifa aduanera estadounidense conocida bajo el nombre de Emergency Tariff Act. Cuyas disposiciones esenciales se trata de establecer de modo permanente con la proyectada Tarifa Fordney, aprobada por la Cámara de Representantes americana.

Es indudable que la Tarifa de Emergencia y la proyectada Tarifa Fordney por el Representante Fordney, actualmente ante el Senado americano, gravan con un derecho de importación de 2 cts. el azúcar, conlleva la completa ruina de esa industria en nuestro país y el empobrecimiento de toda la región del Este de la República.

Los grandes capitales, en su mayor parte americanos, invertidos en la explotación del azúcar de caña, dependen esencialmente de la exportación a los Estados Unidos para dar salida a su producto, como lo comprueban los siguientes datos oficiales:

Total exportado.	Año.	Valor.	Exportación
92,908 toneladas.....	1910	$5,590,539
85,630 toneladas.....	1911	4,159,733
88,775 toneladas.....	1912	5,841,357
78,849 toneladas.....	1913	3,850,555
101,428 toneladas.....	1914	4,943,452
102,800 toneladas.....	1915	7,671,393
122,624 toneladas.....	1916	12,028,297
131,498 toneladas.....	1917	13,388,466
120,032 toneladas.....	1918	11,981,399
162,321 toneladas.....	1919	20,697,761
158,803 toneladas.....	1920	45,705,630

Ahora bien, es nuestra creencia que está en interés del Gobierno y de los americanos que se conserve intacto y que aumente cada día nuestra capacidad adquisitiva y nuestra capacidad de producción. Si, desgraciadamente, la Tarifa Fordney se llegara a convertir en ley, sin que al mismo tiempo los Estados Unidos concedieran a la República Dominicana rebajas especiales, virtud de un Tratado de Reciprocidad Comercial, similar al que celebraron la República de Cuba en 1902, y que tanta influencia ha ejercido en el desarrollo de la riqueza y del progreso de aquella isla, el poder adquisitivo de la República Dominicana disminuirá grandemente y no podrá ser en los años, tan buen cliente de los Estados Unidos como hasta la fecha ha sido.

Creemos que una de las razones que deberían influir en el ánimo de los Senadores para inclinarse en favor del Tratado que sufrimos, es el hecho de que la República Dominicana, quien por virtud de los términos del Tratado de 1907, perdió su derecho de legislar soberanamente sobre las tarifas aduaneras, puesto que toda reforma a la tarifa de importación y exportación debe ser previamente aprobada por el Presidente de los Estados Unidos, que pueda ponerse en vigor, se encuentra incapacitada para celebrar un Tratado de reciprocidad comercial, que le aseguren un mercado a sus productos en otra nación que no sea los Estados Unidos. Esto quiere decir que si los Estados Unidos rehusaran concedernos las franquicias y facilidades de comercio que consideramos necesarias para mejorar el comercio entre los dos países, que a título de reciprocidad, les pedimos, la República Dominicana encontrará prácticamente inpotente, aislada y desvalida, desde el punto de vista comercial, en uno de los períodos mas críticos y desfavorables de su historia.—

Es nuestra creencia que en vista de las responsabilidades morales y políticas y voluntariamente han asumido en nuestro país los Estados Unidos, teniendo cuenta la proximidad geográfica de ambos países y las cordiales relaciones políticas que deben siempre existir entre dos naciones soberanas que tienen intereses comerciales comunes y recíprocos, y de la situación excepcional en que se mantiene, en lo que se refiere a legislación aduanera, la Convención—Dominico-Americana, el Ejecutivo y el Senado de los Estados Unidos debieran ojer favorablemente la celebración de un Tratado con la República Dominicana que pusiera los productos de nuestro suelo y nuestra industria en las mismas condiciones que los de Cuba.—

La actual Ley sobre Aranceles de Importación y Exportación, puesta en vigor el 1.º de Enero de 1920, admite libres de derechos innumerables artículos que son producto del suelo y de la industria estadounidense, lo cual, aunque sin establecer un derecho expreso de preferencia, prácticamente, pone a los Estados Unidos en una condición muy ventajosa en nuestro mercado, en razón de las facilidades comerciales de que ella goza por la proximidad geográfica y la mayor frecuencia de la comunicación con nuestra isla. Así tenemos que muchas de las ventajas adquiridas por los Estados Unidos en su Tratado con la República de Cuba, obteniendo la reducción de derechos aduaneros sobre artículos producidos y fabricados en los Estados Unidos, tales como hierro, hierro fundido, hierro forjado, hierro fundido maleable, acero y manufacturas, maquinarias, barcos, vehículos, cemento romano, carbón de piedra, aceites minerales, alfileres, herramientas e instrumentos para la agricultura y arte y oficios, están sus aleaciones, quinina en cualquier forma, euquinina, preparados de aceites de higados de bacalao, sueros terapéuticos, pulpas de papel y algunas de sus manufacturas, pipas, toneles, correas de transmisión, balanzas romanas, pieles, animales y legumbres frescos, leche condensada análogas, caucho y algunas de sus manufacturas, pizarras, piedras de amolar, esmeril, abastos, filtros, creocota y otros artículos mas, ya las tiene obtenidas aquí, después de la reforma cancelaria realizada bajo la dirección del Gobierno Militar, puesto que esos artículos entran absolutamente libres en este país desde 1920.—

En nuestra opinión un Tratado de Reciprocidad Comercial entre los Estados Unidos y la República Dominicana debiera comprender, de parte de la República Dominicana:

- (a) Abolición de los derechos de puertos.
- (b) Reducción de un 10 a un 20% sobre los derechos de importación de artículos que sean productos del suelo o de la industria de los Estados Unidos.
- (c) Que los productos del suelo y de la industria de los Estados Unidos que actualmente entran libres de derechos en la República Dominicana, continúen siendo admitidos libres de derechos.
- (d) Abolición de los derechos de exportación sobre productos dominicanos.

DE PARTE DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS.

(a) Admisión del azúcar, tabaco, cigarros, cigarrillos, miel de abejas, cera, semillas de Higuera y otros artículos de exportación que sean productos del suelo y de la industria de la República Dominicana, en términos iguales a los acordados a la República de Cuba.

(b) Que los productos dominicanos que actualmente entran libres de derecho en los Estados Unidos, sigan gozando de esa misma exención.

Los lazos de fraternidad histórica y las íntimas y cordiales relaciones existentes entre la República Dominicana y la hermana República de Cuba, nos hacen presumir que este país amigo, lejos de poner obstáculo en el camino de un Tratado como el que sugerimos a la Hon. Comisión del Senado de los Estados Unidos, lo verá con beneplácito, y que si, según ella misma ha solicitado al Gobierno americano, se modifica el Tratado de Reciprocidad celebrado con ellos en 1902, creemos que no pondrán inconveniente en que la cláusula VII de ese tratado sea redactada de manera que permita el cumplimiento de las aspiraciones de la República Dominicana.

La situación económica que actualmente atraviesa la República Dominicana a causa de la crisis mundial es tan grave y desesperada, que la aceptación por parte de los Estados Unidos de un Tratado de Reciprocidad Comercial como el que sugerimos, o en su defecto, la adopción de ciertas medidas que permitan la introducción de nuestros productos al mercado de los Estados Unidos en las condiciones señaladas, sería tan oportuno en estos momentos conflictivos, no dudamos que tal acción sería recibida con beneplácito y gratitud por el pueblo dominicano.

De Vds. con la mayor consideración y respecto, nos suscribimos,

DECLARATION.

La Cámara de Comercio, Industria y Agricultura de Santo Domingo antes de tratar el asunto que ha motivado la presente entrevista, desea aprovechar esta oportunidad para hacer constar por el órgano ante la Comisión de Honorables Senadores de los Estados Unidos, la declaración siguiente:

La Cámara une su protesta, a la protesta del pueblo dominicano respecto a la ocupación del territorio de la República por las tropas Norte Americanas, e interpretando fielmente el sentir unánime constante de sus miembros y de todo el pueblo dominicano, expresa a la Honorable Comisión de Senadores su vehemente esperanza de que pronto sea devuelto, el pueblo dominicano, al goce de sus atribuidos derechos como República libre, absolutamente independiente y absolutamente soberana.

Senator McCORMICK. Mr. Knowles, if you have had an opportunity for conference during this interval, perhaps you may be able to advise the committee as to the number of witnesses whom you wish to present and the time which would be consumed in their testimony. If the committee finds it necessary to hear them, not in Santo Domingo, but in Washington, as I think probably will be the case.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have, Mr. Senator, gone over the list of the witnesses which have been submitted to me up to the present time, and I believe that the matters that are either pending or have not yet been taken up, can be covered by not exceeding 15 of these witnesses. As to the time, I hardly think it will be necessary to suggest any particular time. If these hearings are taken up, the commission can rely on my pushing them along just as fast as possible. I should say within 10 days, possibly within 18 days, all of these 15 witnesses could be heard, if the committee could sit, as you suggested, practically continuously until we had reached the end of them.

Senator McCORMICK. I will try before we leave to-night to suggest the date of the resumption of the hearing in Washington.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will endeavor to conform to whatever plan may be agreed upon to have the witnesses there at the earliest possible moment, even as early as the next steamer that leaves the Republic for the States, which exact time I will let you know a few minutes later.

Senator McCORMICK. Then, Mr. Knowles, in view of the fact that the members of the committee here and the others have an engagement, made through the good offices of the archbishop to meet at the Cathedral at 11 o'clock, with your permission we will proceed to the Cathedral and return here as soon as possible to resume the hearings at, say 11.30.

(Whereupon the committee took a recess until 11.30 a. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met pursuant to recess at 12 noon.
 Present: Senator McCormick, Oddie, and Pomerene. Also present: Mr. Knowles, Mr. Howe, and Mr. Angell.

STATEMENT OF MR. DOROTEO R. REGOLADO, SALCEDO.

MR. KNOWLES. What is your name?
 MR. REGOLADO. Doroteo R. Regolado.
 MR. KNOWLES. Where do you reside?
 MR. REGOLADO. In Salcedo.
 MR. KNOWLES. Where were you born?
 MR. REGOLADO. In Salcedo.
 MR. KNOWLES. Have you always lived in that city or this country?
 MR. REGOLADO. Yes.
 MR. KNOWLES. Will you state, for the information of the commission, any offense or any happenings to you during the military occupation, stating only which actually occurred to you or that you saw?
 MR. REGOLADO. What happened to me and what I witnessed: The Confederation of Labor appointed me to give some lectures to workmen, to let the work-classes know the national purposes and to avoid at the present time strikes which might bring about disunion between the workmen and the capitalists, especially as the Republic is occupied at the present time, and disunion between workmen and the capitalists must bring about diversions in the union, which is needed between all Dominicans to protest against the North American military occupation. I made a tour of the Republic with that propaganda of national unification until I reached the town of Barona, where I gave my lecture. The following day I was denounced by employees of the military government for inciting the masses against the military government. The provost marshal of that town—
 Senator McCormick (interposing). The date?
 MR. REGOLADO. The 3d of November, 1920.
 Senator McCormick. What were the names of those who denounced you?
 MR. REGOLADO. Mr. Manuel del Toro Peralte and a man whose surname is Hernandez, both Porto Ricans. The provost marshal summoned me before him and gave me 48 hours to leave the town. I asked him in writing to expel me from the city, which he refused to do in writing. When the 48 hours were up I was in prison. I was kept in camp three days and was brought in a marine chaser to this city. I was placed in the prison here on the 9th of November, 1920. A month after I was tried on the charge of having incited the masses to rebellion. In spite of the fact that high assistants or persons present at the lecture came and denied the accusation or denied the charges brought against me, the provost court sentenced me a month after to one year's imprisonment at hard labor and $500 fine.
 Senator McCormick. Mr. Knowles, the record shows all this. Is it true that under the military law he was not convicted upon the evidence adduced?
 MR. KNOWLES. No, Senator; it is to show and to adduce facts to the commission that he didn't have a fair trial and the manner in which he was treated as a prisoner; the results to his person, which he will carry all through his life.
 Senator McCormick. Let him continue, then.
 MR. REGOLADO. The day after the sentence had been published—
 Senator McCormick (interposing). When was the sentence published? When was he sentenced—what date?
 MR. REGOLADO. The 10th of January, this year.
 MR. KNOWLES. I think he stated, Senator, that after he was brought here to Barona he was kept in prison one month without a trial, and then after trial another month before he was sentenced.
 MR. REGOLADO. The day after the sentence was published I was taken out of work.
 MR. KNOWLES. Where?
 MR. REGOLADO. In the Placer del Estados and to work on the wharfs. The lines who were sentries over me made me carry very heavy loads, which I was unable to raise. Then they obliged me to do so, using the butts of their rifles. Afterwards I was taken to weed at the Hippodrome; until worn out in the sun, I had a sunstroke. I was then taken—I was thrown—a truck and taken to the military hospital.

Senator McCORMICK. About when was that?

Mr. REGOLADO. The 11th of February this year. Which sickness lasted days. I was perfectly well, but knowing that I would be taken out to again, and knowing how hard I had been used, I decided to go on a strike, which lasted 30 days, and to make them responsible for everything that happened.

Senator McCORMICK. Make who responsible?

Mr. REGOLADO. Each day my condition was noted.

Senator McCORMICK. Whom did he wish to make responsible—the author of the hospital?

Mr. REGOLADO. The military government. Thirty days after I was in a sad state and expected death at any moment. And due to the scandal through the press, the press having reached the ears of the military government, they were not asking for pity for me, but they wanted the governor to know the state in which I was; it was due to that fact, not the Government sent an American doctor to examine me, and I was released on parole on severe restrictions. The city was my prison. I should report myself on the 9th day of each month before the provost marshal, and leaving for any other town I must have a permit from the military government, and if in case of sickness I was unable to present myself to the provost marshal I should report to him in writing, and as a consequence of that I am completely useless, suffering from some kind of paralysis.

Senator McCORMICK. By illness he means incident to his hunger strike.

Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. For the purpose of protesting, was it?

Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. I have no further questions to ask.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is this the manner in which you were garbed in prison [introducing witness a photograph]?

Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. I offer this in evidence.

(The photograph is on file with the committee.)

Mr. KNOWLES. At the trial was any witness present to state any part of the language that you had used in this lecture to the workmen?

Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. What did they say that you had said?

Mr. REGOLADO. That I had stated that the time had come for the shedding of blood for our liberty.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did you on that occasion or any other occasion make any statement?

Mr. REGOLADO. No, sir.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did you have witnesses who were present at that lecture testified that you said no such thing?

Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. Were there witnesses who testified that you said such things?

Mr. REGOLADO. Two employees of the military government.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were they present, each of them, at that lecture?

Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. Were there any others that testified in the same manner that these men, these two so-called employees, of the Government testified?

Mr. REGOLADO. No, sir.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who were these two employees of the Government?

Mr. REGOLADO. Two Porto Ricans. One employed in the department of instruction and the other a sanitary officer.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you know how they happened to be at the lecture?

Mr. REGOLADO. They came to hear.

Mr. KNOWLES. Had you said anything in this lecture that you had said in many lectures before?

Mr. REGOLADO. The same thing throughout the country.

Mr. KNOWLES. How many times had you repeated that lecture in different parts of the country?

Mr. REGOLADO. Several times.

Mr. KNOWLES. In what city?

Mr. REGALADO. Throughout the Republic.

Mr. KNOWLES. What was the state of mind produced upon you and others, you know, in the city where you reside, and others in which you were frequently, as to the effect of this arrest and imprisonment?

Mr. REGALADO. We are very indignant, due to the pressure brought to bear on the newspaper men in general.

Mr. KNOWLES. What do you mean by pressure brought to bear upon the newspaper men?

Mr. REGALADO. The newspaper men were condemned or sentenced to six months' imprisonment or $300 fine.

Senator McCORMICK. Mr. Knowles, I merely want to note that apparently a committee is about to afford the witness some latitude beyond the rules, and it is upon warning now. He is about to discuss impressions and not facts, hink.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; he was going to recite cases that he personally knows of. Senator McCORMICK. I only suggest that when you are discussing impressions, the student of psychology, even experts, might differ as to impressions.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, you are right, Senator. Do you know of any cases of your own knowledge of newspaper men who have been so fined and imprisoned?

Mr. REGALADO. Yes, sir.

Senator McCORMICK. Will you leave a list of their names and their cases in writing?

Mr. REGALADO. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. We will spare the witness, the counsel, and the committee the time involved in a verbal recital.

Mr. KNOWLES. I assume that the committee does not want to know anything further about his personal condition.

Senator McCORMICK. Well, that remains to be seen. He has testified that he was imprisoned, subject to labor under such conditions that he suffered a stroke; that he went on a hunger strike, and that he is now paralyzed. Counsel may be the judge, if he wants to, of the fact whether he wishes to press the matter.

Mr. KNOWLES. There is one question I forgot to ask. During this 30 days that you were making your protest in the way you have stated to the committee—

Senator McCORMICK. No; no. During this period you were on a hunger strike by way of protest were you attended at all by the American doctors until you had arrived at the last hours of the condition you describe?

Mr. REGALADO. No.

Senator McCORMICK. Were you attended by any physicians at all during that time?

Mr. REGALADO. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. At what time and what doctor?

Mr. REGALADO. From the time I feel ill the doctor was Alejandro Martinez, under the orders of Dr. Hater, an American.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he, if you know, connected with the military government?

Mr. REGALADO. Who?

Mr. KNOWLES. This Dr. Hager?

Mr. REGALADO. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Just how did this illness affect you? You state that you were paralyzed.

Mr. REGALADO. Thirty days after I was released I came out on the streets for the first time, and it was then I noted that my legs would hardly bear me up due to weakness.

Mr. KNOWLES. What has been your condition since?

Mr. REGALADO. Always ill.

Mr. KNOWLES. Are you able to pursue any occupation of any kind?

Mr. REGALADO. Up to the present I have not been able. I have been in a clinic.

Mr. KNOWLES. That is all with the witness.

Senator McCORMICK. Counsel will be given an opportunity to see the record of the trial. I learn that witnesses—four, I think, in number—appeared in behalf of the witness present before the committee, and that his counsel in the case appears to have been allowed a very wide latitude in his arguments. If counsel wishes the records in the hospital, they will be supplied to him, too, if he asks for them.

(The records referred to will be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF SANTO DOMINGO,
OFFICE OF THE MILITARY GOVERNOR.
Santo Domingo City, D. R., January 17, 1921.

In reviewing the record of the proceedings of the superior provincial court, the case of Doroteo A. Regalado, an inhabitant of the Dominican Republic, is noted that (p. 12) the court adjourned over from Tuesday, December 7, Thursday, December 9, 1920; and, again (p. 15) from Thursday, December 10 to the following Friday, December 15, 1920, to await the arrival of certain witnesses requested for the defense in both cases without previously asking and receiving the sanction of the convening authority. Article 45, Article 46, the government of the Navy, requires the court (general) to "sit from day to day, Sundays excepted, until sentence is given, unless temporarily adjourned by the authority which convened it"; and section 432, Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, provides that "proceedings in a case (summary) may be suspended for cause—after its first meeting, a summary court-martial shall meet at the time specified at adjournment—unless the convening authority directs otherwise."

While these provisions apply specifically to naval courts, and while there is no such restriction specifically affecting exceptional military tribunals, as their procedure is governed by analogy by the procedure laid down as prescribed by the department for other courts "so far as the exigencies of the service may permit" (sec. 14, N. C. & B.), the same requirement should have been observed, viz, the district commander, eastern district, should have been notified of the request of counsel for the desired delay, and his authority therefor first obtained. However, in the absence of any statute or ruling, the department rendering necessary this formality, as in the case of regular and ordinary courts, the omission noted is not considered sufficient to invalidate the proceedings.

It is further noted that, in the summing-up argument by the counsel for the accused, he transcended the latitude allowed in such argument by heaping abuse upon witnesses for the prosecution, referring to them as "malevolent conspirators," "imported scum," etc. In permitting the employment of such abuse the court erred. Section 314, Naval courts and boards, 1917, states: "But the court should not permit such argument to be made the vehicle of abuse not resting upon the merits of the case and not supported by matters contained in the record"; and Naval Digest (p. 32), "Arguments. 1: The court should not permit counsel to resort to a general malediction of a third party." All witnesses appearing before naval courts are entitled to be treated with respect and consideration, and are not to be allowed to be insulted, browbeaten, or defamed by either party to the trial nor by their counsel. The court is the sole judge of the degree of credence or credibility to be imposed upon their testimony, unless their characters for credibility or competency have been impeached in the regular way, recognized and sanctioned by legal practice, their testimony to be weighed by the court and given that degree of probity to which the court believes it to be entitled. In any event, they should be protected from abuse. (See C. M. O. No. 317, 1919, p. 2, case of Lieut. Commander Christopher Wenden, U. S. Navy, quote-marked passage, p. 2.)

The resort by counsel to the employment as a weapon of invective and personal abuse of the prosecution's witnesses, civil employees of the military government, furnishes additional reason, if any is needed, for believing in the existence on the part of the defense of a feeling of defiance toward and opposition to the de facto government, which the accused in this case is charged with and has been convicted of, maligning.

The recorder may equally have animadverted upon the evasiveness, apathy, collusion, willingness to testify favorably to the benefit of the accused, manifest partisanship and bias on the part of all witnesses called for the defense. (Moore on Facts, sec. 828, p. 934.) "The witness in an excited condition often becomes the mere partisan of the litigant whose cause he represents. His solicitude in the cause and his anxiety to win the verdict are often more than his friend and summoner, whose life or liberty may depend upon the verdict."

Subject to the foregoing remarks, the proceedings are approved.

After very carefully considering the evidence adduced in this case, the military governor is convinced that the specification has been proved beyond reasonable doubt, and that the accused was justly convicted of the offense alleged.

It is pointed out that action in this case was not initiated by American members of the forces of occupation, but upon complaint brought by Spanish eking officials of the Dominican Government and peaceable citizens (the governor of Barahona Province, Senor Brandilio Feliz, among them), who were present on the occasion when the accused made the speech with which he was charged, and who describe the terms thereof as so violent, incendiary, and revolutionary as to have excited or inflamed the people to the extent of causing them to make threats in the form of anonymous placards, posters, or letters against a peaceable citizen occupying a civil office of trust and dignity.

It was further stated that these remarks, made by the accused, were couched in terms so violent, untruthful, and defiant of the existing Government as to have produced a marked effect upon his auditors, indicated by their applause of approval, and to have shocked the sense of propriety of these persons loyal to the Dominican Government present and listening to them. The report was made by Dominican citizens to the military authorities, and action requested by them to preserve public order and safety and to prevent disturbance of the peace.

The evidence for the prosecution was direct, positive, and circumstantial; that for the defense doubtful, uncertain, and of a negative character, consisting in the greater part of such answers as, "I don't remember him saying that"; "I did not hear that, if he said it," etc. The witnesses for the defense were avowedly partisan, and as such, undoubtedly biased (see Moore on Facts, 828, p. 984, and sec. 1112, pp. 1250-1252). "In every litigation the tendency of a voluntary witness is to become a partisan on the side for which he testifies. It is a lamentable fact that the disposition to help the side calling the witness is shown by many. Due allowance should always be made for the bias of witnesses who manifest a zeal in behalf of the party for whom they testify."

In addition thereto their testimony, by reason of its negative character, can be given the same degree of weight that positive, direct testimony (unless the latter is successfully impeached) commands. The witnesses for the prosecution were neither impeached nor their testimony shaken on cross-examination. It is, therefore, entitled to full weight, as it appears to have received in conformity with prescribed principles. There is an old Roman maxim which, translated, says, "One testifying affirmatively is worth a thousand negatives." Testimony of a purely negative character acquires no weight by reason of the number of witnesses who give it." (Moore on Facts, sec. 1189). "Ordinarily a witness's nonrecollection of a fact has no weight whatever against the testimony of a credible witness that, to his personal knowledge, it occurred" (same authority, sec. 1190, p. 1334).

The testimony of such witnesses, as was said by an eminent English jurist, "makes no great influence on my mind." (Browning v. Reane, 1 Eng. Ecc., 1, 199.)

It is not believed that under the sanction and ruling of existing authorities it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that actual revolt or disorder followed, and was occasioned by the revolutionary utterances of the accused. It is equally an offense to incite, or attempt to incite, strife as it is to produce and it need not be averred even that revolt or disorder followed. (See Cyc., 1, XXXIV, p. 1783, par. 3.)

The apprehension and punishment of revolutionaries and conspirators whose acts in assassinating the Archduke Ferdinand of Austria was the ostensible not the direct cause of the World War, in June, 1914, before the commission that overt act might well have prevented the universal conflagration which followed.

The contention was made by the defense that no punishment could be meted out because, on December 6, 1920, Executive order No. 385, the prohibitory terms of which had, on November 1, 1920, been violated, was revoked and superseded by Executive order No. 572. An act which is a crime when committed continues to be a crime, notwithstanding a subsequent law, passed at a later date, changing the nature of the law violated, and may be still punished as such; otherwise the later law would be ex post facto and would have the effect, equally, of changing the nature of the punishment previously prescribed, which is forbidden by the Constitution of the United States. The contention as without merit.

In view of the facts in this case, i. e., that Doroteo A. Regalado did, knowingly and willfully make, in the course of a public speech, delivered at the Union Theater, in the city of Barahona, Dominican Republic, on November 1, 1920, certain accusations of a manifestly untruthful character against the officers of the military government, and of existing conditions in the Dominican Republic, and did make use of words and phrases toward the Government of the United States and of the military government of Santo Domingo, the policies and officers, and so severely critical of them as to incite the people thereof to unrest, disorder, and revolt, and so held up to scorn and obloquy the conduct of the Governments aforesaid in such manner as to tend to create disorder and revolt in the Republic in direct contempt, defiance, and in violation of Executive order No. 385, forbidding such utterances, the finding and the sentence adjudged by the court are approved.

INDICATION OF AN OFFENSE PREFERRED AGAINST DOROTEO A. REGALADO, AN INHABITANT OF SALCEDO, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

Specification: In that Doroteo A. Regalado, an inhabitant of Salcedo Dominican Republic, did, on or about November 1, 1920, in the city of Barahona, Dominican Republic, make a speech in public, of and concerning the policy of government of the United States in the Dominican Republic, and of the policy of government of Santo Domingo, in words and phrases substantially as follows:

Marinos y el Gobierno Militar son culpables de habernos atropellado. La bandera de la Republica Dominicana esta sufriendo grande verguenza, y la Republica esta sufriendo grande ignominia por la invasion de las tropas extranjeras; quoenes cual los cosacos del Kaiser, estan atropellando a los dominicanos con los cascos de los caballos, y cometiendo crímenes. Ha llegado el momento en que no debemos de seguir permitiendo tales atropellos. Los Estados Unidos no es mas que una nacion que roba a los pueblos pequenos como lo ha hecho aqui. Debemos derramar nuestra sangre por la soberania. Nuestra Patria no debe morir, para que un dia se lleque al sacrificio por la libertad de nuestra tierra amada. No debemos seguir permitiendo a estos extranjeros que nos quieren quitar nuestra independencia, or words to that effect. The said Doroteo A. Regalado well knowing that the words and phrases said were so hostile toward the Government of the United States, and the military government of Santo Domingo, their policies and officers, and so highly critical of them, as to incite the people to unrest, disorder and revolt; and held up to scorn, obliquy, and ridicule the conduct of the governments said, and in such a manner, as to tend to create disorder and revolt in the Dominican Republic; and so described present conditions in Santo Domingo in a grossly unfair and untruthful manner, in such terms as to incite the people to disorder; this in violation of Executive Order No. 385 of the military government of Santo Domingo.

Approved: November 29, 1920.

to be tried before the superior provost court of which Maj. Charles S. McReynolds, United States Marine Corps is senior member.

HENRY C. DAVIS,

Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps, District Commander, Southern District, Dominican Republic.

FIRST DAY.

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHERN DISTRICT, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC,
SANTO DOMINGO CITY, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.
Monday, December 6, 1920.

The court met at 9 a. m.

Present: Maj. Charles S. McReynolds, United States Marine Corps; Willett Elmore, United States Marine Corps; and First Lieut. Walter S. H. berg, United States Marine Corps, members; and Second Lieut. Fred L. United States Marine Corps, recorder.

The recorder introduced Pedro Leon as interpreter, stating the act whereby he was appointed as such.

The accused entered and requested that Luis C. Castillo act as his counsel. Luis C. Castillo entered.

The recorder read the precept, original prefixed to the record in the case of Jimmy Parsons, a sojourner in the Dominican Republic, copy hereto, marked "A."

The accused stated that he did not object to any member.

Each member, the recorder, and the interpreter were duly sworn.

The accused stated that he had received a copy of the specification preferred against him on November 29, 1920.

The recorder asked the accused if he had any objection to make to the specification. The accused replied in the negative.

The court was cleared.

The court was opened. All parties to the trial entered, and the senior member announced that the court found the specification in due form technically correct.

The accused (counsel) requested a delay until such time as Virgilio F. Dr. L. Hernandez, Dr. Alcibiades Alburquerque, Eugenio Matos, and Manuel Jesus Fiallo, witnesses for the defense, can be called from Barahona, Dominican Republic.

The recorder replied that the accused requested, on November 29, that the following witnesses only be called: Eladio Ramirez, Virgilio F. Dr. L. Hernandez, of which Eladio Ramirez only is present. Telegrams have been sent to Barahona, Dominican Republic, asking for the three witnesses, but only one has arrived.

The counsel for the accused stated that when the accused submitted list of witnesses he had not yet consulted counsel; that the additional witnesses now requested were present at the meeting and are men of ability and whom it is desired to testify as to what was said.

The court was cleared. The court was opened. All parties to the trial entered and the senior member announced that the court decided to proceed with the case and further consider a delay to await the arrival of witnesses at the conclusion of the prosecution.

The accused stated that he was ready for trial.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the trial were present.

The recorder read the specification, original prefixed marked "B," and arraigned the accused as follows:

Q. Doroteo A. Regalado, you have heard the specification preferred against you. How say you to the specification, guilty or not guilty?—A. Not guilty.

The prosecution began.

A witness for the prosecution entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder:

Q. State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Manuel de Toro Perdomo, Barahona, inspector of public instructions.

Q. If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. Mr. Regalado.

Q. Did the accused come under your observation on or about November 1920? If so, state the circumstances.—A. I met Mr. Regalado at my office in Barahona, where he was introduced to me by a man named Carlos M. The accused told me that he came to Barahona in order to hold some meeting of labor character. He was requesting my help for him to introduce the meeting that the accused was going to hold at the Union Theater. I asked him if the labor meeting was in opposition to the Capitol or not. He answered me, "No"; that the propaganda was in a pacific way, just to educate the laboring people. I let him know that if it was that thing I him to cooperate with him, as my duty was to help all that was pertaining to the location. That was my first interview I had with the accused.

Did the accused hold the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Did you attend the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

What did the accused say at the meeting?—A. The first thing the accused was pull out some paper and read to the public some concepts of a labor acter. After he read some paragraphs from the paper that he carried him he told some phrases that contained a direct attack on the military government. Afterwards he continued reading from this paper concepts or of a labor character. Afterwards he folded up paper and started again, and phrases against the military government, the marines, and the United States. In like manner he continued the meeting for about 45 minutes until he could obtain applause from the public.

In what manner did the accused deliver his speech?—A. In a manner, said before, sometimes reading and sometimes improvising.

Was the accused excited or did he deliver his speech in an even manner?—A. When he was improvising he was excited.

What effect did the speech have on the public?—A. Extraordinary effect. Was much applauded and congratulated.

What effect did the accused's speech have on the public as to attitude toward the military government?—A. It was much applauded.

Can you remember the exact words the accused used in his speech?—A. Some of them.

What were they?—A. For instance, when he was talking about the lines he compared them to "los cosacos del Kaiser" (the Cossacks of the Emperor). They were going to all parts "con los cascos de los caballos atrojando y cometiendo crímenes" (with the shoes of their horses damaging and committing crimes). In other words, the accused talked against the military government. He said that "era un ignominia por la Republica Dominicana que era necesario que terminare, que el pueblo debe prepararse para recuperar su soberania" (it was an ignominy to have a Dominican Republic under a military government, that it was necessary to stop that, and that the people ought to get ready to recover their sovereignty). Some other phrases it "Los Estados Unidos estaba abusando los pueblos debiles, como habia sido robado de su independencia" (the United States, that was abusing weak countries, as they have done with the Dominican Republic, who have been robbed of their independence). I can remember when the accused was talking about the Dominican flag he said that it was an ignominy to have this when it does not represent what it is worth. I do not remember the other words he used. I don't remember any more.

Did the accused make a statement so as to incite the people to revolt?—A. Those phrases and many others.

Can you remember any phrases the accused used recommending violence?—A. The accused did not tell any.

Did the accused use the phrase "Debemos derramar nuestra sangre por la soberania" (We must pour out our blood for our sovereignty)?—A. Yes, sir.

Did the accused use phrases similar to this one?—A. Yes, sir.

Can you remember some?—A. Yes, sir; the same.

Did this speech of the accused cause much comment in Barahona?—A. Yes, sir.

Were the people excited over it?—A. Not excited, but they applauded.

Did any violence occur immediately afterwards?—A. No, sir.

Did any occur on the next day?—A. I can not tell, because I went out to Miriquillo.

Were there any threats of violence?—A. No, sir.

Did the civil authorities take any action after the accused made his speech?—A. I do not know.

Cross-examined by the accused (counsel):

1. Were the words used by the accused written or improvised?—A. What words do you refer to?

2. The words on which he was accused?—A. I don't know what the words

3. I am referring to the words you just mentioned a while ago in regard to the accused.—A. I believe the words were improvised, because at the time of announcing them the accused folded his paper.

Q. Are you a stenographer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take the words pronounced by the accused in shorthand or any other manner?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you feel yourself with the impulse of revolt when you heard the words of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know if after the speech was made was there any person who wanted disorder or revolt?—A. I do not know.

Q. Are you an employee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your nationality?—A. Porto Rican.

Reexamined by the recorder:

Q. Did the people of Barahona threaten you after the meeting?—A. Some days after the meeting some writing was found on the pavement in the park and on the stairway of the civil governor's building, threatening me with death and insult against my wife and my daughter.

Q. Was that threat an incident due to the accused's speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the words written on the pavement and stairway?—A. I advise you that I did not see those words because I was not there, but the officers of the Guardia Nacional and the provost marshal of Barahona, almost all the people saw them on the pavement in the park and on the stairway. The words were: "Toro Peralta es un malhechor, debe irse de Barahona, si no se va lo haremos volar" (Toro Peralta is an evildoer, he must leave Barahona, if he does not go we will make him flee).

Recross-examined by the accused (counsel):

Q. What connection have you with the accused in order to be threatened in that manner?—A. It was told that I had sued the accused before the provost marshal.

Q. Did you report the accused to the provost marshal?—A. The provost marshal called me to his office to make a statement in regard to all that happened at the Union Theater, at Barahona, the night of the meeting of the accused.

Neither the recorder, the accused (counsel), nor the court desired further to examine this witness.

The witness was duly warned and withdrew.

The court then, at 12 noon, took a recess until 1.30 p. m., at which time reconvened.

Present: All the members, the recorder, the interpreter, the accused, and his counsel.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the trial were present.

A witness for the prosecution entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder:

Q. State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Ramon Hernandez, Barahona, Dominican Republic, sanitary officer.

Q. If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. I know him by the name of Reglado.

Q. Were you at the Union Theater on November 1, 1920?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened there?—A. A conference was being held there by the accused. The accused was reading some paper about labor. After that he finished the paper and started talking about politics, stating that, "Los Estados Unidos estan cometiendo abusos con los pueblos debiles, como estan haciendo en Santo Domingo. El gobierno militar esta atropellando la dignidad de la Republica. Los Marineros Americanos se parecen a los cosacos del Kaiser, que cometen crmenes de sus caballos atropellan al pueblo y cometian crmenes por todos los paises y que no debiera permitirse mas eso" (the United States is abusing the countries as she is doing in Santo Domingo. The military government is damaging the dignity of the Republic, and the American Marines were like the cossacks of the Kaiser, that with the shoes of their horses were damaging and committing crimes everywhere, that, that must not be allowed). That is all I can remember.

Q. Did the accused use phrases to incite the people to violence?—A. Yes, phrases I have just told.

Q. Did the accused insinuate in his speech that the people should take arms and shed their blood for their country?—A. I believe I heard that. "El pueblo debe derramar su sangre por su soberania" (The people must pour out their blood for their sovereignty).

Q. In what manner did the accused deliver his speech?—A. The accused delivered his speech violently with energy.

1. What effect did the accused's speech have on the people?—A. They applauded his speech with enthusiasm.

(Cross-examined by the accused (counsel) :

1. Are you a stenographer?—A. No, sir.

2. Did you take in shorthand or in any other manner the words of the accused?—A. I did not take them in shorthand, neither in longhand; it is only that I remember them.

3. Did you feel yourself impelled to disorder or revolt by the words of the accused?—A. It was strange to me that the accused after he was talking about war, he talked about politics.

4. Did you feel yourself with the desire of attacking the military government after you heard the conference of the accused?—A. What I did feel myself was with the desire of making a protest against the accused, on account of the words stated by him against the military government.

5. Are you a Dominican?—A. I am a Porto Rican.

6. Are you an employee?—A. Yes, sir.

7. Do you know if after the speech was held, any person wanted to cause, hear of any person who wanted to cause disorder or revolt?—A. I do not know.

The recorder did not desire to reexamine this witness.

Examined by the court :

1. Did you hear the term "despotas" (despots) applied to the military government by the accused?—A. I don't remember.

2. Do you know in what town the accused lives?—A. I do not know.

Neither the recorder, the accused (counsel), nor the court desired further to examine this witness.

The witness was duly warned and withdrew.

The accused admitted that his name is Doroteo A. Regalado, and that he is inhabitant of Sascedo, Dominican Republic.

The recorder was called as a witness for the prosecution and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder :

1. State your name, rank, and present station.—A. Fred Lueders, second lieutenant United States Marine Corps, Marine Barracks, Santo Domingo City, Dominican Republic.

2. If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. I recognize him as Doroteo A. Regalado.

3. Have you a copy of Executive Order No. 385, of the military government Santo Domingo?—A. Yes, I have. It is in Spanish, in the "Gaceta Oficial," January 21, 1920.

4. Produce it.

The document just described was produced by the witness and submitted to the court and the accused, and by the recorder offered in evidence. There being no objection it was so received, and hereto appended, marked "No. 1."

The witness resumed his seat as recorder.

The prosecution rested.

The court then, at 4 p. m., adjourned until 1.30 p. m. to-morrow, Tuesday.

SECOND DAY.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1920.

The court met at 1.30 p. m.

Present: All the members, the recorder, the interpreter, the accused, and his counsel.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the trial were present.

The record of proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The defense began.

A witness for the defense entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder.

Q. State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Eladio Ramirez, Santo Domingo City, student.

Q. If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. Doroteo A. Regalado.

Examined by the accused (counsel) :

Q. Did you hear the speech pronounced by the accused at Barahona, on November 1, 1920?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it.

Q. Did you hear in that speech the expression "Los marinos y el gobierno militar son culpables de habernos atropellado" (the marines and the military government having done harm to us)?—A. I don't remember all he said; I did not hear him say it.

Q. Did you hear the expression, "Los tropas Americanos cual los cosacos Kaiser, estan atropellando los Dominicanos y cometiendo crímenes" (American troops, like the Cossacks of the Kaiser, are doing harm to the Dominicans and committing crimes)?—A. I did not hear him talk about crimes or harm. If you want me to, I will make a statement of what I heard.

Q. Did you hear the other expression, "Ha llagado la hora en que no debemos seguir permitiendo tales atropellos" (the time has come of which we must allow all this harm)?—A. I did not hear him talk about harm.

Q. Did you hear the expression, "Los Estados Unidos no es una nacion que roba a los pueblos pequenos" (the United States is nothing but a Nation that robs small countries)?—A. I don't remember all he said; but I did not hear him say about the United States robbing small countries.

Q. Did you hear this expression: "Debemos derramar nuestro sangre por nuestra soberania" (we must pour out our blood for our sovereignty)?—A. No, sir.

Q. This other expression: "No debemos seguir permitiendo a estos despotas que nos quieren quitar nuestra independencia" (we must not go on permitting these despots that want to take our independence away from us)?—A. I did not hear him talking about the United States and about the independence of our country; but I did not hear him say that the Americans were despots.

Q. What expressions do you remember of the speech?—A. When the speaker started he began to read a paper and began talking about labor; about the conditions of the laborers in Santo Domingo City, and the manner the people look at them. Then he folded the paper and, improvising some words, he said: "Que era necesario que los obreros se unieran para trabajos por el interés de ellos mismos y el interés de la patria" (it is necessary for the laborers to unite themselves for their own interest and for the interest of the fatherland). Then he unfolded the paper again and went on talking about laborers in Cibao; that they had met and formed an association, and that down in the plain the laborers should do the same thing so as not to suffer the calamity that had been suffering. Then he went on talking about labor. I don't know what he said. Afterwards he folded the paper again and, improvising some words, he said: "La falta de union de los obreros habia traído en Santo Domingo guerras civiles, y por estos guerras civiles el gobierno de los Estados Unidos habia traído la intervencion" (the lack of union among laborers has brought to Santo Domingo the civil wars; and on account of the civil wars the Government of the United States has brought up intervention). With the paper he went on, saying: "Que los Dominicanos no estaban conformes con la intervencion de los Estados Unidos, porque ellos no tenían derecho a intervenir en Santo Domingo" (the Dominicans do not accept the intervention of the United States, as they had no right to intervene in Santo Domingo). He further said: "Una de las juntas obreras del Cibao la habia enviado a un sur de la Republica, a predicar la defensa de la patria por medio de la prensa y las asociaciones" (one of the labor boards from Cibao has sent him to the south of the Republic to preach the defense of the fatherland, by means of the press and the association). Then he unfolded the paper and went on reading.

Next day after the meeting I heard the people say that Toro Peralta was sent to report to the military government, because he had deceived him, as he told him that the meeting was wholly labor, and he had mixed things with the fatherland. He, the accused, was doing it as a prejudice to him because he is employed by the military government. Then on the 3d I expected to go to Santo Domingo, and I met the accused and asked him if he was not going to sail on the steamship. He told me "No," as the day before the military marshal had called him.

The recorder moved to strike out the paragraph beginning "Next day after" on the ground as being irrelevant and not responsive to the question, and partially hearsay.

The court was cleared. The court was opened. All parties to the trial were present, and the senior member announced that the court sustained the motion.

The court directed that the paragraph beginning "Next day after" be stricken out.

Do you believe that the people of Barahona felt themselves impelled to disorder or revolt on account of the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir; they did not call on the people to revolt.

Did you feel yourself impelled to disorder or revolt after you heard the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Was there disorder or revolt after the speech of the accused at Barahona?—A. No, sir.

Cross-examined by the recorder:

Were you at the Union Theater during the entire meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

How far away from the accused were you when he made his speech?—A. About 3 meters.

You stated that you did not hear all of the accused's speech, although you were only 3 meters away. How is that?—A. I said I heard all of the speech, but I can not remember all he said.

In his speech at the Union Theater at Barahona on November 1, 1920, the accused used the expression "los cosacos del Kaiser" (the Cossacks of the Kaiser)?—A. I did not hear him.

What did he say about the marines?—A. No; he talked about the United States.

What did he say about the United States?—A. That the United States intervened in Santo Domingo without any right.

Did you hear the expressions "casco de los caballos" (shoes of the horses) and "despotas" (despots)?—A. No, sir.

Whether the recorder, the accused (counsel), nor the court desired further to examine this witness.

The witness was duly warned and withdrew.

A witness for the defense entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder:

State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Virgilio Felix, Barahona; Merchant.

If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. I recognize him as the accused.

Examined by the accused (counsel):

Did you hear a speech pronounced by the accused in Barahona on November 1, 1920?—A. Yes, sir; I had the pleasure of attending.

Do you remember if in that speech the accused used offensive words against the United States?—A. No, sir; I did not hear any.

Do you remember if in that speech there were used offensive words against military government and its officers?—A. None.

Do you believe that the people of Barahona felt themselves impelled to disorder or revolt?—A. No.

Did you feel yourself impelled to disorder or revolt?—A. No.

Was there disorder or revolt at Barahona after the speech of the accused?—A. No.

Cross-examined by the recorder:

Were you at the Union Theater during the entire meeting?—A. Yes.

How far away from the accused were you when he delivered his speech?—A. About 10 meters.

Did you hear these expressions used by the accused "los cosacos del Kaiser," "casco de los caballos," "despotas" (the Cossacks of the Kaiser, shoes of the horses, despots)?—A. No, sir.

What did the accused say?—A. The speech was quite long and in regard to laborers and the organization of them. Among other things he said "Todos Dominicanos debemos estar unidos para la restauracion de la Republica" (all Dominicans must be united for the restoration of the Republic).

Did you hear the accused say that the United States intervened in Santo Domingo without any right?—A. No, sir.

Did you hear the military government, the United States, and the marines mentioned at all by the accused?—A. No, sir.

The accused (counsel) did not desire to reexamine this witness.

Examined by the court:

In what sense did the accused use these words: "Debemos derramar nuestro sangre" (we must pour out our blood)?—A. I did not hear them.

Q. In what sense did the accused use these words: "Crímenes y criminales" (crimes and criminals)?—A. I did not hear them.

Q. What did the accused say about the American troops?—A. I did not hear anything.

Q. During what hour was this speech made?—A. From 9 to 10 p. m.

Q. Was this speech prepared or improvised?—A. Prepared.

Neither the recorded, the accused (counsel), nor the court desired further to examine this witness.

The witness was duly warned and withdrew.

Two witnesses for the defense not having arrived from Barahona, Dominican Republic, the court then, at 3.50 p. m., adjourned until 2 p. m. Thursday, December 9, 1920.

THIRD DAY.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1920

The court met at 2 p. m.

Present: All the members, the recorder, the interpreter, the accused, and his counsel.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the trial were present.

The record of proceedings of Tuesday (the second day of the trial) was read and approved.

A witness for the defense entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder:

Q. State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Francisco Luciano Hernandez; Barahona, Dominican Republic; dentist.

Q. If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. Doroteo A. Regalado.

Examined by the accused (counsel):

Q. Did you hear a speech pronounced by the accused at Barahona on November 1, 1920?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear him pronounce this expression: "Los Marinos y el gobierno Militar son culpables de habernos atropellar" (the marines and the military government are blamed of having harmed us)?—A. No sir.

Q. And this other expression: "Los tropas Americanos cual los cosacos del Kaiser, estan atropellando los Dominicanos y comitiendo crímenes" (the American troops, like the Cossacks of the Kaiser, are harming the Dominicans as they are committing crimes)?—A. No, sir; I did not hear the expression.

Q. And this other expression: "Los Estados Unidos no es mas que uno que roba a los pueblos pequenos" (the United States is nothing but a Nation that is robbing small countries)?—A. I did not hear it.

Q. And this other expression: "Debemos derramar nuestro sangre por nuestra soberania" (we must pour out our blood for our sovereignty)?—A. No, sir; I did not hear it.

Q. This other expression: "No debemos seguir permitiendo estos despotas que nos quitan nuestra independencia" (we must not go on permitting these despots to take our independence away from us)?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the finality of the speech of the accused?—A. The accused talked about national fraternity of labor. He talked for a long time in that respect, saying that we must unite, all of us, to cooperate with national life and work for the interest of the country. He further talked about the necessity of our freedom; that this was the best time to work for our liberty, as the laborers had had the help of the national fraternity of the United States. Nothing more.

Q. Was it a pacific speech or warlike?—A. No, sir; he was asking that we must work for the freedom in a pacific manner.

Q. Did the people of Barahona feel themselves impelled to disorder or revolt when they heard the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there disorder or revolt at Barahona after the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Cross-examined by the recorder:

Q. Did you hear all of the accused's speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the accused say the United States intervened in Santo Domingo without any right?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did the accused say concerning the marines, the military government, and the United States?—A. He only talked about the independence, he did not refer to the forces of occupation.

Then he did not even mention the marines, the military government, or the United States?—A. He mentioned the United States, but not in an injurious sense. In what sense did the accused use the words "Crímenes y criminales" but I did not hear him refer to the forces of occupation.

(as and criminals)?—A. I did not hear him talk about that.

Are you positive the accused did not use the terms, "cosacos del Kaiser," "cosacos de los caballos" (cossacks of the Kaiser, shoes of the horses)?—A. No, I did not hear them.

Was the accused's speech prepared or improvised?—A. He had the speech written, and sometimes he pronounced some words with the paper folded.

How do you know the speech was written?—A. Because I saw him read from the paper.

Have you a copy of the written speech?—A. No, sir.

The accused (counsel) did not desire to reexamine this witness.

Examined by the court:

At what hour did you hear the accused's speech?—A. From 10 to 10.30

What day of the week was this?—A. I don't remember.

What day of the month was this?—A. I don't remember neither. But as I said here, it was on November 1, 1920. I can't tell.

Where was this speech made?—A. At the Union Theater at Barahona.

Have you heard the accused speak there more than one time?—A. No, sir.

Are you certain that the accused did not at that time urge the people to violence?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure of it.

Would you consider the statement, "Debemos derramar nuestro sangre" (we must pour out our blood), an exhortation to resort to violence, or to be prepared to resort to violent measures, had it been made by the accused in his speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Did the recorder, the accused (counsel), nor the court desired further to examine this witness.

The witness was duly warned and withdrew.

The counsel for the accused requested a delay until the arrival of Dr. Alcibiades Alburquerque, a witness for the defense, from Barahona, Dominican Republic. The request was granted. The court then, at 3.10 p. m., adjourned until the arrival of Dr. Alcibiades Alburquerque.

FOURTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1920.

The court met at 1.45 p. m.

Present: All the members, the recorder, the interpreter, the accused, and his counsel.

The witnesses not otherwise connected with the trial were present.

The record of proceedings of the third day of the trial was read and approved.

The witness for the defense entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the recorder:

State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Alcibiades Alburquerque, Barahona, Dominican Republic; lawyer.

If you recognize the accused, state as whom.—A. I know him as Rega-

Examined by the accused (counsel):

Did you hear a speech pronounced by the accused at Barahona on November 1, 1920?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it.

Do you remember any ideas pronounced out in that speech?—A. The speech was made on organization of labor, of which he was a delegate, and the press I could see that he really was having meetings all through our country about that labor organization.

Did that speech have revolutionary finalities or pacific?—A. Of course I think that it had not revolutionary finality, because that was not the place to discuss revolutionary ideas where all the authorities could see it.

When he referred to the national patriotism, what connection did it have with the labor matter?—A. He was trying to have laborers organized to help out the other people in the country, newspaper men and other organizations that were working for the disoccupation of the Republic by the forces of the United States.

Q. Do you remember any offensive words against the military government made in that speech?—A. I don't remember.

Q. And against the office of the military government?—A. Neither.

Q. And to the Government of the United States?—A. Neither.

Q. Did you feel yourself impelled to disorder or revolt after you heard the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you believe that the people of Barahona felt themselves impelled to disorder or revolt after hearing the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there disorder or revolt in Barahona after the speech of the accused?—A. No, sir.

Q. In connection with your profession of counsel of law, would you be that that speech would violate the law?

The recorder objected to the question on the ground that it calls for a decision.

The court was cleared.

The court was opened. All parties to the trial entered, and the senior judge announced that the court sustained the objection.

Q. In connection with your profession of counselor at law, do you have any foreign interests in Barahona?—A. I am attorney for the Barahona Co. Barahona.

Cross-examination by the recorder:

Q. Were you at the Union Theater during the entire meeting?—A. Yes, the entire meeting.

Q. At what time did you hear the speech of the accused?—A. From 9:30 p. m.

Q. What did the accused say concerning the marines, the United States, the military government?—A. I don't remember him telling anything in that respect.

Q. Did you hear the accused say the United States intervened in Santo Domingo without any right?—A. I did not hear anything in that respect.

Q. On what day of the month did you hear this speech of the accused?—A. I have not the day on mind.

Q. Was that speech prepared or improvised?—A. He had the speech written but sometimes improvised.

Q. In what sense did the accused use the term "los cosacos del Kaiser" (the cossacks of the Kaiser)?—A. I don't remember that term.

Q. In what sense did the accused use the term "casco de los caballos" (shoes of the horses)?—A. I don't remember neither; I did not hear that.

Q. What did the accused mean when he said "Debemos derramar nuestro sangre por nuestra soberanía" (we must pour out our blood for our sovereignty)?—A. If he told that I did not hear it. I don't remember.

Q. How much of the speech of the accused do you remember?—A. I can remember many things about that, but I don't know what you refer to. I can substantiate tell you what he said.

Q. Then you did not hear the accused mention the United States, the military government, or the marines?—A. The United States; yes.

Q. What did the accused say concerning the United States?—A. What he talked about organization of labor to contribute to the work that was to be done by some other institution in the United States in regard to disoccupation of Santo Domingo. He also talked about some high men as Washington, Lincoln, etc.

Q. What did the accused say concerning the disoccupation of Santo Domingo?—A. The last answer that I just made would correspond to that same question.

Q. Why did some people of Barahona threaten Toro Peralta?—A. I don't know that.

Q. After the speech of the accused did you stay in Barahona?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what sense did the accused use the words "crimenes" (crimes) or "criminales" (criminals)?—A. If he told them I don't remember having heard them.

The accused (counsel) did not desire to reexamine this witness.

Examined by the court:

What method of terminating the occupation of Santo Domingo did the accused propose?—A. Pacific means. The work that is being done by the best men in the Republic and in the United States in that respect has been the most convenient for the Dominicans.

Did the accused say that?—A. That is the idea that I have formed out of his idea.

Your idea then is that he simply urged or recommended to his hearers to convert these people?—A. Yes, sir; that is my idea.

What method did he recommend, then, to use? State as near as possible the words the accused used.—A. I can't remember his words, but I can say nothing to my own idea. By the organization the laborers thought it would be easier to help them out and to tell by means of the press and their representatives to the United States what their feelings were in regard to disaffection.

You said earlier in your testimony that it was not the place to give out revolutionary ideas, because the authorities could see it. Were there any Government officials at the meeting?—A. I only remember having seen one Dominican soldier who applauded when the accused spoke of Washington and Lincoln—and Toro Peralta, inspector of schools, are the only ones I can remember.

Have you since the speech of the accused heard of any threat made by him against Toro Peralta?—A. Absolutely, I have not heard it.

Either the recorder, the accused (counsel), nor the court desired further to examine this witness.

The witness was duly warned and withdrew.

The defense rested.

The accused (counsel) requested a delay until 1.30 p. m., Friday, to prepare written argument. The request was granted, and the court then, at 3.30 p. m., adjourned until 1.30 p. m. Friday next.

FIFTH DAY.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1920.

The court met at 1.30 p. m.

Present: All the members, the recorder, the interpreter, the accused, and counsel.

The witnesses not otherwise connected with the trial were present.

The record of proceedings of Wednesday, the fourth day of the trial, was read and approved.

The recorder desired to make no opening argument.

The counsel for the accused read his written argument, appended, marked "2."

The recorder read his closing argument, appended, marked "No. 3."

The trial was finished.

The court was cleared.

The recorder was recalled and directed to record the following findings:

The specification proved in part; proved except the words, 'no debemos permitir a estos despotas que nos quieran quitar nuestra independencia,' which words are not proved."

The recorder stated that he had no record of previous convictions.

The court was cleared.

The recorder was recalled and directed to record the sentence of the court, as follows:

The court, therefore, sentences him, Doroteo A. Regalado, an inhabitant of Salcedo, Dominican Republic, to be confined in such place as the convening authority may designate for a period of one year, and to perform hard labor during such confinement, and to pay a fine of $500. In the event that the fine in any part thereof is not paid, to be confined at hard labor for one day for each $2 of the fine so unpaid."

Para el mes de Julio del presente año de 1920 una acusación militar me fue hecha en el caso de defenderme ante esta Corte. Fue una ineludible necesidad la última defensa la que me impulsó a la jurisdicción obligada ante la cual fui conducido. La aceptación de mandato para asis tir al Sr. Doroteo A. Beza tiene un origen análogo; ha sido objeto de análoga acusación; ha sido obligado a comparecer ante la misma jurisdicción extraña i ha solicitado mis servicios sin que yo pueda negar selos dejándolo abandonado a su propia suerte, falta de tal modo a deberes de fraternidad para con un conciudadano. Fort esta advertencia para sostener que asisto al Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado como un amigo en trance desgraciado, jamás en mi calidad de abogado dominicano que no puedo postular ante otros Tribunales que no sean los de la República i que no debo admitir la existencia de otros Tribunales que no sean los establecidos por la Constitución Dominicana ó creados por el legislador dominicano.

2. Sin ocurrir a argumentaciones que no tengan conexión con la situación sufrida por el Pueblo Dominicano, procede advertir que en exacto rigor de principios la acusación formulada contra el Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado, relativamente haber violado la Orden Ejecutiva No. 385, no tiene eficiencia legal alguna desde el 6 de Diciembre de este año de 1920, en que la Orden Ejecutiva No. 372 titulada "Lei sobre Sedición" declaró en su artículo 6°, revocados los párrafos 2, 3, 4, i 5 de la Orden Ejecutiva No. 385, lo que equivalió en efecto a revocar totalmente la expresada Orden, puesto que sólo dejó subsistente el número cuya economía se limita a declarar "abolida la Censura en Santo Domingo" como la Orden intitulada "Censura" que aparece en la Gaceta Oficial N° 27 i todas las demás leyes, decretos i órdenes que establecen la censura quedan en el mismo derogadas." Hablando, pues, sido derogada la Orden Ejecutiva N° 385 desde este mes de Diciembre en todo lo que atañe a la acusación imputada a Doroteo A. Regalado i no habiendo sido modificadas las especificaciones formuladas contra él en 29 de Noviembre de 1920, esta Corte está descalificada para imponer una pena respecto de un hecho para el cual no existe actualmente sanción tal como así lo formula la vieja máxima jurídica MULLA PENA SINE LEGE. (No hai pena sin lei.)

Importa recordar Sres Jueces, que Doroteo A. Regalado está sometido a vuestro juicio por vilación a la Orden Ejecutiva N° 385 según lo dicen las especificaciones que se le sometieron en fecha 29 de Noviembre de 1920; es el caso que esa Orden Ejecutiva está actualmente derogada i os es imposible dictar una sanción de acuerdo con los preceptos estatutarios en ella, del mismo modo que os es imposible invocar un precepto extraño indicando en las aludidas especificaciones para sancionar la falta que se imputa al expresado individuo.

3. Mas si por extraordinaria concepción de vuestra capacidad para juzgar el hecho imputado al Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado de acuerdo con las previsiones de una Orden Ejecutiva inexistente, insistís en someterlo a sus previsiones legales, debéis deteneros ante el ligero examen que os hago de los testimonios de acusación i descargo por ser éstos los únicos elementos de cuyo análisis necesitáis derivar la prueba del fallo que debéis rendir.

4. Dos testigos, los de la acusación, los Sres. Manuel del Toro Peralta Rafael Manzano, sostienen los cargos formulados en las especificaciones dirigidas al Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado el 29 de Noviembre último; pero al observar imparcialmente esos testimonios, podriéis advertir que parecen ser más bien que la expresión de la verdad, la declaración parcial de dos individuos por riqueños, producto de la emigración que lleva al extranjero siempre la clase social, dos individuos de la clase burocrática empeñados en sostener sus empleos con perjuicio de la vida, de la seguridad i de la propiedad de nacionales de esos países.

Por los datos recojidos en el plenario de esta causa se comprueba que las dos declaraciones que se comentan está llena de rencor terrible i de maldad sin límites para con los dominicanos. Me refiero a la declaración de Sr. Manuel del Toro Peralta. Si la releéis, veréis con qué encero se esfuerza en acusar a un pueblo que la ha dado hospitalario trato. Esa declaración cuando no estuviera viciada por la condición de empleado i de portorriqueño del declarante, de esos que, contrariamente a otros dignos de todo honor vienen a nuestro país a servir un cargo que estaría mejor atendido en mano de un nacional, a los cuales se los discuten, sería anulable por la prevención que trata a los dominicanos especialmente a Doroteo A. Regalado, a quien acusa de haberlo engañado por haber hablado en la conferencia en la que (Manuel del Toro Peralta) tuvo a su cargo la presentación al pueblo, no solamente de cuestiones obreras sino de la santa causa nacional.

La otra declaración de Ramón Hernandez es, aunque menos virulenta, de la misma factura que la primera, la declaración interesada de un portorriqueño empleado público, en servir mejor que a la verdad, un cargo que debiera estar desempeñando por un nativo de este suelo.

o obstante lo dicho, esas mismas declaraciones favorecen al acusado tan se observen en ellas la categórica afirmación de que ni se sintieron los antes incitados al desorden, ni a las revueltas, ni se sintió tampoco incitado orden ó a las revueltas el auditorio del Sr. Regalado, ni hubo en Barahona toda la República desordenes ó revueltas subsiguientemente a la cona del Sr. Regalado, por la pretendida concitación de sus palabras. Dice la parte final del artículo primero de la lei sobre Sedición (véase la Ejecutiva N° 572) que "para los efectos de este artículo el termino ion se interpretara. en arreglo a la indole o caracter del artículo o so, i la aceptación natural de los terminos empleados en los mismos." Juzgamos por analogía el caso de la pretendida violación por el Sr. do de la Orden Ejecutiva N° 385, se colige inmediatamente que está de lugar esa acusación notoriamente parcial é injusta, puesto que el so de Regalado, de finalidad relativa a la organización obrera, ha o ser, por su indole o caracter, jenuinamente pacifista.

ese modo se explica que el Sr. Regalado aconsejara a sus oyentes, al se al vital problema de la ocupación americana que se organizaran de a efectiva para contribuir a la obra de la restauración pacifica del país inada en los Estados Unidos por la Federación del Trabajo.

me parece que necesite insistir en demostrar que esa aspiración de ración nacional expresada por el Sr. Regalado, no pudo violar la ente Orden Ejecutiva N° 385, por haberla producido den tro del tono ido por esa misma Orden que no prohíbe que los dominicanos manifiesten liente deseo de retornar a su condición de pue blo libre i cabalmente no, mientras esas manifestaciones no pugnen con los preceptos establecidos Orden.

En oposición a la declaración de los dos ensañados acusadores del Sr. eo A. Regalado, habeis oído a los Sres Dr. Francisco Lucia no Hernandez, oliviades Albuerquerque, Virjilio Felix i Eladio Ramirez. Sus dea-es concurren, sin la mas leve contradicción a destruir la impostura lada contra el Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado, tan flojica, como carente de l. Con los testigos a cargo, ellos afirman que ni ellos, ni ningun individuo que formaron el auditorio del Sr. Regalado, se sintieron impulsados al len o a la revuelta; pero contrariamente a los gratuitos acusadores jeros, los testigos a descargo, que son personas de arraigo social en el liegan haber oído las frases que los acusadores ponen en voca de Regalado son el motivo de la acusación.

ndo por una apreciación dolorosa para la conciencia de los hombres, la ción de los testigos a descargo fuera considerada reticentemente por ser estigos de nacionalidad dominicana i reputa dos por esa razón parciales roteo A. Regalado, yo me permitiría repetiros que la declaración de los os a cargo no debe ser credál, por produciría individuos que han venido tranjero a disputarles sus puestos a los dominicanos i contra los cuales prevención i desconfianza; tal como lo ha probado el Sr. del Toro Peralta arar que lo habfan ultrajado en carteles puestos en la Gobernación de ona i en el pabimento del Parque Central, desconfianza i prevención que se recuenda que el testigo Eladio Ramirez afirma que en Barahona se nsistentemente al otro día de la conferencia de Regalado, que ésteiba a nunciado por el Sr. del Toro Peralta.

De cualquier modo que fuese lo conferencia del Sr. Regalado, esta Honor-orte no tiene otros medios para juzgarla que la prueba por testigos. Si cialmente juzga el caso, el balance de pruebas que deja la comparación de stigos a cargo i a descargo, es la duda. I la duda, Sres. Jueces, favorece al in dubio pro reo). Todo fallo condenatario dictado con la deleznable base duda es inhumano i subierte el órden social dando prenda de un lastimoso tu de decadencia.

De las razones expuesta se deduce:

• cuanto según las especificaciones entregadas en fecha 29 de Noviembre 20 al Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado i no modificada entiendo habil, se le acusa ber violado la Orden Ejecutiva No. 385;

• cuanto esa Arden Ejecutiva es virtuosamente inexistente por haber sido ada por la Orden Ejecutiva No. 572, intitulada "Lei de Sedición" de 6 de Diciembre de 1920, en sus números 2, 3, 4, i 5 que son los que pudieran • determinado una sanción contra el Sr. Regalado;

• cuanto no está comprobado que el Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado en su cona en Barahona en la noche del primero de Noviembre de 1920 se expresara en terminos substancialmente análogos a los que se le imputan en las acusaciones que le fueron notificada en fecha 29 de Noviembre de 1920.

Por cuanto, en consecuencia, no es cierto, o cuando menos no está probado, el Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado se expresara en la aludida conferencia con frases ostiles, o tan contrarias o tan difamatorias, deshonoras o ridiculizadoras, acerbamente criticas del Gobierno Militar, del Gobierno de los Estados Unidos de los empleados de estos, que incitaron al pueblo dominicano a la intranquilidad al desorden o a la revuelta;

Por tanto, respetuosamente os pido, en nombre del Sr. Doroteo A. Regalado, Sres. Jueces de esta Corte Marcial, que le descargéis de toda pena, primeramente, por no existir en la actualidad la Lei que determine sanción por el cargo que le fué hecho; demodo subsidiario por insuficiencia de prueba respecto del fundamento de la acusación que le fué entregada el 29 de Noviembre de 1920.

I habreis hecho justicia.

Sto. Domingo, Ibre Syde, 1920.

LUIS C. DEL CASTILLO

To the honorable superior provost court, of which Maj. Charles S. McRey is the president:

1. In July, 1920, a military accusation compelled me to make my own defense before this court. It was an unavoidable necessity of true defense that I came to the imposed jurisdiction before which I was taken. The acceptance of the mandate to assist Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado is of a like origin; he has been target of a like accusation; he has been compelled to appear before the foreign jurisdiction; and he has asked my assistance, without my being able to refuse, leaving him to his fate, thus failing to comply with the duty of fraternity toward my country people. I make this known to confirm that I assist Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado in disgrace not as a Dominican lawyer who can not practice law before other courts than those of the Republic, and can not admit the existence of other courts than those established by the Dominican constitution or created by Dominican legislators.

2. Without a recourse to arguments not in connection with the situation suffered by the Dominican people, it is necessary to observe that, according to principles, the accusation made against Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado, for violation of Executive order No. 385 has no legal efficiency since December 6 of this year, when by virtue of article No. 67, Executive order No. 572, entitled "An act on sedition," paragraphs Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 of Executive order No. 385 were revoked, which in fact comprises the revocation of the entire order, as it only left in effect its paragraph the text of which declares censorship in Santo Domingo, and the order entitled "Censorship," as published in the Gazette No. 2753, as well as all other laws, decrees, or orders establishing censorship abolished. It being the case that Executive order No. 385 was revoked on December 6 in so far as it refers to the accusation made against Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado, and inasmuch as the specifications preferred against him on November 29, 1920, have not been modified, this court is not qualified to impose a penalty for an act for which no sanction exists, according to the old judicial maxim, "Nulla pena sine lege" (no punishment without law).

It should be remembered, Messrs. Judges, that Doroteo A. Regalado has been brought on a charge of violating Executive order No. 385, according to specifications that were submitted to him under date of November 29, 1920; but having that this Executive order is now derogated, and hence, by virtue of derogation, it is impossible for you to dictate a sanction in accordance with the precepts therein contained, and in a like manner it is impossible for you to invoke an odd precept, other than that given in the mentioned specifications, to sanction the fault alleged to have been committed by the mentioned individual.

3. But if through an extraordinary act of conception on your part to the fault attributed to Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado in accordance with the provisions of an unexisting Executive order, you insist upon submitting him to its derogated provisions, you should stop to consider the superficial examination I make of the testimonies for the prosecution and for the defense, as these are the only means from which you get an analysis to bring forth the sentence you must render.

4. Two witnesses for the prosecution, Messrs. Manuel del Toro Peralta and Ramon Hernandez, confirm the charges contained in the specifications submitted to Doroteo A. Regalado on November 29, 1920; but if you impartially observe testimonies you will notice that they seem to be, rather than the truth, partial statements of two Porto Rican individuals, the result of emigration always sends to foreign countries the scum of the people; two individuals, a bureaucratic class determined to keep their positions even as against life, the personal security, and the property of Dominicans.

According to data obtained in the plenary of this trial, it is proven that one of the declarations commented upon is full of rancor and unlimited iniquity against Dominicans.

Refer to the statement of Mr. Manuel del Toro Peralta. If you read it over you will see with what malevolence he makes efforts to accuse a country that has given him hospitable treatment. This declaration, if not vitiated on account of the condition of employee and nationality of the declarant, one of whom, contrary to others worthy of praise, come to our country to fill a position that would be better handled by a Dominican, and for which positions they are against Dominicans, should be annulled because of the disposition to treat Dominicans, especially Doroteo A. Regalado, whom Toro Peralta accuses of having deceived him because of Regalado's speech at the conference, to which (Manuel del Toro Peralta) made the introduction to the people, by not only going about labor questions but about the sacred national cause.

Another declaration of Ramon Hernandez, although less malignant, is of a similar nature; it is the selfish declaration of a Porto Rican public employee, indeed in serving a position, which should be filled by a Dominican, rather than serving the truth.

Notwithstanding what has been stated, these declarations favor the accusation as long as it can be observed in itself the categorical assertion that neither of the declarants felt themselves incited to disorder or revolt, neither was there a revolution, nor anywhere else in the Republic, disorders or revolts after the sentence of Mr. Regalado on account of the pretended conception of his part.

The last part of article 1 of the sedition law (see executive order No. 385) reads: "Intent as used in this article may be conclusively presumed from the nature and character of the publication or speech and the natural meaning of the words used therein."

We judge by resemblance the case of the pretended violation by Mr. Regalado of executive order No. 385, it is immediately inferred that the accusation is groundless, because it is notoriously partial and unjust, as the speech of Regalado, relative to labor organization, must have been, by its character or nature, entirely pacific.

In this manner it is explanatory that Mr. Regalado should have suggested obedience, in referring to the vital problem of the American occupation, to organize themselves in an effective manner so as to contribute to the pacification of the country, supported in the United States by the Federation of Labor.

It seems to me that I need not insist upon demonstrating that the desire of national restoration expressed by Mr. Regalado could not violate the nonexistent executive order No. 386, for this desire was expressed within the terms of said order, which does not prohibit Dominicans manifesting their ardent desire to be freed to their condition of a free country with full sovereignty as long as such manifestations are not in conflict with the precepts of the order.

In opposition to the declaration of the two enraged accusers of Mr. Doroteo Regalado, you have heard Messrs. Dr. Francisco Luciano Hernandez, Lawyer Blas Alburquerque, Virgilio Felix, and Eladio Ramirez. Their declarations concur, without the least contradiction, to destroy the false imputation made against Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado, which is as illogical as deceitful. Like the witnesses for the prosecution, they assert that neither themselves nor any other individuals present at the conference of Mr. Regalado, felt incited to disorder or revolt, but contrary to the gratuitous foreign accusers, the witnesses for the defense, who are persons of social prestige in the country, deny to have uttered the expressions that the accusers claim to have been uttered by Regalado, which constitute the basis of the accusation.

Who are the witnesses to be trusted by the honorable court? If, through a powerful appreciation for the conscience of mankind, the reputation of the witnesses for the defense would be considered with reticence for the reason that they being Dominicans and reputedly partial to Doroteo A. Regalado, I should take the liberty to repeat that the declarations of the witnesses for the prosecution should not be relied upon, as they have been made by individuals who have come from abroad to strive against Dominicans for positions, full of prejudice and distrust for the Dominican people; this has been proven by Mr. Toro Peralta when he declares that he has been outraged by menacing signs posted at the Governor's Palace and the Central Park of Barahona. This prejudice and distrust has become reciprocal if we remember that the witness Eladio Ramirez affirms that it was insistently rumored at Barahona the next day after the conference of Regalado, that Mr. Regalado was to be denounced by Toro Peralta.

9. Whatever the conference of Mr. Regalado may have been, this honorific court has no other means to judge than by the testimonies presented by the witnesses. If the case is to be judged impartially, the balance of proof, obtained by comparing the statements of the witnesses for the prosecution and for the defense, brings forth the doubt. And the doubt, Messrs. Judges, favors the accused, "In dubio pro reo." Any condemnatory decision rendered on a brittle basis of doubt is immoral and subverts social order, giving proof of a doleful spirit of decadence.

10. From the reasons given it is inferred: Whereas according to specifications delivered to Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado under date of November 29, 1920, not modified at the proper time, he is accused of having violated Executive Order No. 385.

Whereas that Executive order is virtually nonexistent, as it was derived by Executive order No. 572, entitled "Sedition law" and dated December 6, 1920, in its articles 2, 3, 4, and 5, according to which a sanction could have been determined for Mr. Regalado.

Whereas it has not been proven that Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado, in his lecture at Barahona on the night of November 1, 1920, expressed himself in terms substantially analogous to those attributed to him in the specification given under date of November 29, 1920.

Whereas in consequence thereof, it is not true, or at least it has not been proven, that Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado expressed himself in said lecture in hostile terms, or so contrary or defamatory, dishonorable, ridiculing, or bitterly criticizing the military government, the Government of the United States, or their employees, that would incite the Dominican people to war, disorder, or revolt.

Therefore, I respectfully ask you, in the name of Mr. Doroteo A. Regalado, Messrs. Judges of this martial court, that you free him from charges and accusations, principally, on account of the nonexistence of a law that would determine a sanction for the charges made against him; in a subsidiary way, the reason to insufficiency of proof to base the accusation that was delivered to him on November 29, 1920.

And you will be rendering justice.

LUIS C. DEL CASTILLO

SANTO DOMINGO CITY, December 17, 1920.

JANUARY 3, 1921

The proceedings, findings, and sentence in the foregoing case of Doroteo A. Regalado, an inhabitant of the Dominican Republic, are approved.

The public prison, Fort Ozama, Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, designated as the place of confinement in the event of failure to pay the fine or any part thereof.

HENRY C. DAVIS,

*Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps,
District Commander, Southern District, Dominican Republic*

CLOSING ARGUMENT OF THE RECORDER IN THE CASE OF DOROTEO A. REGALADO, AN INHABITANT OF SALCEDO, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

The two witnesses for the prosecution testified that the accused, in his lecture at Barahona, Dominican Republic, on November 1, 1920, did attack the United States and the military government of Santo Domingo. This in violation of Executive Order No. 385, of the military government of Santo Domingo. The accused asked one of the witnesses for the prosecution to introduce him at the meeting, well knowing that this witness was a Government employee, thereby trying to involve this witness in his propaganda against the military government, and it would appear the accused thought that by being introduced at the meeting by this witness, it would give him certain protection. Both for the prosecution testified that the accused used words and phrases toward the United States and the military government of Santo Domingo—a Government which has done more for the welfare of the people of Santo Domingo than any other Government of Santo Domingo since its discovery by Columbus. One witness for the defense admitted having heard the speech and said that the people of Santo Domingo do not accept the intervention of the United States, as they had no right to intervene. One witness for the defense stated that he heard the speech of the accused between the hours of 10.30 p. m.; another witness for the defense heard it between the hours of 10 p. m.; and a third witness for the defense between the hours of 9 p. m. The two witnesses for the prosecution and two witnesses for the defense testified that that part of the speech concerning the organization of the Government was written, but the political part was improvised. The main difference between witnesses was as to the words used and the meaning derived from the political portion of the speech of the accused. The testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution was positive, and asserts the use of certain words, the only reasonable interpretation of which is hostile to the military government, and some of them can mean nothing but that the people should resort to violence. For instance, reference to shedding blood can have no other meaning but that the people should be prepared to fight. The fact that the revolt has not resulted from the speech does not prove that the people heard the speech were not moved toward such resort. If people hearing the speech are in sympathy therewith or become converted thereby, the fact that they are restrained by other considerations from acting at once upon the suggestions, does not prove that damage to law and order has not resulted. The assassination of the Austrian Archduke, which act precipitated the World War, was, no doubt, the outcome of months, if not years, of propaganda working on the mind of the assassin. It may take many speeches and actions of a violent nature to finally move the masses to violence; to hold that it is necessary for any particular utterance to bring about immediate revolt is to make impossible the conviction of anyone for even the most radical actions. Even where riot does not result immediately after a speech, the speaker is almost, without exception, moved by many other considerations, perhaps other speeches, and the one immediately preceding the riot is but a finality—the straw, as it were. The reason whatever has appeared during the trial for the witnesses for the prosecution to have testified falsely; in fact, it would appear that their testimony as to what they heard the accused say has caused a certain amount of confusion in their home town, and thus was damaging to them. It appears that they testified solely from a sense of duty and truth. Sympathy between witnesses for the defense and the accused was evident, and it is subordinated that there was, to say the least, a lack of will on their part to remember particular utterances of the accused. That part of the speech was hostile to the Government is clear. The difference between witnesses is mainly as to the extent of that hostility and severity of the criticism.

OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL,
SANTO DOMINGO CITY, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.
January 11, 1921.

to: Provost marshal.

District commander Southern District.

Returned. The accused informed this date. Confinement takes effect January 5, 1921. Fine not paid.

J. H. FAY.

Senator ODDIE. Was substantial food offered you during the hunger strike?
Mr. REGOLADO. Yes.

STATEMENT OF R. Y. PAU—Resumed.

Mr. KNOWLES. There are just two items in this statement here that I wish a witness to clarify for the information of the committee.

Senator POMERENE. You are showing him the record which was introduced the other day, I take it.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, Senator.

Senator McCORMICK. Let me note that Commander Mayo has filed a statement bearing on this subject.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I understand that one has been filed, Senator. I have not had a chance to see it yet.

Mr. HOWE. It was filed yesterday evening.

Mr. KNOWLES. Still I have not had a chance to see it, notwithstanding the fact.

Mr. HOWE. You have not been denied the opportunity.

Mr. KNOWLES. Certainly not. Denied nothing.

Under this statement, Mr. Pau, I read, as follows:

"The fidelity fund was seized upon to cover speculations incurred by Gustav Schaldt and Frederick A. Edwards, American captains of the police. Checks No. so-and-so, for $1,089.17, and a check to another man for $1,089.17, respectively, served to fill up the holes opened by this couple."

Will you explain just what is the fidelity fund, and what it was used for?

Mr. PAU. In the National Guardia, which is to-day the Dominican national constabulary, there were some defalcations by American officers, of which I mention the following cases: Capt. Gustav Schaldt, Capt. Frederick A. Edwards, defalcation on the part of the first to the amount of $1,089.17 and the second $1,085.99. The numbers of checks which were paid were 125653 and 125654, and it is known that said individuals were not submitted to justice nor have they been seen since that in Santo Domingo. We suspect that they have gone.

Senator McCORMICK. I do not want anything in the record from the mouth of this witness that does not belong there, and I leave it to you to check.

Mr. KNOWLES. Perhaps I will ask him questions. It will be better. We will have the custom—first describe what is the fidelity fund.

Mr. PAU. It is a fund expressly created to cover defalcations.

Senator McCORMICK. What does he mean "to cover defalcations"? Does that mean that it is an insurance fund?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. Let him say so, then.

Mr. KNOWLES. How is the fund created?

Mr. PAU. The fund was created by the Government with a sum which was voted by law. It is increased by an annual contribution from public employees.

Mr. KNOWLES. How contributed?

Mr. PAU. A certain amount is deducted from the salary of each employee from the salary of the first month of the year.

Senator POMERENE. For how long a period has that been the law?

Mr. PAU. I can not state exactly.

Senator POMERENE. Well, approximately.

Mr. PAU. For about three or four years.

Senator POMERENE. Was that adopted since the American occupation first arrived here?

Mr. PAU. Yes, sir.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you state, if you know, how many defalcations have been that have been covered by this fund?

Mr. PAU. I remember a few. For example, the collector of internal revenue in La Romana had a deficit of about $2,000 or $3,000 in 1917. He was taken before a justice and sentenced. He was a Dominican. This year, or the end of last year, there was a deficit in the postal department of about $24,000, and no one was submitted to justice, but the director of the internal revenue department constituted himself a judge—

Senator McCORMICK. Wait a minute. Has the witness the right to say whether the director constituted himself a judge?

Mr. KNOWLES. I didn't know he was going to answer that. I will have him stricken out.

Senator McCORMICK. Now, will you be good enough, through the interpreter to advise this witness not to introduce comment as he goes along. The committee is seeking to hear facts with absolute impartiality, and I will say frankly that some of your witnesses don't testify with impartiality as to facts. Now, before he goes on, will he give the names of the American officers?

Mr. KNOWLES. They have been given already.

Senator McCORMICK. Are they in the record?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

iator McCORMICK. Will you give them, please. I want to have them d up.

he names were read by the stenographer as follows: "Capt. Gustav idt, Capt. Frederick A. Edwards.") iator McCORMICK. Continue.

. PAU. I wish to state that if I have said anything that I ought not to said, I beg to be excused.

. KNOWLES. How many employees in the post office were there that were ved in this robbery transaction?

. PAU. I can not state. I know that three Americans were suspended from after investigation; two Americans and a Porto Rican.

. KNOWLES. Were there any Dominicans?

. PAU. No; no Dominicans were suspended.

iator POMERENE. Now, let me suggest that we not leave this record in shape. If this witness has any charges to make against a man, whether an American, Dominican, or Porto Rican, let him give the names. We trace it down.

. KNOWLES. Do you know the names of the two Americans and the Porto who were suspended?

. PAU. Yes.

. KNOWLES. Will you give them to the committee?

. PAU. Mr. De la Rue, the receiver of postal accounts, Mr. Mayo, an old a civilian.

. KNOWLES. What was his position.

. PAU. I don't remember.

. KNOWLES. And the other one?

. PAU. Mr. Callejas, a Porto Rican.

iator POMERENE. Let him give the first name if he can.

. KNOWLES. He says he can not give the first name.

. PAU. I wish to state furthermore, that I don't state that those three iduals were guilty, but their suspension coincided with the time the in- gation was opened in connection with the alleged defalcation.

iator McCORMICK. Are you certain that they were all suspended?

. PAU. Yes.

iator McCORMICK. That none of them resigned to take places elsewhere?

. PAU. The press commented on the affair and Mr. Callejas wrote an article e Liston Diario stating that he had served faithfully and had been un- y thrown out of office.

iator McCORMICK. Now, before the witness terminates, what was the date, der that I may have it again, of his dismissal?

. PAU. The 30th of June, 1921.

iator McCORMICK. And he has been employed at one or at two different es?

. PAU. I work in two houses as a bookkeeper, an hour in each house.

iator McCORMICK. He has been employed at La Romano.

. PAU. I was before an employe of the department.

iator McCORMICK. Where have you been employed since?

. PAU. The Liston Diario is one.

iator McCORMICK. He is employer at the Liston Diario, and what is the t?

. PAU. Vela & Co.

iator McCORMICK. Has he had any other place of employment since e 30?

. PAU. No.

iator McCORMICK. Was he employed at the bank before or after he was loyed at La Romano?

. PAU. Before.

.r. KNOWLES. This is a letter from the bank when he went to accept a posi- at La Romano.

iator McCORMICK. He doesn't want us to put it in the file, does he?

.r. KNOWLES. No; he merely wants to show the date, and he apparently with the consent of the bank, otherwise they would not have given him t letter.

iator McCORMICK. Let me note that the report shows that Capt. Schaidt s arrested and committed suicide.

.r. PAU. I am glad to know it.

Senator McCORMICK. Well, now that is the end of it. I won't hear any testimony from a witness who says those things. He has been treated—all the other witnesses—with absolute courtesy.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, let us see what he means by that.

Senator McCORMICK. Well, his demeanor.

Mr. KNOWLES. All right, Senator. Let us treat the witness fairly. Why you make the remark that you were glad to know? Was it that you were glad the man was dead, or glad to know what had happened to the man? What was not tried?

Mr. PAU. I was glad to get that information, because I didn't know what became of this man.

Senator McCORMICK. I will give you the record on Edwards.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you read this last paragraph?

(The interpreter read something in Spanish.)

Senator McCORMICK. How is that to appear in the record, Mr. Knowles? It has just been read by the interpreter?

Mr. KNOWLES. This is in the record. I am reading from a document that has already been introduced.

Senator McCORMICK. Will you indicate to the stenographer, then, that is it?

Senator POMERENE. Indicate the document from which you are reading. Otherwise there will be some uncertainty about it.

Mr. KNOWLES. This is from a document that was filed, I think, day before yesterday.

Senator POMERENE. Well, it was a written memorandum filed by this witness on a previous day.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Relative to accounts.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. That will identify it.

Mr. KNOWLES. I refer now to page 3, and the last paragraph. I will read this paragraph: "In a skirmish, arisen at 8 p. m. in the very center of Santo Domingo, between the American marines and a certain number of members of the Dominican national police, a Syrian named Abraham Kharab was severely wounded in the left shoulder. As a result, a claim was put forward by this foreigner through the French diplomatic agent residing at Santo Domingo, and subsequently a check was tendered to this gentleman, Monsieur Henry Ponsignon Barre, No. 143962, for $1,500, as an indemnification for injury." Do you want to explain in regard to that matter?

Mr. PAU. I was told not to make any comments and I don't wish to make any.

Senator POMERENE. What is the statement there for, then?

Mr. KNOWLES. For what purpose is this statement put in this memorandum?

Mr. PAU. Then I will make comment.

Senator POMERENE. There is no use wasting the time of the committee with statements of that kind. Insinuations come in here without any attempt at explanation. It is not in harmony with any fair-minded investigation that can be made anywhere by anybody.

Mr. KNOWLES. Please state to the witness that he is invited or has been invited by this committee if you know of any facts that will explain or cast any light upon the matter stated in that paragraph you can make such a statement in writing, and it will be received by this committee and given the consideration they may think it deserves.

Mr. PAU. I will be very pleased to do so.

Senator McCORMICK. It is now 1 o'clock, gentlemen. Has this witness anything more to testify to?

Mr. PAU. Nothing more.

Senator McCORMICK. I think we will conclude the hearing, then. Will you let me have, if you can to-day, as many of those names—those 15 names of witnesses to which reference was made earlier and the subject matter to which they propose to testify if called?

Mr. KNOWLES. We will, Senator. Shall we proceed?

Senator McCORMICK. You told me you had one or two witnesses. How many more do you expect to offer to-day?

Mr. KNOWLES. Only until the time the committee wishes to adjourn. I have a number of witnesses here.

ator McCORMICK. It is 1 o'clock, and when we rise I do not expect to be the hearing. We have a number of engagements on our last afternoon.

KNOWLES. How many minutes before the committee will rise?

ator McCORMICK. There are avenues of inquiry the committee has pursued than those which have been offered by counsel here. My own disposition is to adjourn now until we meet in Washington.

KNOWLES, I think, as Senator Pomerene suggests in more detail than I already suggested, that you submit the list of names, which you have stated would number about 15, and what you intend to prove by each, so that we may consider whether we will take testimony from them, if so, how many of them.

KNOWLES. The Senator, I presume, has been informed of your request this morning of the subjects that either had not been or will be covered.

ator McCORMICK. Well, I told him that there were twelve topics that I had. I have not given them to him in detail. I have them somewhere about. They have been noted down.

KNOWLES. I will prepare, Senator, such a list for you and submit it to you this afternoon.

The committee will permit me to say so, and by way of explaining to the members here present, I wish to state that the committee, in my judgment, as these proceedings have gone, has shown in every respect the impartiality they promised the people when they started these hearings. That I finally not only have no complaint to make, but have the pleasure of expressing my thanks to each member of the committee who has sat here.

Moreover, in respect to witnesses who have not been heard and who are here is building, and, indeed, those who have the most important testimony yet received, I submit to the committee that the committee has through its chairman signified to me a desire to provide such opportunity and arrangements, so far as such a matter lies within his power or control, in which in every way all of the testimony or protest will be given a satisfactory chance of opportunity to be presented to the committee.

ator McCORMICK. Let me say by way of conclusion that the committee neither called nor invited witnesses to appear before it at any time since it left the Capital of the United States. It has heard those who have presented themselves. It has received written depositions and memorials presented to it. Those who may care to bring facts or opinions to the attention of the committee but who have not personally come before it, I am asked by my colleague to see that depositions or memorials may be forwarded to the committee in care of the Senate at Washington.

r. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, that I may understand thoroughly what that means, do I understand that in the nature of a decision of the committee that will be the only manner in which additional testimony will be taken?

ator McCORMICK. Mr. Knowles, I think there is no such implication. I did not have a chance, as you know, to confer with a majority of the committee on the taking of additional testimony in Washington. That statement was made because, perhaps, there are some individuals who wish independently to state their views or your associates to make their views known who may not care to embark upon a journey. It is in order to fulfill the policy which has actuated the committee from the beginning of throwing open the doors as widely as possible to all who have proven facts or considered and competent opinions to offer. The committee is adjourned.

Whereupon the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.)

HEARING INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1922.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

The committee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 11 o'clock a. m., March 8, 1922, in the committee room in the Capitol, Senator Medill McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, and Pomerene.
Also present: Mr. Ernest Angell, Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, and Maj. Edwin McClellan, United States Marine Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will hear Mr. Gruening. Mr. Gruening, will you state your name, occupation, and place of residence?

STATEMENT OF MR. ERNEST H. GRUENING, MANAGING EDITOR OF THE NATION, 324 WEST ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. GRUENING. Ernest H. Gruening, journalist, managing editor of the Nation, 324 West One hundred and third Street, New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. You have made how many visits to Haiti, Mr. Gruening?

Mr. GRUENING. One.

The CHAIRMAN. And how long did that last?

Mr. GRUENING. From November 9 until November 30, 1921—about three weeks and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell the committee first what you saw of Haiti, and much you traveled over the country, etc.?

Mr. GRUENING. Aside from seeing the capital and the country immediately surrounding it, I made a trip along the north side of the arm which projects outward as far as through the towns of Leogane, Petit Goave, Grand Goave, Miragoane. I crossed the mountains, visiting various small places in the interior, a place called Ponds des Negres. Moving in a southerly direction, I reached the towns of Aquin, St. Louis de Sud, Cavallion, and other smaller ones on the way. That is the extent of my travels around Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. Please proceed now, in your own fashion, to give the committee what you think might be useful to it in the way of information and suggestions which you formed.

Mr. ANGELL. May I take that in the form of questions?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you tell the committee how you came to have any personal interest in Haiti and the present problem this committee is considering?

Mr. GRUENING. My interest began and lay in the fact that from what I had learned through certain news items and through very occasional bits of information, what the United States had done in Haiti was contrary to its most fundamental traditions; that it was in violation of the principles we had always espoused; that it was in direct contradiction to the principles for which we engaged in the World War.

Mr. ANGELL. These were your preliminary conclusions as a result of the matters that first came to your attention?

Mr. GRUENING. That was my presumption.

Mr. ANGELL. Then what greater personal familiarity did you acquire the situation in Haiti prior to your visit last November?

Mr. GRUENING. Then when I became managing editor of The Nation in 1920, The Nation already had published one or two articles which had on the Haitian question, written by individuals who had visited Haiti shortly thereafter two other men visited Haiti, came back to New York, told me the story of their experiences.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were those men?

Mr. GRUENING. The first was Herbert J. Seligman.

Mr. ANGELL. Was he sent to Haiti by The Nation, or at your suggestion?

Mr. GRUENING. No; I had never seen him or talked with him before turn and visit at The Nation. He had been sent down, he told me, by Harper's Magazine. The outline of what he had seen struck me as of great importance. It revealed that many things had been happening in Haiti were totally unknown to the American people, and as we were then in the era of pitiless publicity, I thought it would be a public service to give wider publicity, and accordingly he published an article in The Nation appeared, I believe, in July, 1920. This article was sent to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, with a request for editorial criticism. It was sent to the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Josephus Daniels, was sent to the Commandant of the Marine Corps, Gen. John A. Lejeune. An answer was received from the Secretary or Assistant Secretary, but an answer was received from General Lejeune, which was published in The Nation which said that any mistakes which had been made were of a type which inevitably occur in a military occupation.

Senator POMERENE. Have you that letter? Let it be inserted in the record. (The letter referred to by Mr. Gruening will be furnished for the record and printed in the appendix.)

Mr. GRUENING. Shortly after that another man who had been in Haiti whose experience had been somewhat different from Mr. Seligman's came to add that Mr. Seligman had spent his entire time in company with the occupation. He had traveled around in the interior with the marines. He had been the guest of the officers. The second man, Mr. James Weldon Johnson, the same gentleman who testified at these hearings last November, had been associated largely with the Haitians, and he presented another side of the picture which, however, corroborated the impression Mr. Seligman had given. His articles were published, and they attracted the attention of the then presidential candidate, Mr. Warren G. Harding, who gave them further publicity by his endorsement as follows:

"So many things have been done by the present expiring administration that no power on earth could induce me to do that I can not even attempt to do them. I may remark casually, however, that if I should be, as I fully expect to be, elected President of this just and honorable Republic, I will not employ an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to draft a constitution for helpless subjects in the West Indies and jam it down their throats at the point of bayonet by United States marines. We have a higher service for our marines than that. Nor will I misuse the power of the Executive to cover a veil of secrecy repeated acts of unwarranted interference in domestic affairs of the little Republics of the Western Hemisphere, such as in the last few years we have not only made enemies of those who should be our friends but have completely discredited our country as their trusted neighbor."

That was sent on August 28 from the front porch at Marion.

During this period The Nation, which had partly begun to interest the American people in Haiti, although there had been an article previously published in the Yale Review by Mr. Warfield Storey, of which we were not aware at that time, continued to comment on the developments as they came up.

Following the statement of the President, Secretary Daniels offered a resolution and sent a commission to investigate, which, I think is a matter of record, reported very little wrong.

Then there was the statement of Major General Barnett relating to the extrajudicial killings.

The matter became increasingly one of public interest, and my interest was for the reasons that I have stated, that I felt that it had been a very serious breach of all that we profess as Americans, and that anything that we could do to right the situation was a public and an American service.

When the committee was about to go down there, the chairman recommended that the editor of The Nation was invited to accompany it. He was unwilling.

this invitation, much to his regret, because of the conflict with the Armée in Washington, which he felt he had to attend, but suggested that the chairman would extend the invitation to me as managing editor, next in rank on the Nation, which the chairman was kind enough to do. ANGELL. Just before coming to that, will you make brief reference to what mission you individually, or the Nation, had with the three delegates from the Union Patriotique of Haiti last spring, Mr. Pauleus Sannon, Mr. Perceval and Mr. Stenio Vincent? I want to bring out what the fundamental cause to this problem was of the influential members of the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independent Society.

GRUENING. I learned in the spring of 1921 that the Haitians were sending a delegation to lay their protest directly before the new administration in the campaign pledges. I had no previous knowledge of this plan, except prior to their arrival, when a letter was received by Mr. Johnson, I believe, and had contacts in Haiti and who called the matter to my attention. Delegates visited us when they were in New York, and undertook the preparation of a memoir so that their facts would be in writing, and subsequently to Washington, where they attempted to present it to the Department of State.

I believe they were unable to see anyone in authority, but left the matter.

EDITOR POMERENE. Left it where?

GRUENING. At the Department of State, and also sent it to various persons. I don't know just which ones.

ANGELL. That memoir, for the purpose of identification, is the first document appearing in part 1 of the printed hearings before this committee.

GRUENING. One of the members of that delegation remained until the closing of these hearings and appeared at the first hearing, I believe, last night, Mr. Vincent, and formally presented the memoir to this committee.

ANGELL. Now, will you state briefly, Mr. Gruening, what your purpose was in going to Haiti early in November last?

GRUENING. Well, my purposes were several. In the first place I wanted to get as much first-hand information as I could on the situation. I wanted to see things with my own eyes. I wanted to find out what the Haitians thought, what their hopes were, what they expected the United States to do.

I also wanted, on my own account, to do what I could to see that the case which they had was properly presented, and that their case was effectively stated.

CHAIRMAN. I think on that last point this question would be appropriate: mean that you expected to assure testimony as to facts by the witnesses?

GRUENING. Yes, sir.

ANGELL. Now, will you tell us the types and kinds of Haitians and Americans in Haiti with whom you came into personal contact during your stay?

GRUENING. I talked with all kinds and all classes of persons there; persons who were in the so-called Government; persons who were active members of the Haitian Patriotic Union; persons connected with neither one nor the other; persons of means; common people; in fact, every type of Haitian that I could find and talk to within the period that I was there.

ANGELL. You speak French readily, I understand?

GRUENING. I do.

ANGELL. As you lived abroad?

GRUENING. I went to school in France.

ANGELL. Now give us, as nearly accurately as you can, a picture of the sentiments which you found among the native Haitians toward the United States—toward the military occupation.

GRUENING. In general, I should say that I found the sentiment toward the United States one of friendliness combined with astonishment. I found a very general belief among the Haitians that the American people could not be authorized, could not be fully aware of just what had happened in Haiti, and that the educated Haitians, at least, seemed to be conversant with some of the high spots in American history, and they all had the greatest hopes that the situation would change radically, completely. I found specifically that the Haitians hoped a great deal from the senatorial committee. There was mixed with this hope a good deal of doubt and a good deal of cynicism, which was based, according to their statement, on the fact that two previous inquiries had been conducted by the Navy had not brought about the results for which they had hoped; and I was frequently asked whether this committee, using the French word, was a "serieuse" committee, which means a more than the American word "serious." I think it means: Would be there going; would get to the bottom of things.

As far as the sentiments of the Haitians to the occupation was concerned, I found no one who had not very grave criticism to make of that. I found two persons among those to whom I spoke who wanted the occupation to last for a time. I found no one who wanted the occupation to stay longer than sufficient time to secure adequate stability, policing, and order.

As I have stated in something that I have written, I found in the sentiment varying shades of opinion. I found that the majority of those with whom I spoke wanted the occupation to retire at the earliest possible moment—a matter of days or weeks.

I found a certain other group that when pinned down hedged a little bit to that. They wanted the United States to get out, and yet they wanted the United States to stay in long enough to give the Haitians certain of the benefits which they felt had been their due, which had been promised them by the convention of 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. For example?

Mr. GRUENING. For example, the creation of an effective gendarmerie, officered by Haitian officers; the establishment of the Haitian finances on a more efficient, and modern basis. Those were the main ones.

Senator POMERENE. Would you say that was the prevailing sentiment?

Mr. GRUENING. The second one?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GRUENING. I would say this, Senator Pomerene, that I should say that that sentiment would have been nearly universal provided with it would be the assurance of a definite and complete return of their sovereignty at the end of that period. In other words, the Haitians feared that hand in hand with the benefits they might get should they ask for them would go a complete destruction of their sovereignty. As between those two they wanted their sovereignty without conditions. In other words, when I put the question to them in that way, "Well, supposing that staying in means a more or less indefinite control of your customs for some time; supposing that it means a relation to the United States such as the Platt amendment?" they would raise up their hands and say, "Absolutely not. We want our liberty, our sovereignty returned to us without condition, and if there was any risk of exceeding further with the United States that we would not want that; they would take all the risks and take our sovereignty no matter what may happen."

Senator POMERENE. Were these remarks which you are reflecting those of the leaders and members of this particular group, the Union Patriotique, or did you find these sentiments to be more widespread than that membership?

Mr. GRUENING. This that I have cited is the prevailing, the widest average view. I found that the members of the Union Patriotique wanted conditions whatever. They simply wanted the United States to retire immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. Retire with celerity?

Mr. GRUENING. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me ask you another question. Did you find any American who even suggested or hinted at our depriving the Haitians of their sovereignty?

Mr. GRUENING. Did I find any Americans?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; either there or anywhere else. Who suggested?

Mr. GRUENING. There was a condition in Haiti. The Haitians are now deprived of their sovereignty.

Senator POMERENE. Well, we were talking about the matter as a permanent affair. You have spoken now about the prevailing sentiment being to stay there to bring about certain conditions which you have described. I find you speak of depriving them of their sovereignty, etc. My question is: Did you find any Americans, either there or elsewhere, who said that they wanted the United States to deprive them of their sovereignty. I am speaking of a permanent policy, or something of that kind.

Mr. GRUENING. I found that those Americans down there with whom I came who were friendly to the staying in of the occupation seemed to assume that it is not a direct answer, but I am trying to get at your question as nearly as I can—seemed to assume that the occupation would be permanent—that is, say, it would involve a certain destruction of Haitian sovereignty. That it would become more or less an American protectorate.

ator POMERENE. Now, you say "seemed to assume." On what do you base reference?

GRUENING. I base this on statements of this character: "We have got to ere and run this country." "These people will never be fit to govern lives."

CHAIRMAN. These were the opinions expressed by civilians or representatives of the American Government?

GRUENING. These were mostly, I should say, opinions expressed by us.

CHAIRMAN. With a financial interest in the country?

GRUENING. Yes.

CHAIRMAN. American business men?

GRUENING. Yes; American business men.

ator POMERENE. Now, let me ask you another question: Did you find any particular who ever suggested that we were going to permanently deprive either in whole or in part, of their sovereignty?

GRUENING. I have a newspaper clipping here which is presumably an Associated Press dispatch, because it was carried widely, from the Atlanta Georgian. I can not vouch for the accuracy of this, but I take it it is correct. The heading: "Haiti safer than New York at night, says Russell": "Although he described Haiti and San Domingo as 'completely pacified,' Russell said the 17,000 marines stationed on the island would remain 'indefinitely.'" ator POMERENE. What is the date of that?

GRUENING. March 3, 1922.

ator POMERENE. And who is Russell—Brigadier General Russell?

GRUENING. Brigadier General Russell, who has just been appointed American commissioner.

ator POMERENE. Now, is that the only matter on which you base a statement of that character?

GRUENING. No. No one in Haiti that I talked with knew definitely what policy of the United States would be. The expressions that I heard merely indicated that general attitude which I just expressed, that the United States have to stay in there to run the country. In the cases where it was thus expressed, it seemed to be obvious that the wish was father to the thought; that these persons who had thus spoken had the control or the say of the American policy, that that would have been the policy.

ator POMERENE. That statement of General Russell's is simply to the effect, understand it, that the marines would be there indefinitely?

GRUENING. Indefinitely.

ator POMERENE. That might mean three months or six months, and it is as it says—"indefinitely." I suppose depending upon conditions as they develop.

GRUENING. That would not be my interpretation of it, Senator.

ator POMERENE. Well, that would be mine.

GRUENING. I found two persons among those to whom I spoke who, while using in general terms that they wanted the return of Haitian sovereignty, that the occupation could not withdraw at this time. They were the President of Haiti and his brother, the Minister of the Interior. Both of them stated that if the occupation would withdraw at this time the Government would fall here would be riots.

ator POMERENE. When was that statement made to you, Mr. Gruening?

GRUENING. During the first 10 days I was there.

ator POMERENE. You mean during the time you were down there?

GRUENING. During the time I was down there. I had several interviews with the President and several with his brother.

There was a distinct change in the sentiment of the Haitians toward military following the receipt of the information concerning the method by which the treaty had been imposed in 1915. That was published in the United States at about that time.

ANGELL. Do you refer to the testimony of Admiral Caperton before this committee?

GRUENING. I refer to the testimony of Admiral Caperton, and particularly his dispatch to Captain Durrell saying that the object of the mission was to conclude a treaty, and that he was making progress in that direction means of military pressure.

ator POMERENE. Is that in the record?

Mr. ANGEL. Yes, sir; that is in the record; at the top of page 353 is the message that was inserted in the record by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GRUENING. And one more message at that time, namely, the message Secretary Daniels pursuing that same thought, that if the Haitian Senate not ratify the treaty the occupation of the island would become permanent.

Mr. ANGELL. Just refer to that message, will you?

Mr. GRUENING. That is on page 394 of the record.

Mr. ANGELL. The date.

Mr. GRUENING. Sent on November 10, 1915.

Up to that time certain of the persons with whom I was in more or less daily contact had not known of the exact methods by which the treaty was concluded. They had been under the general impression that there had been a sort of moral coercion, perhaps, but had no knowledge that it had been imposed directly by these methods. And they then said, people who up to that time had hoped for some degree of cooperation with the United States previous to withdrawal, that in view of these methods they could not see how an honest basis of progress could be made with the United States short of preliminary abrogation of that convention imposed by those methods.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by "preliminary abrogation"?

Mr. GRUENING. They felt that the relations of the United States with Haiti were based on force and on fraud, and were consequently invalid, and should be so held by the United States. They felt, as many of them stated to me, that the United States had deliberately come in and stolen their country by virtue of superior force. They felt that the United States, being great and powerful and that they being then—

The CHAIRMAN. Now, these are the people you mention that spoke French?

Mr. GRUENING. These are Haitians.

The CHAIRMAN. Precisely, but I am distinguishing between those that are Creole and those that speak French.

Mr. GRUENING. Yes. They felt that they were naturally within the orbit of the United States, within our sphere of influence, and that relations with us always have to be of a more or less intimate and friendly nature, but that no progress could be made in that direction unless the United States had abrogated a treaty imposed by such methods, methods which destroyed the entire idea of free consent on the part of the Haitians. I heard that expressed universally. Even the President said to me that while he had signed the convention himself under pressure in 1915, that he had always resented it. That he hoped it would be abrogated. That he had never ceased to protest against the nonfulfillment of its terms.

Senator POMERENE. In what respect?

Mr. GRUENING. He referred particularly to testimony given before the M. C. court of inquiry in 1920, which I believe gives a more or less complete statement of his grievances in regard to the nonexecution of the convention.

Senator POMERENE. Well, recite them here in brief.

The CHAIRMAN. Major McClellan, will you see that we have that passed.

Major MCCLELLAN. Yes, sir. It is already before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I wish you would mark it for our information.

Major MCCLELLAN. Yes, sir. I remember the testimony.

Senator POMERENE. Are you referring specially to the financial matter?

Mr. GRUENING. Among others. Financial lack of stability.

The CHAIRMAN. What does he mean by lack of stability?

Mr. GRUENING. The time had not arrived when the occupation could withdraw or abolish martial law. One of his grievances was the continuation of martial law. I want to add there as my own personal observation that I do not believe that what the President said to me at various times necessarily represents his views. He says things at different times depending upon effect. I merely cite that as the things he did say to me.

Senator POMERENE. That is, you mean to say that he as the President would tell you one story when he entertained different views about the matter?

Mr. GRUENING. Yes; I do.

Mr. ANGELL. Or that his mind changed from time to time.

Mr. GRUENING. Or that his mind changed from time to time. I have had on a definite experience that I had when I was in Haiti. When I interviewed the President for the first time I asked him what the Haitian demands were. What it was that the Haitian people desired of the United States, and he told me in a general way the restoration of their sovereignty, their freedom, to abolish all martial law, and I said, "Are you going to tell this to the "Well," he said, "of course I can not testify before the committee. I have already stated some of my objections before the Mayo court, and more-over I have a crowd of political enemies who are constantly attacking me, so I can not make it impossible for me to speak in the name of the country." I said, "Well, I have spoken to those people, and I find they are pretty nearly in agreement with you on these questions, and I think that the committee ought to hear from you and from all these various groups."

ANGELL. What people were you referring to?

GRUENING. I was referring to his so-called enemies, or members of the patriotic union.

ANGELL. Do you mean enemies of the President?

GRUENING. Enemies of the President, political enemies. He said, 'I like nothing better than to unite with these people and to present to the committee a statement of Haitian aims, but that is impossible. These persons will not cooperate with me.'

ANGELL. I stated this conversation to some of these members, and they stated the result of that, namely, that they were always willing to cooperate with the committee, but that he would never cooperate with them.

ANGELL. Now, who were these people?

GRUENING. These were the officers, executive committee, and members of the patriotic union.

ANGELL. Well, as you have named the President here, etc., I think you should give these names as well.

GRUENING. Stenio Vincent, Perceval Thoby, Pauleus Sannon, M. Morpeau, Louis Lussan, L. Pavin, G. Sylvain, Jeannot, Lespinasse, and others. That is about a dozen.

ANGELL. The next time I saw the President I told him that, and he said, "Well, I like nothing better." "Well," I said, "why don't you get together with these people and present a statement to the committee of your aims and desires and your hopes?" He again protested that they would not do this.

ANGELL. I told the members of this group said that if the President would ask them to go to the palace they would be delighted to present such a joint memorandum to make a statement of their common aims. I took this message to the President, and he said that he would be delighted to receive such a delegation, but that he himself could not invite them; that if they would make a request to be received he would receive them. They made such a request and it was received.

ANGELL. For POMERENE. Now, are they the same men that you spoke of?

GRUENING. The patriotic union made such a request.

ANGELL. For POMERENE. The men whose names you have given here?

GRUENING. Yes. And they selected a committee composed of the following to the President: Morpeau, Nau, Jeannot, Vincent, and Thoby. And I asked to go with them, in order to make the occasion more impressive, and to have other Haitians who were not members of the patriotic union, but who were in sympathy with their aspirations. Among these the former President, Legitime, a man I think in the eighties, who is still living in the country, and the three chief justices of the three courts, namely, the court of first instance, the court of appeals, and the court of first instance.

ANGELL. Do you remember the names of those three chief justices, Mr. Gruening?

GRUENING. Yes; the chief justice of the court of cassation was Bonheur. The member of the second court did not come; he was ill or did not come for any reason. The president of the last court was named Montas.

ANGELL. That is a court of first instance?

GRUENING. That is a court of first instance. So this delegation went to the palace. The President asked me to come with them. These people were anxious to have me come; so I went. When we came to the palace we found not only the President but his five ministers; so there were present, I think some 15 persons. Mr. Morpeau acted as spokesman for the patriotic union, and he voiced the idea that the country was about to receive a committee which was going fundamentally into the Haitian question. That this committee was desirous of getting all the light it could on this question, and that all who were gathered there as Haitians to try and find a common basis—a basis on which all Haitians could agree, those present representing virtually every class and sentiment in Haiti.

ANGELL. The President replied that they were all Haitians; that he could not see how there were any differences that could not be reconciled; and they then proceeded to draw up a memorandum or a statement which embodied the sentiments.

Mr. ANGELL. You were present all through this meeting?

Mr. GRUENING. I was present. These sentiments were as follows: That we would demand the abrogation of the convention of 1915.

Senator POMERENE. Have you a copy of that here?

Mr. GRUENING. I will introduce into the record copies of newspapers at that time which contained this. Further: The abolition of martial law; the withdrawal of the occupation in a period of not more than six months; three months to be used for a reconstitution of the gendarmie so that it would be a body capable of maintaining order.

There were two points of dissent which came up. First, on the abrogation of the convention. The president stated that he could not himself join in the demand for the abrogation of the convention, and since he himself had said that he shall continue to ask that it be carried out; but that if others should ask for the abrogation of the convention he would not oppose that demand; that if he were personally asked his opinion he would not oppose it. In other words he would be negative on the question of abrogation, but would not oppose it.

Mr. ANGELL. You are referring always to the treaty of 1915?

Mr. GRUENING. The convention of 1915.

The other point on which no agreement was reached was the question of a loan. That question was raised, and the President said that certain negotiations were then in progress with the American Government, and that he did not wish to discuss that question at all.

The meeting lasted about two hours and then adjourned, and there was a short notice in the Haitian papers of that day—this was a Saturday—stating that this visit had taken place, that these persons had met. No mention being given as to what had been discussed.

I found that there was a great deal of rejoicing among the various Haitians that this meeting had taken place; that it was the first union of these people for many years; that those members of the patriotic union who had been expelled had, many of them, not spoken to the President or entered the palace for many years. There was, however, a great deal of skepticism among the members of the patriotic union as to the President's sincerity and as to whether he would adhere to these provisions, and it was decided that no account of what had taken place would be given to the newspapers without first receiving his O. K. a direct account of what had happened.

An account was drawn up the following Monday—their journalism is not like ours—and then two of them came around and asked me to take it to the President. I declined to do that, saying that I did not think that it was my business to tangle myself in Haitian affairs; that I had attended this meeting only at the request of both sides; but they insisted that no one else was willing to take it.

Senator POMERENE. Why were they not willing to?

Mr. GRUENING. Because of their mistrust of the President; their feeling that nothing that he said, unless said in the presence of witnesses, could be depended upon, and not even then. Their feeling that I, being a neutral and a stranger, their methods, the President would probably not—

Senator POMERENE. Was the President advised of your interest and the policy in which you made these visits?

Mr. GRUENING. He knew exactly of my interests. I did not, however, take this message to the President at that time. There was some delay in it. There was some discussion as to the manner in which it was phrased. The next day I went out of town, made this visit into the country, and came back Thursday I found that nothing had yet appeared in the papers, and I was again asked to take this message to the President. I finally said that I would, and I made an appointment to see him Saturday morning. The Saturday before the arrival of the committee.

Senator POMERENE. And this is the next Saturday after the conference?

Mr. GRUENING. This is the Saturday following the conference—two days later.

I went to the President's palace on Saturday, talked with him on these things, and found that the message had been sent to him from another person the day before.

Mr. POMERENE. What message?

Mr. GRUENING. The account of the meeting. I asked him whether it was correct. He said, "Entirely. I have approved it."

ANGELL. He said that to you?

GRUENING. He said that to me. I found that what had happened in the file was this: Other members of the patriotic union, becoming tired of my, had finally persuaded the chief justice of the court of cassation, Mr. y, to take it around. He had gone around on Friday, left it with the chief justice, asking the President to return it to him with any comments or orders. This was sent to him late Friday by the President's orderly, with the President's assent; merely the verbal statement that it was entirely correct. He submitted it back to the central committee of the patriotic union with that assent that he had thus received it from the President, and that therefore he had the right to publish it.

ANGELL. Was this Chief Justice Bon-Amy a member of the Union Patriotic Party?

GRUENING. No; he was not. He was one of the men who attended this meeting. So that there seemed to be a double check on the fact that the President had approved this statement.

After the meeting of the patriotic union central committee had been held, which it was decided that no account of this meeting would be published without the President's approval of an account was first received. This was due to the fact that they did not trust him. This account, with his apparently given it, was published in one paper that Saturday afternoon, but too late for publication in all of them; but the other papers published notices, saying that the full account of what had taken place in the palace would appear in Monday's papers. Again the primitive journalism.

CHAIRMAN. We will now adjourn until 2.30.

Thereupon, at 12.15 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m. the same day, Wednesday, March 8, 1922.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reconvened at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Gruening.

STATEMENT OF MR. ERNEST H. GRUENING.—Resumed.

GRUENING. On Monday morning, about 11 o'clock, I happened to be in the office of L'Essor, which is one of the newspapers of Port au Prince, and the editor, Dorsinville, showed me a communique which had just been received from the palace. This communique stated that the story published in one of the Saturday papers concerning the meeting of various groups was wholly incorrect; that the statement which preceded it that the account had had the assent of the President was false; and it then proceeded to give a totally different account of the meeting, an account which would indicate that there was a very opposite of unity on the questions which had been discussed at the meeting.

Subsequent issues of the paper appeared statements by Judge Bon-Amy stating that he had received the account back from the President without any comment. So that there was in addition to the assurance of President Darville to me that he had approved the account of this gathering, this further confirmation. I merely cite all this in confirmation of my original statement that I did not consider that the President was trustworthy. Here in the presence of 15 witnesses something had happened—

CHAIRMAN. Well, now, do you think it is useful to continue to prove that the President was not trustworthy?

GRUENING. Senator, I was merely doing that in answer to Senator Pomerehne's question. That is as far as I need go.

ANGELL. Now, Doctor Gruening, will you give us your impressions of the people of the country people of Haiti, the peasants, toward the presence of the American and toward its methods of control and government there?

GRUENING. I attempted to get at the opinion of the country people when making my trip through the southern part.

CHAIRMAN. How many days, parenthetically, were you out on that trip?

GRUENING. Two days and one-half. Our automobile would stop at various places, and I would go into the huts of the peasants or speak to them as they came to the road. I should say that the majority of those with whom I spoke were entirely noncommittal. I found that after I was introduced to them as bon blanc they became more talkative.

I specifically remember the opinions of three at different points in the. One of them, who had refused to talk for some time, finally said, in answer to a question as to what he thought of the occupation, that to him a martr a man who gave you kicks and blows with his fist—coup de pied, coup de poing—that he hoped the Americans would go soon. About that same attitude expressed by two others.

One peasant to whom I spoke said that it made no difference to him whether he was in the country, white or black.

I did not accept these judgments, these opinions, as in any way correct, because I do not believe that you can get in that kind of a survey at the opinion of the people. What interested me was that they had opinions at all on this subject.

It is also fair to say that this section of the country had been less troubled than others by disturbances previous to the occupation, and consequently had been less rigorously treated during the occupation.

I talked with several women along the road and asked them about the situation, and in general their opinion seemed to be that they were afraid of the whites. It was impossible to get anything very much more specific.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were your traveling companions?

Mr. GRUENING. My traveling companions were a Haitian by the name of Wiener, and on another occasion Mr. Houdicourt, who testified here. I want to state that, of course, I was not able to put the questions myself in Creole. I was able to understand the questions as put in Creole and the answers. I was particularly trying to find out whether the statement that was frequently made by the members of the occupation that the peasants are friendly to the occupation, and that the only ones who desire the change to go are the politicians, was or was not true.

Mr. ANGELL. What did you find the attitude of the people with whom you talked to be regarding the existence and manner of enforcement of martial law?

Mr. GRUENING. Everyone that I talked with resented that very deeply. Perhaps that was the one point on which they were wholly and undoubtedly agreed. They all felt that that was a sore point. Even the President and his cabinet were very emphatic upon that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell us, Mr. Gruening, how the martial law has affected the averaged Haitian?

Mr. GRUENING. I asked that very question of several of them. They said, "You never know what is going to happen. You live in constant fear of being arrested on the charge that you at one time said or wrote something critical of the occupation." I remember specifically asking each time, "If you do not write and if you do not talk, what danger is there then?" and they said, "we live under the constant fear. We don't know." And then, "If our wives or our children happen to be out in the streets shortly after bimonthly pay day and they have any trouble with the marines who are occasionally at those times under the influence of liquor, and we cannot think and fear that that is going to be the cause of subsequent persecution."

The CHAIRMAN. At how many points of the Republic are marines stationed?

Mr. GRUENING. I have no information as to that.

Mr. ANGELL. Was this sentiment of resentment against the martial law common to the various classes of people with whom you talked, or was it only largely to the upper, educated class in Port au Prince?

Mr. GRUENING. Well, it was not merely confined to the educated class, though the educated class, of course, resented very deeply the fact that their speech and their writing could not be free. They frequently said that they could see no reason why they had no right to object to the occupation or call the attention of the authorities to various acts of violence which allegedly had occurred.

In this connection I want to call the attention of the committee to a case which has been called to my attention by a Haitian who has just come from the United States unexpectedly, who says that the director of the Courrier had just been arrested and sentenced to six months at hard labor, for the publication of an article calling attention to an act of brutality on the part of a gendarme. I think the committee might be interested in that. I have a copy of it here.

I should say that their fears were largely a state of general apprehension. Of course those who are opposed to the present order, who want to see tion go naturally feel that their activities are very much curtailed by inability to speak.

CHAIRMAN. You mean, Doctor, that it is apprehension of what may happen to the average man rather than his actual contact with the law that disturbs him?

GRUENING. Yes; of course, Senator, it is extremely difficult to reproduce a state of mind, or even to assure one's self how valid a state of mind is. I was much impressed in the days preceding the arrival of the committee of a state of fear. I do not know how I could demonstrate that that existed. You may recall that at various times before the committee went to Haiti there were some communications sent to Mr. Angell, which I think were turned to you, asking that the committee lift martial law. I do not think they took themselves, when they asked that, just what lifting of martial law for a period of one week would do, but I heard it scores of times if I heard it that the witnesses were afraid to come; that they were afraid to speak. That no matter how directly, openly, and frankly the committee might confront them, that they would not speak the truth. They could not, because they did not know what would happen to them after the committee left. It is difficult to adduce testimony of that kind that can not be substantiated by facts, etc., but I felt very distinctly that state of mind existed.

I would like to cite in this connection a story which I think is germane, although it does not pertain directly to Haiti. After we left Haiti there was a super man there by the name of Frazier Hunt, whom the chairman may know who was formerly with the Chicago Tribune, and he was the man who negotiated the peace treaty to this country. He is an experienced observer. He has been in imperialism in Korea, he has been in the Philippines, he has been in Siberia, and I did not see him in Haiti, but when he came here I came up to see me, and I asked him what his impressions were.

ANGELL. This was just a month or two ago?

GRUENING. This was a month or two ago. He said, "It is the complete picture of imperialism." I said, "Well, what do you mean by that? Did you get it from the Haitians?" He said, "Well, before I got it from the Haitians I got it from the marines." I said, "Well, how did you get it from the marines?" "Well," he said, "when they were sober they were so offensively drunk that I knew there was a story there, and when we went out and got together why they told me the other side of the story." "Well," I said, "did you get it from the Haitians?" "Well," he said, "I got a good story. I didn't speak to the common people at that time. It is very hard to get things out of the common people. When I was in Egypt I went out into the back country trying to find out what the people there thought about the occupation, and I went into a village and into one of the central huts where the men and women were gathered. I went there with an interpreter whom I could understand and asked them what they thought about the occupation. They said it was all right. I asked them whether they had any complaint to make, and they said whatever. I asked them whether everything was perfectly satisfactory, and they said it was. I kept this up for about 15 minutes, and finally one man stood up and exploded and said he couldn't stand it any longer, and then a torrent followed from all of them; they all came forward with a story of abuses, of abuses and abuses which they had simply been afraid to tell before."

That is all that very respectfully to the attention of the committee; because I do not think however sincere and thoroughgoing an investigation of this kind may be in the brief days while the committee is sitting, it is after all only a compromise passing through, persons never seen before by the individuals who come before the committee, individuals with a distinct sense of inferiority, a misunderstanding of what is going on, in the presence of officers whom they have never seen before and whom they know will remain—it is very, very difficult to get to the real sentiments of the people.

CHAIRMAN. Did Hunt express any of this in the article he wrote on this?

GRUENING. I believe he did.

CHAIRMAN. Not very explicitly, if I remember it. I read the article with interest. I have known Hunt before.

GRUENING. I have not seen the article.

ANGELL. I want to refer you, Dr. Gruening, to a message from the Navy Department to Admiral Caperton, of August 7, 1915, appearing on page 313 of the record, this being, I believe, the first official pronouncement by our rep-all but a dummy and a creature of the occupation, carrying out its will. They say, with great bitterness, who has actually decorated American officers for the killing of fellow Haitians. His council of state, they say, do not count, because any person can be immediately discharged for the sake of disobedience or diversion from the will of the President. In other words, as one man said to me, it is simply as if you walked out on the street, picked up 11 or 21 men and said, "You can be a minister or a member of the council of state at such and such a salary until I fire you out." In other words, they are not in any sense responsive to the public will. There is no I say, no legislature and the courts, which alone are left, are under control by the military.

Mr. ANGELL. I ask you whether it is not true, as a matter of fact, that the policing, maintenance of law and order, is in the hands of the marine occupation; either directly in the hands of the marines themselves or in the hands of the gendarmerie, as officered principally by American Marines?

Mr. GRUENING. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you please tell us what your understanding is of the way in which the control of the native finances is in the hands of the American representatives, either the Marine Corps, American officers of the gendarmeries, or the American appointed treaty officials?

Mr. GRUENING. I have no first-hand or direct information on that, but the generally repeated statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Isn't that a matter of record, Mr. Counsel?

Mr. ANGELL. I don't think so yet, sir. Admiral Caperton has offered an explanation of the control in the early days.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a matter of administrative record for what we can send and secure with more certainty?

Mr. ANGELL. Doctor Gruening has said he has no first-hand knowledge of it; so, I do not think it is of any interest to pursue it further. Did you, Doctor Gruening, ascertain, while you were in Haiti, how Colonel Russell, the American commander, was regarded by native Haitians?

Mr. GRUENING. Well, I regret to say that I found nothing but universal dislike of him among all Haitians, except the President, and I rather hesitated to express this when I first did write it, because Colonel Russell had been particularly friendly to me. I reported simply what I found. I found that he was intensely disliked. Perhaps more so among those with whom I came in contact than any other man who headed the occupation. They felt that he was tyrannical, arbitrary; that he despised the Haitians of the cultured class, that he was wholly unsympathetic. No one, except the President, expressed another view. And I repeatedly asked them whether this same judgment should not be rendered against any chief of the occupation who, after all, was merely carrying out orders and had to maintain order and discipline. They forthwith. They emphatically said no. And they referred to other pro-officers for authority who had had an entirely different point of view of the Haitians.

I want to call the attention of the committee in that respect to an incident that occurred the last day the committee was there; I was not present, but I have heard of it from so many different sources, when Senator Pomerene said in concluding, that the hearings were by no means closed; that the Haitians had any further evidence to offer or statements to make the committee would be glad to have them turn the same over to Colonel Russell. Whereupon there was a groaning throughout the room, and Senator Pomerene whispered something to Senator Pomerene, whereupon Senator Pomerene said, "Or they can send same to the committee in Washington," whereupon the body was happy again.

A similar incident occurred in Santo Domingo. The Santo Domingo committee asked to refer testimony to Senator Robinson, but there was no sign of approval at all. I certainly doubt whether a demonstration of that kind could have been organized. It was the spontaneous expression of their sentiments.

They cite a long list of abuses, but their feeling is very, very intense on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. You have given the testimony of an archbishop and of Colonel Russell, have you not?

Mr. GRUENING. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you care to speak of that?

GRUENING. Yes; the archbishop at Port au Prince, Monsignor Conan, bishop of Aux Cayes, Monsignor Pichon—I had a long interview with First, I had an interview alone with Monsignor Conan, who spoke in a way of the occupation; was rather noncommittal; was clearly in doubt what he should say. He said that everyone was trying to do his best; stakes had been made, and not giving me any very clear-cut, clean-cut sequently Monsignor Pichon came in and stated very emphatically that Russell was a very fine man, and his exact words in French were: ave homme, un honnête homme, un homme aimé par tous les Haïtiens, not to be translated literally, is not to be a brave and honest man, but man and an upstanding man, and a man who is beloved by all the s. And the archbishop nodded approval of that.

s all the more curious because of this statement, which was made very uring my stay there, to find out what the Haitians themselves thought, did not find this opinion echoed, although I quoted these statements of op to many Haitians, but met only with their complete dissent. ans, it is only fair to say, pointed out that the relationship of the to the occupation was such that no other opinion could have been. d. I do not know that I feel at all that it is necessary for the bishop out of his way to make this statement, but the feeling was that the could not afford to be on anything but the best terms with the chief of upation.

ANGELL. You have now been studying this Haitian situation for nearly ars, have you not?

GRUENING. Yes, sir.

ANGELL. And intimately and closely for the past six or eight months, and s longer. What are your personal conclusions as an American as to the which the United States should pursue toward Haiti in the immediate CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest, Doctor, that you describe that course step by id not in general terms, but what first you would propose be done, and propose to be done, and so on.

GRUENING. I want to precede this by saying that in view of the testimony now in the record which proves beyond any controversy that whatever ve been the conditions in Haiti or the motives which actuated the United in going down there, we went in there by force, imposed a convention even in more moderate form the Haitians had previously rejected, im- t by the aid of military pressure, the withholding of funds, and other s of coercion. That we subsequently imposed a constitution not wanted Haitians by similar means. And that I can not conceive of any honorable ation of our relations with the Haitians, of any workable relation with itians which does not take a full cognizance of those facts, which id make tacit admission—not necessarily verbal admission—of the force and by which our policy was thus inaugurated.

in addition to this there was a virtual, if not actual, veil of secrecy ver the entire proceedings during the five years during which the ratic administration was in control. A secrecy which naturally implies ur acts were not those which we cared to reveal to the world.

ould like in that connection, if the chairman has no objection, to quote is own article in The Nation, December 1, 1920, the first two sentences: e Haitian scandal is the fruit of the exquisite hypocrisy which has larly characterized the present administration, and of the canting in- cary which has marked the conduct of the Navy Department during the last l years. We subjugated the people of Haiti and of Santo Domingo by of arms."

, starting with that as a premise it seems to me that we can only amends by restoring as soon and as effectively as possible government Haitian people.

CHAIRMAN. Now, will you describe that: "As soon as possible and effec- as possible."

GRUENING. Yes; I will with pleasure.

CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you a question in order to develop your judg- In how brief a time do you believe that all the marines now in Haiti be withdrawn from the territory of the Republic?

Mr. GRUENING. Within six months after a constitutional government has been established.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, consider in your own mind first, then, is that you may answer my question, so that you may fix a time, suggest a time to the committee during which a constitutional government may be established and the last marine withdrawn.

Mr. GRUENING. The term of the present President expires on the 15th of May of this year. It is the opinion in Haiti that there is at present no legal mode of electing his successor.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, I do not want to appear impatient. We know I want to get, for the benefit of the committee—because this is a question that has been discussed between the members of the committee and between the members before the committee informally and formally—your opinion as to the time in which it would be possible to withdraw the last marine—6 months, 8 months, 10 months, 12 months? In how many months from the issuance of a proclamation by the President of the United States, say, on the 1st of May or the 1st of April, would it be possible to withdraw the last marine?

Mr. GRUENING. I will get at that directly. I would suggest that on the 1st of May, when the term of the President expires, and there is no legally constituted successor, that the President of the United States order the withdrawal of the occupation in Haiti to assume temporarily charge of law and order. It would naturally would otherwise, and to call for the convocation of a constituent assembly by methods which exist in Haiti, the election of these one or two representatives from each commune, this constituent assembly to be called within a period, let us say, of 30 days; that election to be held within another 30 days; and that this constituent assembly be empowered to do two things:

First, to draw up a constitution.

Second, to elect a President.

The period of time of that drawing up of the constitution and the election of a President would be possibly a few weeks, more or less. That as soon as that is done, that the President take office and under that constitutional elections for the legislature, the constituent assembly then dissolving, to perform those two duties. And that at a period not to exceed six months from the President taking office the last marine shall be withdrawn from Haiti.

The only obstacle that I can see to the marines withdrawing immediately after that period of six months—is that there is not at present a duly organized gendarmerie, and no country can exist without an efficient police. You will recall that 15 minutes after the Boston police went on strike the plate-glass window along Tremont Street, the main street in Boston, was shattered and hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of merchandise was looted. You can not expect the Haitian to be more civilized than the Russian and we certainly owe it to them to leave an efficient police force.

I believe that thing can be done in a period of six months if the good will and the good faith existed to do it. If the officer in charge in Haiti were to say that "we shall expect you in six months to organize such a force." They have junior officers there. There is no reason why in six months they not promote those men to be lieutenants and captains in the gendarmerie.

The CHAIRMAN. In brief, you believe that the last marine might be withdrawn in 12 months from that date?

Mr. GRUENING. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. In organizing the gendarmerie would you plan to withdraw the last marine officers of the gendarmerie at that time?

Mr. GRUENING. I would leave that entirely to the Haitian Government.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you do in the matter of finance, to what alluded in connection with the gendarmerie as being a collateral problem—in the opinion of many Haitians would have to be solved with the assistance of the United States? Would you leave financial officers at the end of 12 months?

Mr. GRUENING. I would start with the premise that the entire gendarmerie should withdraw in that period. I would leave it to the Haitians to work out themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, in brief, at the end of 12 months you would not leave upon the Haitians the continuance of American officers in the gendarmerie, customs, or the department of finance?

Mr. GRUENING. Senator, what you could do between two governments is freely and independently is quite another question. It is entirely com-certain problems would arise in which the Haitian Government might ask the assistance of the United States, but that would be an entirely different matter from imposing our will arbitrarily without giving them any opportunity of dissent or appeal. I should say that if I had to answer yes or no to the question I should speak emphatically for the complete and radical without qualifications.

ANGELL. What sentiment, if any, did you find among the Haitian people in regard to the proposed loan?

GRUENING. Of course originally financial assistance in the larger sense proposed to be one of the benefits that would accrue to the Haitians under the loan. The Haitians now believe, however, that a loan imposed now in which they have no voice is merely a device to perpetuate their present condition of servitude, and they resent the loan and object to it on that ground. They see how the present Haitian Government has any right to negotiate a loan in the name of the Haitian people. They understand full well that the effect of the loans proposed inevitably prolong the period of customs control, and, therefore, of military control for the life of the loan.

CHAIRMAN. Why, by implication, military control?

GRUENING. Why by implication? Because the Haitians do not want this loan so far as they can make any popular expression they are opposed to it. The point is that if you had an election of the legislature and then that legislature decided to vote the loan, why you—

CHAIRMAN. Why, by implication, military control? Why is it essential control of customs?

GRUENING. Because the thing has been imposed upon them. They feel it is a deliberate expression of—CHAIRMAN. Well, surely there are States in the Americas where a collector or receiver general of the United States collects the customs and where there is no military control.

GRUENING. There has never been a State, however, in which such a collector was imposed by the armed forces of the United States.

CHAIRMAN. Well, I do not think that it follows that because the customs are collected by a foreigner that there should be armed force there.

GRUENING. No; but in the present case that is the history of our customs in Haiti. The point is simply this. Here is this loan which is being negotiated, which has been in process of negotiation for some time. The Haitians reasonably ask: If this loan is not being imposed against our will, why not give us a chance to vote on it? Why not give us our own Government back, even some form of control, and let us decide if we want this loan? Once it is done we are done for for this definite period; we have no more control over ourselves during that period. In other words, it is perpetuation of alien rule for that time, the terms of which they have no part in making. They are a very feeble obstructionist part in their President, who does not, in their name, represent them.

If the Haitians get their sovereignty back and feel hard up, they will be sending commissions to the United States and negotiating loans, and maybe terms which they will secure will be even harsher than those which are now proposed, but that is their own lookout. That is negotiation openly and arrived at.

CHAIRMAN. Continue, Mr. Angell.

ANGELL. Do you have a question, Mr. Howe?

HOWE. I was going to ask if the present opposition to the loan by Haitians is general or whether there are any exceptions to it—that is to say any Haitians favor a loan at the present time?

GRUENING. Well, I suppose that absolute unanimity on any subject is hard to achieve. There are certain Haitians who believe and hope that no material benefits will accrue from this loan. The payment of the interest, which has not been paid for six years, would naturally be welcomed by such Haitians as still retain their bonds. They believe that a certain amount of money will be set in circulation down there. The retail people naturally feel that certain benefits will accrue.

HOWE. Are they advocating the loan, do you know, openly?

GRUENING. No; as I follow the Haitian papers, the sentiment of the press is pretty much united.

HOWE. Do any native Haitians who favor the loan advocate it publicly?

GRUENING. I have never run across any such advocacy. The sentiment is overwhelmingly against the consummation of the loan.

Mr. HOWE. Would not a Haitian who was in favor of the loan hesitate to advocate it publicly, don't you think, on account of the unpopularity?

Mr. GRUENING. Unpopularity with his people, but great popularity with occupation.

Mr. HOWE. Yes. Now, don't you think that that really also plays a part in obtaining the true sentiment of the Haitian down there? When you are in the face of the timidity, don't you think that, granted that a majority of them feel one way on a particular subject, it is very hard to get a public expression of opinion from the minority?

Mr. GRUENING. Undoubtedly. Under a military tyranny no free opinion is obtained.

Mr. HOWE. Well, even under no military tyranny. The point I am alluding to is this: You say that they are afraid of the consequences of a military tyranny in expressing their opinions. Are they not also intimidated by the intimidations of their fellow Haitians; don't you think that is true?

Mr. GRUENING. The second follows conversely from the first. The stronger pressure of the military the stronger conversely would naturally be the sentiment of those Haitians who resent the presence of the military.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, if I may interrupt to give other instances which may illuminate this discussion. The political reaction in this case, I am sure, is fraught with serious consequences. The last President before the occupation terminated the lives of some score of political prisoners in the jail immediately before he was dismembered by a mob. There are revulsions of opinion among us. One time in Santo Domingo the opinion was against the funding of the debt and the new loan. Since we were there I gather that the chamber of commerce has decided for a loan.

Mr. GRUENING. I would like to emphasize that, as the chairman suggests, there are revulsions of opinion possible but there may be a far greater influence of opinion than appears on the surface. Nevertheless, it seems to me the only possible, the only logical and fair way to arrive at that opinion is to allow the choice to be as free as possible. In other words, through the election of some form of elected body. Obviously, if people feel that a new government is going to be constituted, a lot of people in Haiti, as in the United States, are going to climb on the band wagon. On the other hand, there are a lot of people who are always professionally "agin" the Government. But here is a thing which is so serious in its implication, that is so fundamental in determining the future of Haiti as an independent or as not an independent country, that it seems to me that as long as we are entering a new era, a new phase of the Haitian situation, that every effort should be made to allow the decision to be made by the people. After all, if the loss of the loan was through failure of the Haitians to elect themselves in favor, if that loss would be Haiti's loss alone, they would be the ones that were deciding it, and not some one else for them. If they are sufferers, that is their own lookout. I fail to see why we should insist on posing philanthropy—if it may be so considered—against their will in the absence of any expression of that will. They have been unable to express themselves as a nation since the dissolution of the legislature in 1917.

Mr. ANGELL. You referred this morning, Doctor Gruening, in stating to me of your conclusion, to what you felt to be a departure from fundamental American principles, and you said in effect that it was that departure from fundamental American principles which interested and aroused you. Those remarks of yours were only in general language. Will you specify what you mean by the American principles from which you think the United States has departed in its actions in Haiti?

Mr. GRUENING. Well, of course American history is full of expressions of sentiment with the Declaration of Independence, of the right of nations to be independent, and self-governing, and in particular our recent history is full of allusions by the men who were at the helm which were directly against what we have done in Haiti.

James Monroe, titular author of the most important and fundamental principle in America's relationship with other nations, declared:

"We could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing (i. e., governments who have declared their independence and maintaining and whose independence we have acknowledged) or controlling in any manner their destiny by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

Secretary Seward said:

"The practice of this Government from its beginning is a guarantee to all nations of the respect of the American people for the free sovereignty in every other State. We received the instruction from Washington. * The same principle and practice have been uniformly inculcated by our statesmen, interpreted by all our jurists, maintained by all our Congresses, and acquiesced in without practical dissent on all occasions by the Cuban people. It is in reality the chief element of intercourse in our country."

In his message to Congress, December 3, 1906, President Roosevelt said:

"In many parts of South America there has been much misunderstanding of the attitude and purposes of the United States toward the other American Republics; an idea has become prevalent that our assertions of the Monroe Doctrine implied or carried with it an assumption of superiority, and of a right to exercise some kind of protectorate over the countries to whose territory that Doctrine applies. Nothing could be farther from the truth."

Mr. Root said the following:

"The doctrine rests upon the right of self-protection, and that right is recognized by international law. The right is a necessary corollary of independent sovereignty."

"We frequently see statements that the doctrine has been changed or modified; that there is a new or different doctrine since Monroe's time. They are mistaken. * * *

"The Monroe doctrine does not assert or imply or involve any right on the part of the United States to impair or control the independent sovereignty of any American State * * *. The fundamental principle of international law is the principle of independent sovereignty. Upon that all other rules of international law rest. That is the chief and necessary protection of the weak against the power of the strong. Observance of that is the necessary condition of the peace and order of the civilized world. By the declaration of that principle the common judgment of civilization awards to the smallest and weakest State the liberty to control its own affairs without interference from the power, however great."

"The Monroe doctrine neither asserts nor involves any right of control on the part of the United States over any American nation, it imposes upon the United States no duty toward European powers to exercise such a control. It does not call upon the United States to collect debts, or coerce conduct, or redress wrongs, or avenge injuries."

"Nor has the United States ever, in any instance during the period of almost a century which has elapsed, made the Monroe doctrine or the motives which impel us to support it the ground or excuse for overstepping the limits which the rights of equal sovereignty set between equal sovereign States."

"The false conception of what the Monroe doctrine is, of what it demands and of what it justifies, of its scope and of its limits has invaded the public press and affected public opinion within the past few years."

"The random schemes of national expansion invoke the Monroe doctrine. Intrigued motives to compel South or Central American countries to do or refrain from doing something by which individual Americans may profit invoke the Monroe doctrine. Clamors for national glory from minds too shallow to understand at the same time a sense of national duty invoke the Monroe doctrine. Intolerance which demands control over the conduct and the opinions of other people, which is the essence of tyranny, invoke the Monroe doctrine. Thoughtless people who see no difference between lawful right and physical force assume that the Monroe doctrine is a warrant for interference in the domestic affairs of all weaker nations in the New World."

Mr. Root's opening address as president of American Society of International Law, eighth annual meeting, Washington, April 22, 1914.

Speaking at Rio Janeiro at the Third International Pan American Congress, Mr. Root defined the official policy of our Government as follows:

"We wish for no victories but those of peace; for no territory except our own; for no sovereignty except the sovereignty over ourselves. We deem the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest member of the family of nations entitled to as much respect as those of the greatest empire."

"We neither claim nor desire any rights, privileges, or powers that we do not freely concede to every American republic."

"The one and only reservation of the United States of America to the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes adopted at the first conference, 1890:

"Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or or internal administration of any foreign State."

An understanding upon certain fundamental principles of international law as set forth in the declaration of the rights and duties of nations, adopted by the American Institute of International Law January 6, 1916, which are themselves based upon decisions of English courts and of the Supreme Court of the United States:

"(1) Every nation has the right to exist and the right to perfect and preserve its existence; but this right neither implies the right nor justifies that of the State to protect or to conserve its existence by the commission of unlawful acts against innocent and unoffending States.

"(2) Every nation has the right to independence, in the sense that it is free to the pursuit of happiness and is free to develop itself without interference or control from other States, provided that in so doing it does not interfere with or violate the rights of other States.

"(3) Every nation is in law the equal of every other nation belonging to the society of nations, and all nations have the right to claim and, according to the Declaration of Independence of the United States, 'to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them.'

"(4) Every nation has the right to territory within defined boundaries to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over its territory and all persons, whether native or foreign, found therein.

"(5) Every nation entitled to a right by the law of nations is entitled to have that right respected and protected by all other nations, for rights and duties are correlative, and the right of one is the duty of all to observe.

April 2, 1917, Woodrow Wilson:

"* * * For democracy, for the right of all those who submit to authority to have voice in their own government, for the rights and liberties of all nations."

"First point: Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but all disputes shall proceed always frankly and in the public view."

"Fourteenth point: * * * affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike."

January 22, 1917:

"No peace can last, or ought to last, which does not recognize and accept the principle that Governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that no right anywhere exists to hand peoples over from one sovereignty to another. * * * I speak of this not because of any desire to exalt an abstract political principle which has always been held by those who have sought to build up liberty in America but because I wish frankly to uncover realities. Any peace which does not recognize and accept this principle will inevitably be upset. It will not rest upon the convictions of mankind. The ferment of whole populations will fight subtly and constantly against it, and all the world will sympathize with the world can be at peace only if its life is stable, and there can be no stability where the will is in rebellion, where there is not tranquillity of spirit, a sense of justice, of freedom, and of right."

"The Mexican Question," by Woodrow Wilson, in the Ladies' Home Journal, October, 1919 (substitute Haiti for Mexico):

"The suspicion of our southern neighbors, their uneasiness as to our power, their jealousy that we should assume to play big brother to them, their invitation to do so, has constantly stood in the way of the amicable happy relations we wished to establish with them. * * * What is needed for the firm establishment of their faith in us is that we give guaranties of the sort, in words as well as in promise; that we will as scrupulously respect their territorial integrity and their political sovereignty as we insist that other nations should respect them. * * *

"Mexico must no doubt struggle through long processes of blood and sorrow before she finds herself and returns to the paths of peace and order; but nations, older in political experience than she, have staggered and fallen through these dark ways for years together, to find themselves at last brought out into the light, to know the price of liberty, to realize the compulsion of the law and the orderly processes of law.

"It is painful to observe how few of the suggestions as to what the United States ought to do with regard to Mexico are based upon sympathy with an people, or any effort, even, to understand what they need and desire. say with knowledge that most of the suggestions of action come from those rish to possess her, who wish to use her, who regard her people with con- sion and a touch of contempt; who believe they are fit only to serve and t for liberty of any sort. Such men can not and will not determine the of the United States. They are not of the true American breed or motive."

sident Charles W. Elliot:

olitical freedom means freedom to be feeble, foolish, and sinful in public s as well as freedom to be strong, wise, and good."

iel Webster:

o matter how easy may be the yoke of a foreign power; no matter how y it sits upon the shoulders, if it is not imposed by the voice of his own 1, and of his own country, he will not, he can not, and he means not to be : under its burden."

ator Hoar:

hope I may never live to see the day when the interests of my country laced above its honor."

. GRUENING. My feeling has been entirely that the United States could fford to do this thing. I had no interest whatever in Haitians or Domini- per se. Up to a year ago I had never set eyes on a Haitian or on a Domini- It is true that since visiting those countries I have naturally acquired a in affection for the people there, for whom I feel intensely sorry; for their eness, for a certain charm, and the instinctive feeling of sympathy that s apt to have for the under dog.

t that is all secondary. I feel that if the United States does this thing, we are through as the country that has grown to be great for the reasons we have become great. We have done in Haiti and Santo Domingo what not essentially differ from what the Germans did in Belgium. The fact the Belgians have reached a somewhat higher degree of civilization does alter the fundamental principle one bit. The Haitians and the Dominicans e their independence just as highly as we do ours. We went in there by less military tyranny, making scraps of paper of the documents, of the ties with Haiti and Santo Domingo, international law, and all previous ex- sions of foreign policy of the United States.

want to, if I may, add one word about the appointment of the high commis- er. In the preliminary statement which the committee issued upon its re- is the statement:

The chairman of the committee has ventured to point out the very great ortance of carefully choosing for service in Haiti, in civil or military capacity, ers who are sympathetic with the Haitian people, who will seek to establish ial personal relations with the Haitians. Officers of the Marine Corps going haiti should understand that in order fully to discharge their duty to the ed States and to deserve the commendation of their superiors, they must ider the dual responsibilities of their duty. They should be selected not because of their capacity to command troops, but to command them in ti, and among the Haitian people. Conversely, the most intelligent and ve elements of the Haitian people must appreciate that since American es are to continue in Ha'ti for the maintenance of peace and that since, er the existing treaty, American officials are to remain to help the Haitian ernment to carry out necessary reforms, the greatest measure of service to ti with the smallest possible degree of friction will require a spirit of accomo- on and cooperation not only on the part of the American officials but also the part of those in Haiti who are active in the life of the capital and other principal centers."

ow, with all due respect, I submit that the appointment of General Russell complete abolition of that recommendation.

he CHAIRMAN. You would have preferred the appointment of General ler?

lr. GRUENING. I would not. If any appointment could have been worse n that of General Russell, it would have been that of General Butler, because General Butler's statement that he had always considered the educated tian a joke, and because of the very questionable statements that he made ut that class—the statement that they wear high hats 3 inches in diameter, patent-leather shoes, and other things. I never saw any of those articles clothing when I was there in Haiti. They may have existed in previous rs. But the point is this: From the Haitian angle, this appointment is a berate imposition upon them of a man whose unpopularity is a matter of ic notoriety.

The CHAIRMAN. Unpopularity with what element of the population?

Mr. GRUENING. With the great majority.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me ask you how you know that it is with the majority?

Mr. GRUENING. Because I found no one among all the various persons to whom I spoke with whom he was popular. If all the persons with whom I spoke were the only ones in Haiti who dislike General Russell, they in themselves would constitute a sufficient disqualification.

In addition to that, of course, there is the background of our going in. They, of course, consider, as I do, without warrant and illegal. To ask them then to cooperate with a man who has, in their view, oppressed them, who jim-crowded them, who has committed all kinds of assaults upon their dignity and their sensibilities—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). What assaults upon their dignity?

Mr. GRUENING. Well, under General Russell, for the first time in Haiti a white mass was established from which Haitians are excluded. Haitians asked not to attend.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon his initiative?

Mr. GRUENING. Upon his initiative, under his aegis. No one knows exactly from whom the original impulse may have come, but it was under his aegis.

The color line has been increasingly drawn in Haiti. We have the extraordinary phenomenon of having the color line drawn in virtually the only country.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me interrupt you to say that Haitians disliked General Russell's house when I was there.

Mr. GRUENING. Yes; a great many things happened while the committee was there that are not matters of common occurrence. It comes down to this, Senator, that what people feel in a case where you require cooperation is, all, what is. Granting that some of these charges, allegations, are not wholly well founded, that they were due to circumstances that are more or less inevitable, the feeling exists and is so deep seated that I think the cooperation will be impossible.

In other relationships between nations, relationships that are in no way as intimate and vital as the relation between the high commissioners and these people, the formality is gone through of asking whether such and such a person would be persona grata. Had the appointment of a high commissioner been inevitable and the Haitians had even the slightest chance to express a negative opinion, how very different that relationship would be, if our list of three they would have had their choice or a kind of a negative expression. But here is a man that is given to them, who to them represents tyranny and oppression in its worst sense, and he is given complete power over them. It is not, surely, a step in the direction of reestablishing constitutional functions.

I want to go on record as saying that that policy is bound to fail.

Mr. ANGELL. I have no more questions, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Howe?

Mr. HOWE. I have no more questions.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mr. Gruening.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. ANGELL. At the appropriate moment, Mr. Chairman, I want to make the most urgent and respectful request for the calling of Mr. Bryan and other witnesses whose names I have repeatedly submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I remember in your last letter you said you thought Mr. Bryan would be called, and that would cover the State Department. McIlhenny appears to-morrow.

Mr. Knowles, have you a request to make of the committee?

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, as I stated to you in a communication I addressed 10 days or two weeks ago, I have received a cablegram from Santo Domingo asking about the witnesses, when they would be needed here and what arrangements, if any, would be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you a list of the witnesses and the subjects of testimony of each?

Mr. KNOWLES. I presented such a list to you, Mr. Chairman, when asked.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, can you give us a list of the witnesses whose testimony you believe to be important, and the subject of each?

Mr. KNOWLES. In a general way I think I can.

CHAIRMAN. Well, I do not want it in a general way. Specifically, Mr.

NOWLES. Well, just as to what they would testify I could not.

CHAIRMAN. No; I want to know if you can give the committee a list of witnesses whose testimony you deem to be of prime importance and the one on which they would testify.

NOWLES. Yes; I think I can.

CHAIRMAN. When is Doctor Paynado to be here?

NOWLES. Doctor Paynado is in New York. I don't know what day he is here.

CHAIRMAN. I would suggest that after a conference with Doctor Paynado submit a list of witnesses whose testimony you believe to be of prime importance. The time is near at hand when the committee has got to conclude hearings and make a report, and I fancy it will not be prepared to hear any witnesses.

NOWLES. Well, we have been waiting, Mr. Chairman, for over two CHAIRMAN. Well, now, I do not want to rehearse the circumstances of departure from Santo Domingo, but personally I am frank to say that I believe it was justified. You stayed there for specific purposes, and found yourself unable or unwilling to remain to that end to determine witnesses were to come up here. Will you see Doctor Paynado this week?

NOWLES. I will. I will see him this evening. I will return to New York tonight, and such a list will be prepared immediately, Senator, and we will probably be here the first of the week, or send it to you.

CHAIRMAN. Well, send it to me. In the meantime certainly I should like to see Doctor Paynado as soon as he may find it convenient to come over here. I will adjourn until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Thereupon, at 4 o'clock p. m., an adjournment was taken until 10.30 o'clock of the following day, Thursday, March 9, 1922.)

RY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1922.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

Committee met pursuant to adjournment at 11 o'clock a. m., Senator McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, and Pomerene.

Present: Mr. Walter Bruce Howe and Mr. Ernest Angell.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN A. McILHENNY, FINANCIAL ADVISER TO THE GOVERNMENT OF HAITI.

Howe. Mr. McIlhenny, what is your official position in connection with Haitian Government?

McILHENNY. Financial adviser.

Howe. You are one of the treaty officials?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Howe. Nominated by the President of the United States?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Howe. And appointed by the President of Haiti?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Howe. When did you become financial adviser?

McILHENNY. I have not the date of my appointment by the President; I have not the official paper.

Howe. Yes; but when did you become financial adviser?

McILHENNY. I became financial adviser, I think, on the 27th of January, 1919.

Howe. When did you first go to Haiti as financial adviser?

McILHENNY. March 27, 1919.

Howe. Now, Mr. McIlhenny, will you give use a descriptive outline of Haitian finances immediately prior to the American intervention, with reference to the outstanding foreign loans?

McILHENNY. The total revenue for the fiscal year 1912-13 was $5,073, and the total revenue pledged to debt service, $2,507,553.07—for POMERENE. You mean out of this $5,000,000?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir; leaving available for expenses other than debt $2,506,138.33. The amount actually expended for other purposes than debt service was $3,787,426.48, the deficit of $1,281,288.15 being partly covered by a 3 per cent loan of $607,902.76, issued at 94, gourdes being accepted in it at the rate of 3.50 to $1, against a prevailing commercial rate of 4.70 in other words, the gourde par of a $100 bond was 470 gourdes, but this was sold at 94 to 3.50, or 329 gourdes, an actual rate of issue of 61. The existing deficit was covered by borrowings from the Banque Nationale, under its concession, was required to hold at the disposal of the Government a so-called statutory advance of $600,000, and also to enter into so-called budgetary conventions to provide necessary funds.

Senator POMERENE. Let us be clear about that. When you say "the government" you mean the Haitian Government? You do not mean the United States Government?

CHAIRMAN. This is in 1912-18.

McILHENNY. At the disposal of the Haitian Government, Senator.

The total revenue for 1913-14 was $5,018,801.32—

The CHAIRMAN. Are those customs revenues? Were there internal revenues that year?

Mr. McILHENNY. We have no means of ascertaining what the revenues were.

The CHAIRMAN. The total ascertainable revenue?

Mr. McILHENNY. The total ascertainable revenue.

Senator POMERENE. When you speak of the year 1912-13 and 1913-14, that fiscal year correspond with the calendar year or not?

Mr. McILHENNY. No, sir. The fiscal year begins on October 1 and ends September 30.

The total revenue for 1913-14 was $5,018,801.32, expended for debt—$4,231,091.31, available balance $787,710.01, expenditures for other than service $3,803,244.85, deficit $3,015,384.84, partly covered by 6½ per cent (internal) for $500,000, $300,000, and $240,000, issued at an ostensible rate of 80. Gourdes were accepted at 3.50, the prevailing commercial rate at the time of flotation being 4.75, 5, and 6, respectively, which means that the rates of issue were about 59, 56, and 47, respectively. The remaining was covered as before by loans from the Banque Nationale and by unauthorized private loans, which now constitute claims of more or less doubtful value.

For 1914-15 the revenue was $3,311,548.14. The treasury service was away from the bank on February 3, 1915, by a revolutionary government revenue pledges disregarded, and only $754,892.86 was devoted to debt—leaving $2,556,655.28 available as against expenses other than debt—$3,082,700.53, the deficit being met by an issue of gourdes 3,000,000 (no $600,000) in paper fiat money, which resulted in depreciating gourdes—July, 1915, to 9.90 to the dollar, and by unauthorized private loans, treasury notes, etc.

The borrowing capacity of Haiti at home and abroad was exhausted—paper money was practically worthless. For four years it had been the result of unintermitter revolution.

Senator POMERENE. From what time?

Mr. McILHENNY. I think beginning in 1911 and down to that time.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt here to ask if these issues of treasury notes were the deficits which they were issued to meet all occurred before the occupation?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. In that year of 1914-15?

Mr. McILHENNY. In that year, and I think the year immediately previous.

Senator POMERENE. These treasury notes, I take it, were short-time were they? Or were they payable on presentation or what?

Mr. McILHENNY. They were bons du tresor given by the secretary of treasury in lieu of cash to meet current expenses.

Senator POMERENE. Paper money, in other words, were they?

Mr. McILHENNY. They were not printed; they were given to individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. When were they to mature?

Mr. McILHENNY. They were to be paid out of the available money, or treasury when possible.

Senator POMERENE. Were they payable in their paper gourdes?

Mr. McILHENNY. In some instances they were payable in gold, and in some instances payable in gourdes.

Senator POMERENE. And what interest did those bear?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not think they bore any interest, Senator.

Mr. HOWE. They were issued at a discount, were they?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; these bonds tresors were issued in full for the amount of the recognized indebtedness of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. They were notes of hand, I take it, in payment against the Government for services or goods?

Mr. McILHENNY. Well, they were issued for salaries. They were issued for loans which were made by the State with individuals.

During these years a large part of its running expenses had been left unpaid. Revenue pledges, if observed, left an amount for other expenses than debt—of which was only about 20 per cent of the amount required for that purpose—and the deficit could no longer be covered by loans, whether internal or external, or by issues of fiat money. The closing of foreign markets by war conditions affecting Haiti's export products, and practical cessation of foreign commerce because of lack of maritime transportation, resulted in an enormous decrease in customs revenues, which then constituted fully 95 per cent venue of the country. Financially and politically Haiti was in a complete collapse.

and undertaken to meet her budgetary needs by the devices which I have Under her laws the major portion of her income was dedicated to her specific and recognized debts. The contracts under which those were made provided that the affected or pledged revenues should be paid to the treasury of Haiti, which was the Banque Nationale de la Republique and the treasury was obligated to allocate and apply the revenues so in accordance with the laws establishing the contracts. Therefore the revenues collected from taxes pledged to these loans, when paid into the treasury, were no longer available for budgetary expenses.

had already reached, at the time of the American intervention, a position where the major portion of her income being pledged by law, her income no longer served her maintenance and served her debts, and she was driven to the expedients which I have outlined to meet her necessary and immediate revenue needs.

MR. POMERENE. Let me see if I understand you clearly. Do I understand that at the time of which you are now speaking the entire revenues of the country were required for the payment of past debts?

MR. McILHENNY. Not the entire revenues—

CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt. I think that in the rough you may say, the figures given us by Mr. McIlhenny, that 80 per cent, or thereabouts, of the revenues were required for the service of the foreign debt, and that the remaining 20 per cent was equal to about 20 per cent of the cost of her administration.

MR. POMERENE. In other words, you mean that her entire revenue at that time would have been required to pay her current indebtedness or obligations?

CHAIRMAN. No. Her entire revenue would have been necessary to maintain the Government, and she would have been wholly in default on the service of the foreign debt.

MR. POMERENE. That is what I mean; yes.

MR. McILHENNY. The point I should like to emphasize to the committee there, Chairman, is this: At the time of the occupation it was already established that the income of the country pledged to the debt service was about 80 per cent of the entire revenues. There was a deficiency in the income to meet the needs of the debt service and to maintain the Government's budgetary demands, and that the deficit for the budgetary demands the Haitian Government was to meet was to be met by the expedients of floating internal loans, borrowing from individuals, and through the Banque Nationale, under its charter, to provide such funds as were needed.

MR. HOWE. You intend later on in your testimony to state the arrears in the liquidation of foreign loans at the time of the occupation, do you, Mr. McIl-

MR. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; I have a memorandum of that here.

MR. POMERENE. I take it when you speak of the current expenses, you mean that these were exceptionally large, due to the revolutionary conditions which you referred to, do you not? You have said that only about 20 per cent of the revenues were available for current expenses of government. You also said that there had been a period of almost continuous revolution for four years. When you speak of those current expenses during those several years you include all the expenses, ordinary and extraordinary; that is, ordinary as applied to the usual administration of affairs, and extraordinary, incurred, I assume, for the purpose of restoring peace and order and overcoming revolutionary conditions?

MR. McILHENNY. In answering that, Senator, I should say that what might be termed, since this period, as extraordinary expenses were then ordinary expenses, such as the maintenance of the Haitian Department of War, the payment of the army, the maintenance of that army, the maintenance of its navy, and so on. Since then those expenses have disappeared and the moneys have been directed to other purposes.

MR. HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, have you in your memoranda any facts as to the amount of the Haitian internal revenue before the intervention? I do not want to repeat it if you have it in a memorandum.

MR. McILHENNY. We have no separate figures as to that.

MR. HOWE. These figures you have been giving are revenue from all sources?

CHAIRMAN. They are identical with the figures of customs revenues.

Mr. McILHENNY. I have no records as to the internal-revenue collection prior to the intervention.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know if there were such records?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not know. There should be such records, but there are I do not know.

Mr. HOWE. What were the arrears of amortization of the three foreign loans at the time of our occupation, at the end of July or early in August, 1915?

Mr. McILHENNY. The outstanding capital balance of the external loans at the date of American intervention in Haiti, was:

Loan of 1875	19,000,000
Loan of 1896	37,000,000
Loan of 1910	64,000,000

Total 120,000,000

Amortization payments in arrears at that date were as follows:

Loan of 1875	10,000,000
Loan of 1896	1,100,000
Loan of 1910	300,000

Total 12,400,000

Mr. HOWE. That would be about 10 per cent of the par value of those loans outstanding then, in arrears of amortization?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And that date of occupation you fix at what?

Mr. E. A. COLSON (assistant to Mr. McIlhenny). Any time during that. The amortization payments were July 1 and December 31, so any time between July 1 and December 31 would be correct.

Mr. HOWE. So that would be as of July 1, 1915—before the occupation? Mr. COLSON. As of August 1.

Mr. McILHENNY. The Haitian Government was also indebted to the Banque de l'Union Parisienne in the sum of 601,411.50 francs advanced by that to meet the interest coupon maturing May 15, 1915, on the external loan of 1910.

During Admiral Caperton's administration, about May, 1916, a portion ($296,715.06) of the revenues pledged to the external debt was transferred to Paris. The amount so transferred extinguished the indebtedness to the Banque de l'Union Parisienne on account of the May 15, 1915, maturity and established to the credit of the Haitian Government in Paris the following sums:

Banque de l'Union Parisienne	394,000
Banque Nationale de la Republique d'Haiti	50,000

Total 444,000

On August 29, 1916, the customs administration was turned over by Admiral Caperton to the general receiver of customs. The cash balance taken was $1,149,638.46.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean that was Haitian money in addition to credits in Paris?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; these were the collections made by Admiral Caperton of the customs and turned over by him to the general receiver of customs, who then began to function.

At the end of the following fiscal year, September 30, 1917, this balance had been slightly increased to $1,198,836.94. During the incumbency of Mr. Ruan, financial adviser, while the revenues were not sufficient to permit resumption of the service of the external debt in full, the policy was adopted of allowing excess of revenues over actual running expenses to accumulate in the treasury. The cash balance September 30, 1918, had been again slightly increased to $1,519,621.05. In the first budget prepared by Mr. Ruan for the fiscal year 1918-19, $1,000,000 was specifically set aside for the service of the debt, but the amount was not transferred to Paris or actually expended. It was left in the treasury. Mr. Ruan resigned about three months after the beginning of this fiscal year. At the end of the year the cash balance had been very much increased to $4,171,833.40, and $3,000,000 (of which about $2,500,000 had been saved during the year) was placed at the disposal of the financial adviser to be converted into francs, together with the franc amount already to the aitian Government in Paris as above indicated. The conversion was during the month of November, 1919, and realized 27,511,250 francs.

CHAIRMAN. Do you remember what the value of the franc was at that time in terms of dollars?

McILHENNY. I effected that conversion at 9.17+ francs to the dollar. In effecting this conversion it was the intention to use the credit so established together with the proceeds of the loan then under negotiation, in effecting the French loans. It was found, however, that owing to conditions in the bond market the negotiations could not be brought to a successful conclusion. The French Government learned of the large amount to be converted by the Haitian Government in Paris and pressed for payment of the interest on the bonds held by its nationals upon which nothing had been paid since May, 1915. The amounts in Paris were sufficient to pay all maturities to and including that of December 31, 1919; and it was with the full knowledge and approval of the Haitian minister of finance who was then in Washington, to pay these arrears of interest. This was done in April, 1920, leaving in arrears the maturity of January 1, 1920. The conversion of the propriety of the conversion of the $3,000,000 into francs or payment of interest on the foreign loans was raised at this time, though there is some complaint because the service of the internal debt was not also resumed. The service of the internal debt was not resumed because at that time it was intended that it should be reviewed by the claims commission.

CHAIRMAN. That is, the claims commission provided for in the treaty?

McILHENNY. In the protocol. The maturities of May 15, June 30, and December 31, 1920, on the external loans were not met on the due dates.

In July, 1920, the charge was first made by the Haitian Government that the $3,000,000 had been converted into francs without authority, and that the remainder, together with the amounts already in France placed at the disposal of the financial adviser, had been used by him without authority in the payment of arrears of interest. There having been further depreciation in the franc immediately after the conversion, it was further charged that in effecting the conversion when he did the financial adviser had caused the Haitian Government an enormous loss of millions of francs.

The conversion was effected immediately after the money was placed at the disposal of the financial adviser in accordance with instructions from the Haitian Government to effect the conversion for its interests and place the same at interest in Paris, in the course of which instructions the opinion was expressed that due to the depreciation in the franc the present moment was the opportune time to do so. The use of the proceeds at a later date to pay the arrears of interest on the external loans was in accord with the minister of finance, as indicated above.

In September, 1920, a further sum having accumulated in the treasury—in accordance with a provision in the budget setting aside $1,000,000 for the service of the debt and providing that all excess of revenue over expenditures should be applied for the same purpose—the sum of $2,200,000 was placed by the Haitian Government at the disposal of the financial adviser, converted into francs and used to pay the arrears of amortization and interest maturities to and including December 30, 1920, on the external loans.

It was felt that it would afford less opportunity for obstruction and criticism of the Haitian Government if the service of the external loans were taken over by the general receiver under Article V of the treaty, the Department of Finance directed that from and after October 1, 1920, the service of the external debt be made by the general receiver of customs. Since then interest and amortization has been paid as and when due, and the final amortization on the loan of July 1, 1922, on the loan of 1875 has been anticipated and was completed on January 1, 1922.

CHAIRMAN. In brief, the arrears due on the service of the debt have been paid. Is that right?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir; both interest and amortization.

CHAIRMAN. And the current service of the debt has been met?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

CHAIRMAN. What is the annual charge on the Haitian treasury for interest and amortization?

McILHENNY. At the present time?

CHAIRMAN. Yes. I do not care for it precisely.

McILHENNY. At the present rate of 9.5 cents, the charge for the external debt is $660,449.23.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the annual charge?

Mr. McILHENNY. That is the annual charge.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the capital value of the debt to-day?

Mr. McILHENNY. 87,433,000 francs.

The CHAIRMAN. What would that be in dollars at the current exchange? you the figures there?

Mr. McILHENNY. Converted at 9.5 cents, that is $8,306,135.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, have you prepared two statements as to the condition of the public debt as of February 28, 1919, and as of February 28, 1920.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; sir; and I should like to bring them to the attention of the committee, if I may.

Mr. HOWE. Please do so.

Mr. McILHENNY. I have here, Mr. Chairman, a memorandum setting out the condition of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti as of February 28, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not believe that Mr. McIlhenny need read that in record. He may hand it to the reporter, and it will be inserted.

That is the time he was appointed to office?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let that be indicated in the heading.

McILHENNY. The total public debt as of the date of this memorandum is $35,855,400.76.

CHAIRMAN. That is of what date?

McILHENNY. That is as of the date of February 28, 1919. That was the date of the external funded debt at the prevailing rate of exchange at that time which was 18.

For purposes of comparison with the condition of the public debt of Haiti as of February 28, 1922, the external debt should be converted to dollars at the rate used in the latter statement (9½ cents per franc), making the final result as follows:

Internal funded and floating debt.....	$9,141,797.32

CHAIRMAN. What is the debt to-day, in 1922?

McILHENNY. The debt as it appears to-day is $19,085,331.79.

CHAIRMAN. In three years, since your appointment, the capital debt of Haiti has been diminished in the sum of $4,500,000?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir. Or if you include increase in sinking funds set up to pay the debts and reduction of outstanding fiduciary currency, the total result in the net debt of Haiti is $5,387,404.72. In addition to the debt as Amounts of these debts were undetermined on Feb. 28, 1919, but were fixed at amounts shortly thereafter and the first two converted into short-term notes.

In addition to the debt as shown in the statement as of February 28 there were outstanding Government notes—paper money—in the amount of gourdes 8,877,972, equivalent to $1,775,594.40. In April, 1919, an agreement was effected whereby the retirement of these notes was commenced, retirement effected in part from funds in hand from the proceeds of the external loan of 1910 and in part from accruals of pledged revenue prior and subsequent thereto. Retirement was completed on September 6, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. That is another $1,700,000 of obligations?

Mr. McILHENNY. But that does not represent savings of the Haitian Government. The drafting of the contract under which this retirement was effected was during my incumbency in office and with my assistance, and the performance of the contract was entirely under my administration.

Mr. Chairman, I have also here a statement, purely statistical, of the debt of the Republic of Haiti as of February 28, 1922. With your permission, I will file it.

McILHENNY. They are summarized as internal claims.

1232 INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO

Mr. HOWE. Now, Mr. McIlhenny, you have prepared a comparative statement of Haitian receipts and expenses both before and after the occupation by Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And you have that before you, have you not?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; and, with the permission of the committee, I would like to file them.

While the amounts shown in the second of the above tables under the "Current" are the amounts actually paid for current expenses during the year, it is a fact that some items of "current" expense were not paid during the year in which they accrued, and therefore the total of the two columns, "Past" and "Current," affords a more accurate and in any event a more conservative basis of comparison to determine the amounts which were available for debt service after payment of other expenses, as follows:

1913-14.	$1,281,374.84	1917-18.	$409,374.84
1914-15.	228,847.61	1918-19.	3,145,374.84
1915-16.	2,441,522.16	1919-20.	2,713,474.84
1916-17.	581,268.76	1920-21.	148,474.84

Following is the average of the last 10, 5, and 3 years of the receipts, and amounts available for debt service:

	Receipts.	Expenses.	Available for debts.
U.S. ....	$4,838,745.80
S. ....	4,797,906.88	$3,398,391.37	$1,399,606.51
S. ....	5,575,325.47	3,572,828.60	2,002,496.87

Following amounts will be required for debt service under the loan

100 external.....	$1,110,000
100 internal.....	350,000
Total.....	$1,460,000

McILHENNY. Since the beginning of the fiscal year 1919-20 the budgetary expenses (excluding debt service) has been $3,481,064.43. During two years it has been found necessary to grant extraordinary or supplementary credits to provide for emergencies or such permanent increase in expenses as, for example, that resulting from the amendment to the series agreement. Included in the extraordinary expenses of last year are such items as fighting a smallpox epidemic, $48,000; fires, $2,000; League of Nations, $10,000; fire-protection system for Port au Prince, $10,000; purchase of property, $10,000; supply purchase fund, $15,000; water system for Port au Prince, over $20,000; geodetic survey, $25,000. For the year just commencing the budgetary authorizations have been curtailed in certain items—

CHAIRMAN. That is, beginning last October?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir. For the year just commenced the budgetary authorizations have been curtailed in certain items to an extent sufficient to take care of the increased gendarmerie allowance and other permanent increases in expenses, and unless some unforeseen emergency occurs the current expenditure will be kept within the figure of $3,481,064.43 above mentioned.

CHAIRMAN. The expenses be added the amount of $1,460,000 for service of the consolidated external and internal debt under the loan project, the revenue required to meet current expenses and debt service will be $4,941,064.43.

CHAIRMAN. As against an estimated revenue of how much?

McILHENNY. An estimated revenue, judging from the past five months, of $6,000,000.

CHAIRMAN. You expect for the current fiscal year to have about $6,000,000 revenue?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir; judging by the quarter that has just passed.

CHAIRMAN. I will let you finish your statement before I ask any more questions.

McILHENNY. In the above calculation the amount required for payment of annual interest and sinking fund guaranty on the national railroad bonds included, as it has not heretofore been carried in the budget or paid. How much is to be paid (or at least funds are to be set aside and reserved for the payment) and it should be added to the necessary provision for current expenses, as follows:

Provision for current expenses.....	$3,481,064.43
Provision for National Railroad bonds.....	248,120.71
Necessary provision for current expenses.....	3,729,185.14
Provision for debt service.....	1,460,000.00
Total revenue requirements.....	5,189,185.14

The amount is well within the average receipts of the last three years, but less than the average receipts of the last five years. As to the five-year period, it should be stated that the first two of these were during the war, when Haitian exports were excluded by war restrictions from European markets and forreasing at the annual rate of $5,000.

oreign commerce was seriously curtailed by lack of maritime transportation that the last year was one of unprecedented world-wide economic depression. The customs receipts for the first four months of the current year are about the same as with the same period of the three years since the war are:

1918-19	-----	$1,000,000
1919-20	-----	2,500,000
1920-21	-----	1,200,000
1921-22	-----	1,400,000

The internal-revenue receipts for the first three months of the current year show an increase over the same period of the preceding year. There is no doubt that the total receipts for the current year will be sufficient to meet the requirements set forth above, present indications being that the total revenues will amount to about $6,000,000.

It should be stated also that it has never been intended to rely upon existing sources of revenue to meet current expenses and the debt service on the loan project. All important sources of revenue are now pledged to the service of some debt, and the revenue system can not be changed until the pledges are removed. They will be removed by the substitution, in place of a general pledge of all revenues and the burdensome export tax, of a reduced or removed, increasing cultivation of coffee and stimulating the increased volume of exports will result in increased imports and increased import revenues.

Senator POMERENE. Let me see if I understand your statement. Your position is that if this new loan is completed you can then get rid of the various pledges of the revenues for the payment of certain outstanding debts and then you can meet the terms of the new loan as well as the current expenses out of the present revenues?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir. I desire to say further, that as long as the external debts exist—and the internal as well—we have our customs affected, so pledged to these debts as to preclude the possibility of reorganizing the customs laws and establishing a more healthy condition of the economy of the country. As it is, the customs, both export and import taxes, are heavily upon the commerce of the country as to seriously retard the development of the country.

Senator POMERENE. Then, in addition, it is your claim, as I gather from your statement, though you have not said so specifically, that if this loan is negotiated, and with the present difference in value between our exchange and the French exchange, it would be a good business proposition from the point of view of the Haitians to make the loan and for our American dollar to pay off the French debt at the prevailing rates of exchange? Is that it?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt you one moment to ask what part of the customs duties accrue from the export tax on coffee; can you tell me now? Is it 30 per cent or 50 per cent?

Mr. McILHENNY. About 32 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, since the customs constitute 95 per cent of the revenues of the country, you might say that coffee produces, roughly, 32 per cent of all the revenue of the Republic of Haiti.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that is out of the pockets of the poorest class of the population, the Haitian peasant, who picks the coffee berry and takes it to market?

Mr. McILHENNY. It is an export tax. Coffee is one of our principal sources of revenue. Up to practically this period the major portion of the coffee crop was taken by France. I understand that there is a commercial treaty between Haiti and France by which that coffee goes into France at a tariff. France has been a distributor of the Haitian coffee to Germany, Belgium, and Holland. Haitians have gotten a very good price ordinarily for their coffee through the French market; but, by reason of the fall in the price of coffee in France has not been a purchaser of coffee to the same extent, and they have tried to sell it in the United States. But under the present export tax, at the time it leaves Haiti it leaves there with a charge of 3 cents gold per pound of coffee—

Senator POMERENE. And the same export duty to France?

Mr. McILHENNY. Oh, yes; but the import duty into the United States is so high that it makes it almost impossible to meet the Santos and Brazilian coffee in a fair market.

DR POMERENE. Do you recall what our import duty is now?

McILHENNY. No, Senator; I do not, just at this moment.

used in small lots as a grading coffee. It is an exceedingly fine coffee used in the blends in the coffee grading. If we were able by reason of abatement of our Haitian taxes to eliminate all export tax, I feel satisfied the entire Haitian crop would find a ready market in the United States in competition with any coffee.

CHAIRMAN. Why do you think that? Porto Rican coffee has not found a market.

McILHENNY. Because the Haitian coffee is a coffee of unusual excellence, never it has become known it pushes itself at once because of that excellence.

DR POMERENE. What effect would this have on your revenue? How could it reduce your revenue if you took off that 3 cents export duty?

McILHENNY. Senator, it could not be done at all until we have a readjustment of the taxes. What I mean by that is that upon a freeing of the obligations of taxes to these internal and external loans by refunding them to the country, by the enactment of an internal revenue law which would be ample and adequate, we would have the possibility of the gradual elimination of export taxes altogether and the assumption of a part of the burden of the loss by the internal revenue, as has been done in Santo Domingo most successfully, without any loss or diminution in the income of the country.

DR POMERENE. Is it the judgment of the Haitian Government and the people, as you have come in contact with it, that there should be this reduction of the internal revenues?

McILHENNY. The Haitian Government has expressed a willingness to accept the internal revenue schedules, and in part the law, but it has expressed unwillingness to enact an internal revenue law which would place the assessment, collection, and administration under American supervision.

DR ODDIE. Would the elimination of this export tax on coffee result in increased production?

McILHENNY. I think it would, sir, by providing a wider market for the coffee. The coffee is virtually wild now. There are no coffee plantations as we have coffee plantations elsewhere. It is a crop raised entirely by the peasants. There has been no development of the business. The peasant brings in when the prices suit him, and he won't bring it in when they do not suit him. If there is a poor market through conditions in France, as there has been the last two years or a year and a half, the peasant will not bring his crop in; he allows it to rot.

HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, in connection with Senator Pomerene's question about the internal revenues, I want to call your attention to your figures given on the first page of this memorandum. I see no figures there for internal revenue receipts up to the year 1915-16. For that year there was a little under $100,000 of internal revenue shown. For the year 1920-21 there was $360,000 of internal revenue, and the figures for the intervening years show a steady increase from 1915 to 1921. How has that increase come about?

McILHENNY. We have no records of the collection of internal revenue prior to the American intervention in 1915 and 1916. With the appointment of a financial adviser it has been brought to the attention of the Haitian Government that all revenues of every character authorized by law must be collected and placed in the treasury. Since the establishment of the fact that certain classes of taxes were making no return to the State there has been a gradual improvement in the collection of the internal revenue.

DR POMERENE. What do you mean by that statement, that the taxes made no return? You mean the taxes have been made, but there has been no return to the State?

McILHENNY. I mean that by law the authority for a tax is established, and obligation is established on the head of a department to determine what is taxable, and refer what is called the bordereau to the minister of finance for collection, the minister of finance being in the major number the collecting officer. These taxes do not appear in the records of the treasury as having been collected, but they are collectible under the law.

DR POMERENE. Well, have they been collected?

McILHENNY. There is no official evidence of their having been collected.

DR POMERENE. Is there any other evidence that they have been collected?

McILHENNY. In some instances.

Senator POMERENE. Has the American occupancy been charged with collection of those taxes?

Mr. MCILHENNY. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Have they had anything to do with it?

Mr. MCILHENNY. No, sir. The assessment and collection of internal revenue is entirely under the control of the Haitian Government. During the agency of my predecessor an agreement was reached with the Haitian Government that the expenditure of the moneys collected from the internal-revenue taxes should be under the supervision of the financial adviser, but as the collection of them is concerned there has been no authority in the treaty officials.

Mr. HOWE. That arrangement by Mr. Ruan, your predecessor, for over the expenditure of the internal revenues coincides with the first of the amounts of internal revenues, does it not?

Mr. MCILHENNY. No, sir; it does not coincide.

Mr. HOWE. How were you able to get your figures for 1915-16?

Mr. MCILHENNY. From the bank reports.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know if the banks had figures for the preceding year?

Mr. MCILHENNY. I do not.

Senator POMERENE. Let me understand. Are there any public or private records? You spoke of bank records down there.

Mr. HOWE. The bank was the depositary for internal revenues when in by the Haitian Government; is that correct?

Mr. MCILHENNY. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Well, why do you go to the bank for these records instead of to the treasury?

Mr. MCILHENNY. Because a great many of these records are not kept by the State. During my last discussion with the cabinet relative to it—I was making up my budget of ways and means, and under the pressure of necessity I was going very carefully into every available source of revenue. I am giving this incident as an illustration of what you ask. I had received the day before a schedule from the bank showing the amount of internal-revenue taxes received by that bank for the preceding quarter for the rental of Government lands.

I had read the law establishing the taxes and the method of collective assessment, and I was aware of the fact that the law provided that the taxes should be paid by the 15th of January of the year on which they fell due—payable in advance—and that if they were not paid by that time the lands became vacant again and returned to the custody of the State. The law also provided that the minister of the interior shall maintain all records, and through intricate procedure shall lease the lands and shall establish the rentals due the State. I noticed in this quarterly report of the bank that certain of the amounts opposite the name of the man who had paid them in covered a period of from two to three to five years for rentals of lands, and at the cabinet meeting I took up with the minister of the interior this question of the records from the rentals of the public lands. I asked him to make a report, he had a division devoted to the maintenance of the public-land department—to make me a report, by name and person and amount, as to the lands leased for the previous year. He promised to do it and to give it to me the next day.

But the next day came and he did not do it. I postponed considering the ways and means budget then until the next day. That kept up for virtually a week. Finally I said, "Mr. Minister, these records must be in your hands. We have delayed the ways and means budget now for nearly a week without this information from you. It is very necessary for me to have them as soon as possible for me to come to a just conclusion as to the resources of the Government without this information, and it will be necessary for me to ask the chief of office to go into your bureau and to obtain the records there himself."

He seemed startled by that; and then he said, "Why, he could not get the records." I asked him why. I said, "You must have them there, sir." He said, "No; I have not got any records." He said, "About four years ago I found it was so much trouble to keep those records I stopped keeping them. We have no record of leases of the Government lands."

For that reason it is difficult to establish what is due the State in the past and in the present. We know that a large amount of Government lands has been leased; but to whom, for what amount, we have no records upon which to base our assessments. In coming to a conclusion as to what amount might be rom this source by the State in writing the first ways and means budget, the opinions of the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Finance. There were no records upon which I could base anything. They made a guess, accepted it.

Import duties should also be revised so as to bear more equitably on the classes of consumers and increase the product of these duties. It is to offset the loss in revenue from export taxes by increased revenue from internal taxation, through increased efficiency of collection under American supervision, which it is believed would produce $1,000,000 from internal revenue now on the statute books, and through establishing new sources of internal stop there to make the statement that last year the present Minister of Finance, at the urgent request of the acting financial adviser, put in operation internal revenue law which, I think, has been on the statute books for 10 years at least, but has never been applied.

or POMERENE. What do you mean by that? That no collections have been made under it?

McILHENNY. No collections have been made under it.

or POMERENE. Though it provided for collections?

McILHENNY. No collections were made at all under that law.

LowE. Although it provided for it?

McILHENNY. It provided for it, but so far as any records are concerned, as we have any knowledge, no collections were made. The present Minister of Finance put it in operation.

or POMERENE. You say "so far as the records are concerned." Do you mean that you have other information that revenues were collected?

McILHENNY. No; I have not. I have no information as to it at all. I can say that the law, to the best of my knowledge, has been on the books for 10 years at the very least, and it has never been applied.

or POMERENE. Do you recall what classes of taxes they were, or what classes of taxation were covered by that law?

McILHENNY. No; I could not give you that information, Senator, off-or POMERENE. Can you give us a memorandum for the record?

McILHENNY. Yes.

or POMERENE. And if you can, I wish you would please state when the law was passed and what taxes were provided for, and if you have anything reliable to base an intelligent estimate as to the amount of taxes which have been collected under that law, I wish you would include that in your statement, too.

McILHENNY. In one schedule of taxes collected, obtained from the Ministry of Finance, for the last year appeared two items which have never appeared in any tax schedule heretofore, which amount to about $41,000.

or POMERENE. What were the items that you are speaking of?

McILHENNY. An income tax and what they call transfer stamps.

or POMERENE. Do you know how long that law has been in operation?

McILHENNY. My recollection is that the original law was enacted in 1908, and it was supplemented by a law of 1913.

McILHENNY. The experience of the last two years shows how dangerously they rely upon customs duties as practically the only source of revenue. On the other hand, economic depression has had practically no effect upon the amount of receipts from internal taxes. With internal taxes as the principal and more stable source of revenue this danger will be removed and the total receipts will be adequate to meet the debt service and current expenses.

or ODDIE. I would like to ask you what the wharfing privileges amount to on imports and exports. Is there a percentage?

McILHENNY. Yes. For 1920, Senator, it amounted to $40,760.29 for the wharfage at Port au Prince.

or ODDIE. That includes exports and imports both?

McILHENNY. Yes.

CHAIRMAN. Has that concession been taken over by the Government?

McILHENNY. No, sir. It has been sold, you know. It is in a curious condition. It was one of the old German companies. It was afterwards sold by the Haitian-American Sugar Corporation, which got into difficulties.

CHAIRMAN. It is in the hands of a receiver now, is it not?

McILHENNY. Yes, sir; however, its assets have been sold by the receiver for about $650,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the company which owns the Centrale and road to the Cul de Sac?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; but that sale has been stayed by Judge M. the prayer of the minority stockholders. Just what is going to be do not know. But that concession bears very heavily on the part of the Prince, because it provides that every ton that goes in and every ton that must pay a dollar to the Haitian Government for the wharf company; makes no difference whether it goes over the wharf or whether it is in by lighter and lighted from the lower bay.

The CHAIRMAN. They terminated the lighthouse concession?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir. The term for which the concession was expired.

(Thereupon, at 12.50 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee resumed its session at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the order of recess.

The CHAIRMAN. We are ready, gentlemen, to resume. Dr. Kelsey, please hear you.

STATEMENT OF PROF. CARL KELSEY, OF THE FACULTY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor Kelsey, will you give your name and address to the reporter?

Professor KELSEY. My name is Carl Kelsey. My home is at Mendon, Massachusetts. I am on the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell the committee when you went to Haiti and the circumstances which led to your going there?

Professor KELSEY. For many years I have been associated with Dr. Rowe, the president of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. We had discussed the advisability of sending some one to Haiti and Santo Domingo to make an impartial survey of the situation—with no thought of going. When I came back to the university a year ago I found, from very small indications that I was very tired, and the doctors advised me to take immediate rest. The result was that Doctor Rowe then asked me if I would go down to Haiti. I went, reaching Haiti on the 2d of February of last year, and remained in Haiti until the 2d of July.

Mr. HOWE. Of 1921?

Professor KELSEY. 1921; and then I went over to Santo Domingo and remained there until, I think, the 22d of October.

The CHAIRMAN. We want to keep the two separate.

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You went at the instance of the American Academy of Political and Social Science?

Professor KELSEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And were in Haiti about six months?

Professor KELSEY. Five months.

The CHAIRMAN. Five months?

Professor KELSEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any point of view about Haiti and the American occupation of Haiti when you went there?

Professor KELSEY. I had had no personal contact with Haiti in any way—form, or fashion. I had known nothing about it, except general newspaper reports. The only point of view that I can be said to have had was the common-sense view as to just why we were there such a length of time, and the presumption in favor of an early withdrawal. Practically, however, I had no feeling.

The CHAIRMAN. While you were in Haiti did you travel over the country?

Professor KELSEY. I went first to Port au Prince, and as soon as I was able enough French to carry on small conversations—I had read French for many years but never spoken it—I began going about the country, first to the immediately outlying regions, and then across the country. I went first to the town of Hatien; later I went, by boat, around to Cayes, stopping at Jeremie. I also went on horseback throughout the interior.

HAIRMAN. In the direction of Mirebalais?

SOR KELSEY. I went through Mirebalais to Las Cahobas, and then north the San Michel Valley.

HAIRMAN. Did you stop on the way to spend the night, and so on?

SOR KELSEY. Yes; I spent, as I recall it, something over two weeks on prior trip; I spent several days in Mirebalais and several in Las Cahobas, or three in the San Michel Valley. I also went out from Cape Haitien her of points near there.

HAIRMAN. On horseback?

SOR KELSEY. On horseback, and also on that little railroad that runs Bahon.

HAIRMAN. Were you able to talk to the peasants in Creole, as well as in SOR KELSEY. Not in Creole at all.

HAIRMAN. Did you ever go alone on those trips?

SOR KELSEY. Yes, and no; I went as opportunity offered. I went with all people; I went with Haitians; I went with Americans and Europeans there.

HAIRMAN. Who, for example, did you go with on that trip through San Valley?

SOR KELSEY. I went alone, stopping at the camps of the marines.

HAIRMAN. Were you accompanied by the military on your journey?

SOR KELSEY. By one or two boys in guiding me across country, who took place to place.

HAIRMAN. You mean the marines?

SOR KELSEY. The marines, but I was left entirely free to go and come used.

HAIRMAN. Well, you had pretty free access to various elements of the on then in all parts of the country?

SOR KELSEY. In so far as I could get along in French with them. I may ator, that when I went there I was extremely careful to avoid being d in any way with the marines in the minds of the people. I did not go merican Club; I did not go with the marines; I went with the natives. nto the native clubs. I was there nearly every day.

HAIRMAN. The native club?

SOR KELSEY. Yes; and the corresponding club in Cape Haitien, for in- While I was there I was taking French lessons all the time with one of ch priests, so that I came in contact with another group.

HAIRMAN. I think if the other members of the committee are willing, Dr. ad better proceed in his own fashion to give his impressions of Haiti, pation and the policy which he thinks ought to be pursued there.

SOR KELSEY. Senator, I am at your disposal. I did not come here with speech of any sort, because all that I want to do is to put any facts I ve at your service, and I should feel a bit freer myself if you asked s.

OWE. I have been having lunch with Doctor Kelsey, and although in the our disposal we did not talk very much, I gathered from him he would ave topics suggested.

HAIRMAN. Would you go on with the examination?

OWE. I can start, I think.

HAIRMAN. Do.

OWE. In Port au Prince, Doctor Kelsey, with what class of the popula- you come in contact?

SSOR KELSEY. Of course, most intimately with the higher grade of busi- l professional men.

OWE. Among the Haitians?

SSOR KELSEY. Among the Haitians; almost wholly so.

OWE. Did you talk with them about the politics of the day and about pation?

SSOR KELSEY. Oh, yes. I may add that of course I was an object of y to the Haitians. They could not understand that an American was ere studying the situation, and every conceivable post was assigned to of the commonest being the advance agent of your committee to discover ts and make a report to you as to what might be learned. There was no y in getting at the people; they were hunting for me as soon as they that I was there.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what impression the occupation has made on peasant people of the interior individually?

Professor KELSEY. At one of the little interior towns, the French priest—the officer in charge of the gendarmerie called together, I should say, some of the prominent men of the community—this is rural, absolutely rural—the little village there, a few houses—and we had, I think, two or three brief discussion one morning to get their attitude, to get the country group. This was in a district in which there had been trouble for years, in which peasants had suffered greatly from the roaming brigands; they had lost animals; they had frequently had their houses burned and their gardens

The CHAIRMAN. Was this long before our coming, or after our arrival?

Professor KELSEY. It was a long-continued story. Now, the first unanimous expressed opinion on the part of that group was that conditions were such that the peasants were rebuilding; they were planting more ground that had planted in years, and that they felt great confidence in the marines. "Gentlemen, I am an American taxpayer; it costs us a large sum of money to keep these men here. Unless they are needed and are really doing useful work, I am in favor of withdrawing them to save our country the expense. Now, said, "I want to know your attitude." Immediately a protest from every man in the group; the men must not be withdrawn. I said, "Why must they be withdrawn?" "Because we have no confidence in our local administration of the local government."

Senator POMERENE. Now, I suppose it would shed a light on the picture to show us something of the character of the men you are talking about.

Professor KELSEY. Yes; here is the chief of the section, the most important local office; here is the school-teacher; here are one or two of the more prominent farmers; they are men of that type gathered from the environment.

Senator POMERENE. They were fairly representative of the intelligent men of that community?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; I was told by the French priest that they were leaders in that community.

Senator POMERENE. Now, proceed with your story.

Professor KELSEY. I said, "Why not replace the American officers of the gendarmerie with Haitians?" "No," they said immediately. I said, "Why not?" They said, "We have no confidence in them. We have absolute confidence in the Americans." Their unanimity on that point was very strong. I talked then about their financial problem in Haiti; I asked them about taxes; asked them what had been done in the past in the development of schools, and they answered one point after another. Finally I said to them toward the close of the conference, "Gentlemen, I don't want you to do this; I want you to think about it." I said, "You have practically told me that you have no confidence whatever in the ability of the Haitian Government either to maintain law and order or to bring about an orderly development of this country; you are practically saying that in your opinion the Americans should not only remain here and keep peace but should take absolute control of the entire Government." They suddenly sat up and looked man to man. They saw the significance of it. I said, "Now, don't say a word, but this is practically what you have asked us to do in your analysis of the whole situation."

Mr. HOWE. You gathered that that conclusion came to them as somewhat of a shock?

Professor KELSEY. In summarizing it, yes. They met each individual with "Yes"; but they had not thought of tying the whole thing together—what would be left for the local government. They saw the point quite when I suggested it.

Mr. HOWE. Did you get the view of any other class of Haitians down there about the officers of the gendarmerie?

Professor KELSEY. About the Haitian officers for the gendarmerie?

Mr. HOWE. Yes.

Professor KELSEY. The Haitians have the feeling that it is going to be extremely difficult for us to get the highest grade of Haitians to enter the gendarmerie at the present salary. There may be some measure of justice in that complaint; but, on the other hand, if you figure over against the total income of the country the cost of the gendarmerie, and consider what those men get in any other calling, it is extremely doubtful whether they are being paid at the present time. I think it would be a very difficult matter to get competent Haitians to put in the gendarmerie; competent, not in the sense apacity, but the one complaint I got from Haitians everywhere was the the Haitian gendarmes. The minute power was put in their hands used it.

HAIRMAN. May I ask you a question on that point? Is that attitude instatbulary or gendarmerie toward the native population analogous to ude of the military prior to the occupation?

SSOR KELSEY. It doubtless was. The Haitians have always expected to ited by every man in charge. Always expected it. They believe that an in office is exploiting or grafting in some way. They are perfectly t that they would if they were in that position themselves. And, of this affected their attitude and belief toward our men. They can not of a man that would not do it. I am speaking of the general and an, not the best men.

HAIRMAN. Before you go on, Mr. Howe, I wanted to ask Dr. Kelsey for tions with other people, and if conversations with other people con- or failed to confirm the impression which he had formed from the g of notables which he has just described.

SSOR KELSEY. Well, practically the statements on those points are us, made to me by every class of men with whom I came in contact.

HAIRMAN. Every class?

SSOR KELSEY. Yes; every class, native and foreign.

HAIRMAN. You have talked with every class of men?

SSOR KELSEY. Yes; I have tried to make that very clear in my report.

OR POMERENE. Let me ask you a question. You, a moment ago, said that ected to be exploited by those in authority. Did you get that impres- in your interviews with these people during the period you were there, ou get it from other investigations, as, for instance, their history, etc.?

SSOR KELSEY. Solely, at first, from the individuals with whom I came ct. I also found it confirmed in a number of books written by their en—written in French—books of which we have very little knowledge in ntry. I was very much surprised, Senator, to see the amount of careful at they had made, and the analyses that they had made of their own n, and whether it is Mr. Vincent or some one else, for instance, Marcelin, s Minister of Finance for a long time, and considered one of the ablest he last generation in Haiti. They all said the same thing.

HAIRMAN. Have you brought any of those works home?

SSOR KELSEY. I have two or three, some secured from Paris since my HAIRMAN. If you cause extracts to be taken from them and sent to the ee it would be very interesting.

SSOR KELSEY. I will do that.

OR POMERENE. You used another expression. You say that their mind h that they were expecting to be exploited. I take it it is a fairly deduct- erence from what you have said that this was not the result of mere tion.

SSOR KELSEY. On my part?

OR POMERENE. No; on their part. I am speaking of their attitude of t was the result of their own experience?

SSOR KELSEY. You can not talk with any Haitian for 10 minutes and n this subject that he does not immediately give you descriptions. You alize that the salaries paid to local officers are anywhere from $2 or $3 h up, and that frequently they have been expected to spend a good deal r time in the public work. I was talking one day to a citizen of Cape u. He was speaking about the necessity of paying local officials much oney than they had ever paid them in the past, and he very frankly came th the statement: "You can't expect those men to live on the amounts ey that have been paid them. They are either going to utterly neglect ul business or else seek to recoup themselves by the control of the local nd."

HOWE. Was he referring to the time during the time of occupation, or is to occupation?

SSOR KELSEY. We were talking of the whole general situation, even as- that the Americans withdrew completely. He said it was obvious that hange would have to be introduced.

HOWE. Can you give us what impressions you got as to the work of the Corps down there, and the opinion of the Haitians as to the work of irine Corps?

Professor KELSEY. I am very glad to do what I can. The work of the Marine Corps, of course, has been limited practically to one thing, and that is the maintenance of peace and order. At the very outset, as you will remember, the heads of the Marine Corps took over certain administrative functions for a brief time. Practically, however, there has not been anything else done to keep order, and that is all they are doing at the present time, unless I include the Marine Corps officers who have been transferred to the gendarmerie. Those men won a great deal of my respect as I met them about the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The ones serving with the marines, or the gendarmerie?

Professor KELSEY. I am speaking first of the gendarmerie. They are in isolated regions, so poverty stricken that no American can picture the situation, living in miserable shacks, as we should call them, absolutely devoid of any contact with men or women of their kind; ruling more or less as despots by virtue of their positions.

Now, as I went around the country talking to all sorts of folks as I did, I was impressed by the very friendly attitude of the natives toward them. The educated natives would tell me frankly of individual men whom they did not like, of things which they considered wrong, or of abuses, as they called them.

Senator POMERENE. Speak of them, will you not, in that connection?

Professor KELSEY. In this connection?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; or if you prefer to come back to it later I wanted to hear what you had to say about that.

Professor KELSEY. The Haitian everywhere considers the abuses accidental and insignificant. Very few of them have ever seen any case of abuse of any sort. The wildest sort of rumors spread current throughout the population and are accepted freely with reference to every subject. By unanimous testimony to me from leading Haitians was that the amount of cruelty inflicted by the marines was vastly less than would have been if only the Haitians had the marines not been there. There was no dissent in that statement on the part of any Haitians. In other words, in my judgment the Haitian emphasizes cruelties because of its influence on American opinion and not because he cares a rap what happens to the Haitian.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Doctor, you have spoken of this as being thus expressed to you on all hands. Do you mean by that that you had interviewed enough of the Haitians to draw a conclusion which is satisfactory to your mind that what you have just told the committee here was the prevailing opinion among the Haitians?

Professor KELSEY. That statement has been made to me by men high in the Government of Haiti, by some of the best-informed men in private life, from that on down to the rank and file of the ordinary man in the country. They do not cover the instances or cases of misconduct.

Senator POMERENE. Now, did you attempt, while you were there, where you would hear of these special cases of cruelty, to trace them down?

Professor KELSEY. Never.

Senator POMERENE. To ascertain what the facts were?

Professor KELSEY. Never. I did not look on myself in any sense as an investigator of the conduct of the Marine Corps. But I always asked the Haitians, "Now, admitting that that individual case that you mention may be true, does it compare with the general situation; what is your net impression of the conduct?" I tell you, Senator, when you see Haitians bringing heavy fruit and vegetables 25 or 30 miles and carrying them to a boy who has been an official in their community it does not indicate they are antagonistic in attitude.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean after he had gone?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, yes; after he had gone; transferred to another part of the island. Why, you meet young lieutenants and captains who are sent out of their way to interview the natives on every possible occasion. I was one man two days on board of the boat, who spent a large part of his time, he was not talking to me, in going about and speaking to the Haitians who were on the same boat, and there happened to be a large number, talking about conditions in Haiti. There is very little animosity in Haiti that I know of toward the Marine Corps; there is a great deal of regret with reference to individual instances.

Senator POMERENE. Unless there is something further than you want to say in regard to the Marine Corps, you were going to give a definition of the relation between them and those in charge of the gendarmerie?

SOR KELSEY. Yes; because the average Haitian comes in no contact with the marines. You have them localized. You take the southwest part. There are no marines there except the half dozen who are connected with the gendarmerie. The average native does not see a marine of any sort, unless he happens to be near one of the towns where these officers are located.

CHAIRMAN. Say that I was carrying, all the time, letters of introduction from me to other Haitians in the community. When I was in there I was escorted, always by a gendarme officer, to see these different people, sometimes by the gendarme, often I went alone. I met the foreign residents of the different communities, entirely independently, and no other person present whatever. So that I could make a fair estimate of what the people thought. Of course, I may be deceived.

CHAIRMAN. Will you speak of the gendarmerie?

SOR KELSEY. Yes. Now, I say, I rule that out and you have little contact with the people and the Marine Corps.

MR. POMERENE. Another question: You have spoken of the few marines who are in charge of the native Haitian gendarmerie. What did you learn of the conduct of this Haitian gendarmerie toward the people generally?

SOR KELSEY. The common statement made, both by men in the Marine Corps and by natives and by foreign residents of Haiti, was that at first there were many instances of overbearing misconduct on the part of native gendarmes. That was given to me by the natives themselves, educated natives. One of the chief factors of the antagonism to the corvée system, the one inflicted by the gendarmerie on the men whom they were to escort, the subsequent trouble is charged to the marines, because they had the control. At first there was great reluctance to report any misconduct on the part of the gendarmerie.

MR. POMERENE. Reluctance on the part of whom?

SOR KELSEY. Reluctance on the part of the native. He was afraid it would come back on him. Subsequently, when he found he could report these things, he began doing it, and the men in charge told me they were having trouble now; that they felt that any real misconduct on the part of the gendarmerie would be immediately reported to headquarters.

MR. POMERENE. Then can I fairly infer from your statement that this feeling of fear lest something untoward should happen to them was a feeling which grew out of their previous experience?

SOR KELSEY. Yes.

MR. POMERENE. With the Haitian gendarmerie, or others in control?

SOR KELSEY. Yes; universally.

MR. POMERENE. And not due to cruelties that they feared they might fall into the hands of the Americans themselves; is that right?

SOR KELSEY. Absolutely. If you went through the country districts of Haiti, you noticed the preponderance of women on the roads. In the towns, many native men appearing in the towns was liable to be seized for military service. They were afraid to go to the towns. Under the corvée system, after that was introduced, there existed in the mind of the peasant that if he went into the town he would be seized and forced to do military service. One got many evidences of a changed feeling. The French priests told me that the men were coming more freely to the towns; they were no longer afraid to be seen on the road. I hailed peasants who were working in the native cabin. There were indications that one had been burned there. I had a very friendly little conversation. I said, "Is it all right to build in here?" He said, "Oh, yes; no trouble now to build our cabin right here. I never encountered any indication of fear on the part of the Haitians toward our representatives, and I watched for that, because that was a thing which I legitimately look for."

CHAIRMAN. You think the morale and conduct of the gendarmerie are improving them?

SOR KELSEY. Oh, yes; that is the testimony of their officers, as well as of the natives.

MR. POMERENE. Let me pursue that inquiry of the chairman a little bit further. You feel, then, that the instruction and conduct of the marine officers who are in charge of the gendarmerie is developing the native Haitians along better lines?

SOR KELSEY. My impression is that it is. I gained a very high respect for the way in which the average man and officer is behaving himself in Haiti, and I think these men in these isolated communities deserve far more credit than we have ever given them. We have heard a lot about the bad things, good things are never told.

Senator POMERENE. Where and from whom did you first learn these about the cruelties of the marines toward the natives?

Professor KELSEY. In the American press before going.

Senator POMERENE. What papers?

Professor KELSEY. If I were to single out one, I should say that the New Nation has probably contained more reports that came to my notice than any other single paper.

Senator POMERENE. Any other papers?

Professor KELSEY. Now, that is an embarrassing question, Senator. I do not want to be unjust to that particular paper. It is the one that came out, to my mind, because I got hold of that and clipped it. I did not pay attention to the miscellaneous newspaper reports. I have been more careful, therefore, with that which The Nation has published than the others. The History, if I remember correctly, has had certain articles.

The CHAIRMAN. Articles by Mr. Knowles on Santo Domingo.

Professor KELSEY. Yes; and I think there have been others—I mean other people. There is also a little magazine published in New York in which I believe contained some criticisms that had come to my notice.

Senator POMERENE. Now, when I asked that question I had reference to the information that you may have had prior to or in the early days of your visit in Haiti. In other words, I was seeking to find out how it was that you got the impression that the marines were generally cruel; and you have told us that your investigation resulted in a very profound respect for the marines and their conduct there.

Professor KELSEY. Yes. Well, the answer to that is easy. I got it from the American press.

Senator POMERENE. Did you get any of it while you were in Port au Prince?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, yes; because both natives and foreigners told me specific cases which had come to their attention. Americans resident there told me of specific cases—plenty of them.

Senator POMERENE. I think that is all I care to ask on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not think instances are many, then, considering the number of marines who served?

Professor KELSEY. No; I think they are grossly exaggerated, and I think their importance is tremendously exaggerated.

The CHAIRMAN. Before we leave the subject of the gendarmerie and the Marine Corps will you not speak of the military courts acting under martial law so called or miscalled?

Professor KELSEY. You are really asking me to speak of another thing, and that is the Haitian court. I mean that I just want you to see that it involves another question.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, Doctor Kelsey, I want you, if you will then, to speak of the military and civil courts both in such sequence, etc., as you would like.

Professor KELSEY. Well, now, to get back of it: The Haitians have no confidence in their courts; nor has any foreigner any confidence in a Haitian court.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you speak now of the courts of first instance or the courts of cassation?

Professor KELSEY. Primarily of the lower courts, with which the people come in contact. There are able men in a few of the courts. I have seen in my printed report there, which is, or will be, before you, a number of citations which came to my notice, and in my statement here I am not saying any more than I can help the things that I have said perhaps much better in the connected form there.

Senator POMERENE. You expect to offer this as a part of your testimony?

Professor KELSEY. Yes. I hope that enough copies will be here to supply all to-day.

Mr. Howe. Doctor, I hope to have them here this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, in any event we will incorporate it in the record. You not continue to speak upon what I consider a very important subject—civil and military courts?

Professor KELSEY. Well, now, whatever the facts are I think we have to recognize the attitude of the people, and the question of how the courts of Haiti are going to be reformed will be one of the most difficult of the internal questions. I have no opinion whatever to offer. The foreigners resident there have no confidence whatever in the securing of justice through the courts, and that has he question of the introduction of the military courts. There was very icism—there came to me, at least, very little criticism of the military Haiti. There was a feeling that at times they had given perhaps undue nt for relatively minor offenses, but they aroused no particular antago- such, and the only place where it seems to have created any interest was due to the control of the press, if that is a pertinent point.

CHAIRMAN. Well, for practical purposes the jurisdiction of the military confined to attacks upon the gendarmerie or Marine Corps?

or KELSEY. Yes.

AIRMAN. Or perhaps cases arising out of frauds in the customs; is that or KELSEY. No; it does not get them all; because about a year and a a collector at Ounaminthe got away with about $5,000 of the customs or KELSEY. No; that was after their jurisdiction had been limited, and e courts discharged him on the ground that if he stole anything at all ave been from the Americans. The outside public immediately accepted other illustration of the necessity for extending the power of the Ameri- the courts rather than restricting it.

AIRMAN. Well, was that not the occasion of the extension of their juris-

e have to go back to the fact that in the older preoccupation days no r dared criticize the Government unless it were ready for a revolution- k.

r POMERENE. Do you mean by that prior to our getting in Haiti?

or KELSEY. Prior to our getting into Haiti there had been no criticism overment; the papers never printed it. Every Haitian told me last hat the press was exercising a freedom that they had never seen in the Very many prominent Haitians expressed great regret to me that we l the sort of attacks to be made in the papers that we did permit.

r POMERENE. Now, when you speak of the Haitians who thus expressed s to you, do you mean those who were connected with the Haitian Gov- or do you mean private citizens, or both?

or KELSEY. Both, as a matter of fact. Not only that, but there were r men there who did not believe it should be permitted.

r POMERENE. Haitian newspaper men?

or KELSEY. Haitian newspaper men.

r ODDIE. The higher class of newspaper men?

or KELSEY. Yes; very obviously the higher class. And they felt very when the order went forth last summer which put a stop to some of the

it. The papers were reaching the point where some overt outbreak rtainly have followed had they been permitted to continue; because, ith an emotional people, and not wholly self-controlled, there was only ble result if it continued. There was a very great feeling of relief in en the order went out last June to check it.

r POMERENE. Would you say that that was the general feeling among ians?

or KELSEY. Now, you must remember that the newspapers directly very small percentage of the Haitian people, and the average man who news at second hand neither knows nor understands nor cares how rs are handled.

or POMERENE. You were referring to the reading public?

or KELSEY. Yes; they could see no good coming out of that agita- l they were afraid that it might lead to an outbreak which would ouble; even those who were hopeful that we might be induced to v very soon deprecated that sort of an attack.

or POMERENE. Now, in order that your answer may be a little more what portion of the population of Haiti do you regard as embracing ing public?

or KELSEY. Well, the best estimates that I could get there were that e than 3 to 5 per cent of the people could read and write.

or POMERENE. Of the whole island?

or KELSEY. Of the country.

HAIRMAN. I do not want to leave the question of the courts until we hether Doctor Kelsey believes it would be possible to abolish the courts until a reformation of the civil courts has been brought about.

Professor KELSEY. Well, practically your military court at the present is not functioning in anything that deals with the ordinary citizen in this matter of newspaper control. Now, that being true, there is little contact. I do not believe that the native officials a year ago could have done anything with the native press in the native courts. Now, that affected by our military courts, perhaps, but it shows that there is a feeling there very difficult to handle.

Now, unless you have gotten some scheme of organization that really has the effective cooperation of the courts with the de facto government, you have a very serious situation on your hands.

I will illustrate that by one statement. The last constitution granted the right of the ownership of property to foreigners. About July, 1920, an act of council that right was canceled and foreigners were given until 1921, to dispose of their holdings. Meantime there arose early in 1921 a case in court. The tenant of a foreign landlord refused to pay rent, and the case was taken up in court, and the court immediately, ignoring the constitution of 1918, based its decision on the old constitution and said the tenant must not have to pay rent to a foreign landlord, because he held that position in defiance of law. Now, if that were to be accepted by the court of appeals, remembering that in that intervening period many foreigners, not all of them, who had held property under the guise of mortgage, the old law was dodging the law, but had converted it into direct ownership, if they were threatened by loss of their property through that sort of a deal, and they would hold to that old constitution, you would have international complications of no small magnitude. And that is the present situation in Haiti. That is held in abeyance, apparently to see what the Americans are going to do. Now, there is no way of meeting that situation with anything but an existing program.

The CHAIRMAN. Have we any program?

Professor KELSEY. I am merely speaking of that which is going on here. I think you will find quite a number of that type of cases that involve outside interests for which some adjustment must be found.

Senator POMERENE. Well, pursuing the thought which your statement suggests a little further, suppose that we were to leave the island and the jurisdiction of this court should not be reversed, what would be the effect so far as interference by other Governments or the Governments of these foreigners is concerned?

Professor KELSEY. They would cable for European gunboats.

The CHAIRMAN. During the half dozen years since the landing of the American forces and the negotiation of the treaty of 1915, what has been done by the initiative of this Government or American officials or officers in Haiti to advance and to further the organization of Haiti, to develop its administrative system, to spread education, to develop agriculture? What, in short, by the establishment and maintenance of peace and the building of the highway and the cleaning up of the coast towns, is there to show the presence in Haiti during the five or six years?

Professor KELSEY. Nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, do you consider that, measured by our accomplishments in Cuba and the Philippines, on the whole we have done a poor job in Haiti?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And do you believe that in the same compass of time might do something substantial for the development of the agricultural resources of the country and its revenues and for the organization of its administrative system?

Professor KELSEY. I can not feel anything but hopeful with reference to Haiti. Haiti is very friendly toward the United States. Whatever misdeeds have been done down there are attributed to mistaken policies of the United States Government, not to the people of the United States. There is a real sentiment of friendship. Haiti is despondent; it lacks confidence in its own ability to recover and develop. It feels that we have bungled. Haiti does not want us to leave. Haiti wants us to stay there. I am, of course, my opinion of Haiti's wants.

The CHAIRMAN. And this is despite the expressed views of the Patriotic League?

Professor KELSEY. Well, it is in spite of their American expressed views.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is what I mean.

Professor KELSEY. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Their views expressed to us, you mean?

or KELSEY. Yes; through certain channels. I do not want to seem when I make that sort of remark, but you must remember that a man a very difficult position in a community if a patriotic movement, so organized against another group. Whether he likes it or not, it is a man who does not go with the current and give it his nominal support, his real feelings are.

CHAIRMAN. Well, do you mean there are members of the Union Patriotique who privately cherish other opinions than those that that body as a body has?

or KELSEY. If you mean that they do not cherish an ideal of an independent and free Haiti in the future, no; they are all agreed on that.

CHAIRMAN. Yes.

or KELSEY. If you mean that they all want us to withdraw and leave ourselves, most certainly no. Some of the most prominent men there believe for one moment that we should withdraw, nor do they want us to stay.

or POMERENE. Do you mean the most prominent in the Union Patriotique?

or KELSEY. Yes.

or ODDIE. How large a percentage of the population and how representative is the Union Patriotique in Haiti?

or KELSEY. I don't know its membership. It includes a fairly large percentage of the educated class. Of course, the mass of Haitians never had any voice in national matters.

CHAIRMAN. Was there ever a time, in your judgment, when the mass of the people were politically conscious and deliberately chose their governors?

or KELSEY. Do you mean in Haiti?

CHAIRMAN. Yes.

or KELSEY. No; there has never been anything but a very small minority voting, according to their own statements. I have one record of a provisional president who said in one of the communes just outside Port au Prince, that the delegates would be appointed militarily and not by the people. That was his summing up of an election.

or POMERENE. You say that was under one of the provisional presidents?

or KELSEY. Yes; that was before we went in there. There never has been an election in Haiti. There never has been any democracy in Haiti. It is a perfectly foolish use of language to talk as if there had been. Haiti traded in a slave system under white slave owners for a slave system under mulatto and they have run under a slave régime from the first up to the present.

or POMERENE. Do you think that is a condition of any substantial part of the peasantry in the country?

or KELSEY. Do you mean slavery?

or POMERENE. Yes.

or KELSEY. Not under that name. Theoretically, any individual in Haiti may become president if he has military force and personal strength. Practically, the overwhelming mass of them are condemned to the direst poverty with no hope of any way out. If you want to see what the average Haitian thinks of the welfare of the Haitian people make a careful analysis of the contract-labor trade with Cuba since the war, or during the war.

CHAIRMAN. Have you anything on that subject?

or KELSEY. I gave a little suggestion of it. I did not go very far into it. That is nothing but a modified slave trade, with a great financial gain to those who are engaged in it.

or POMERENE. I take it you have investigated the history of Haiti?

or KELSEY. Slightly.

or POMERENE. Will you state what was done by the Haitian ruling classes down there, the military classes, toward the development of the island socially or educationally prior to the time that we entered upon the island?

or KELSEY. The first thing was that with the overthrow of the French plantations, the old system of production, immediately went into disarray. The Haitian rulers saw that, and for 30 or 40 years after the leaving of the French they tried by a system of compulsory labor to maintain the old scale of production. They absolutely failed, as is perhaps best evidenced by the fact that from the time the French left down to 1919 no sugar had been exported from Haiti.

CHAIRMAN. From the time the French left?

Professor KELSEY. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Until 1919?

Professor KELSEY. Until 1919, and that was sugar manufacture: American-owned mill. All the thousands of plantations, as such, have disappeared. At the present time in Haiti there are no coffee plantations: peasants pick the berries from the plants descended from the trees brought by the French. There is no scientific agriculture anywhere in Haiti!

The CHAIRMAN. Well, there is no organized agriculture?

Professor KELSEY. No organized agriculture. A very competent man that in 1915 he did not believe there were a thousand well-tilled acres in Haiti. It had simply gone from an enormous production when there were there, down to almost nothing. Anyone who rides across the plain north in Haiti and keeps his eyes open realizes that that must have been a garden spot at one time. It has all gone to decay. There are no large plantations in Haiti, and those that are now beginning to reach a size are remnants of recent years.

A prominent Haitian asked me if I had seen a beautiful spot above the Prince. I said "No. But if you want me to see something take me out to the best farms." And he said, "There are none." He was telling the truth: there are no best farms. It is all a hit-or-miss, simple peasant agriculture. The civilization of Haiti is on the coast. The interior is, to all intents and purposes, Africa. If you will read any good description of African civilization you won't weary you with names—you will have a perfect description of the interior of Haiti everywhere, except that in Haiti the tribal standards have gone.

The CHAIRMAN. And most of tribal customs.

Professor KELSEY. The tribal customs have disappeared. That sort of tribal customs and the national customs, if you will, has never been there. It is an amorphous sort of a mass that you have there.

They have no idea of relationship to the Government.

There are no direct taxes. They do not see that they are paying taxes $3 a hundred that every peasant pays on his coffee he does not see, he does not know. The only tax he feels is perhaps the few centimes that he has to pay for displaying his wares in the little village market. That money is said to be used for the keeping up of the market and public improvements. That man has no visualization of a central government, no relation. With a charge is a matter of complete indifference to him. He does not care, when some orator comes around and stirs him up. He is solely interested in getting enough to live on. He is hungry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does he know the name of his own President, do you know?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; he knows that, because that is the way they tell their births. As a general rule he will know the name of his President.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they know the name of his Minister of the Interior?

Professor KELSEY. No; they do not know the name of his Minister of the Interior, nor do they have the slightest conception of his function. They can only hear the name of the President; that gets to them. Ask a man or a woman, "When were you born?" and the answer will be, "Under President So-and-so."

The CHAIRMAN. You do not think they would know the name of the Minister of the Interior?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, no, no; save by accident.

Senator POMERENE. Now, in that connection, as you are discussing these things and the amorphous condition of affairs, while we were taking this test at Port au Prince the president of the Union Patriotique said, in answer to questions which were asked about education in the island, that they had a compulsory educational statute which was passed, I think, in 1865, in any case in the sixties. Do you know whether there was such a statute as that?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, yes; there is no lack of statutes with reference to anything you want.

Senator POMERENE. And what was done in the way of administering that statute?

Professor KELSEY. Very, very little. There were no publicly-owned school buildings. There are only a handful of children in reality in the entire island in school. About half of them appeared to have been in schools conducted by the French Brothers and Sisters.

Senator POMERENE. You mean about half of those who went to school?

Professor KELSEY. About half of those who went to school.

Senator POMERENE. Not of the total population?

or KELSEY. Oh, no, no; no, indeed. Of those who went recent, to whom I have made reference because he is prominent in the triotique, has described that quite as thoroughly as anyone. I have accurate a statement as I could get on the school system in my report. rough the rural districts and you will almost never see a schoolhouse, ou find anything which is used as a school. I have encountered such d visited them. I have talked with the children, and I have taken sters and had them bring me their schoolbooks, and had them read ; that they were doing. As a matter of fact, almost nothing has been e way of developing a real school system.

s a second matter of fact nothing can be done with the present income ntry. It is easy for us to condemn these poor people for not having e system, but when you ask what their possibilities were you become pathetic. They had a very difficult problem to face, and they never ed it. They have made the beginnings, and that is all we can say.

POMERENE. Well, you have no doubt that with a proper administra- can be liberally or fairly well educated?

or KELSEY. I think those who are in control in the country now are ns of the fact that they can be educated. I think every human being ucated, and I am not quibbling over education, but I mean trained to ngs without question. And, not only that, many of them would like . There are a great many of those poor people who would be delighted extension of their present school system so that they might have POMERENE. Well, I am getting away from what the chairman sug- minute ago he wanted to know—something more of the courts, and very important branch.

HAIRMAN. I was going to leave the question of the courts very shortly.

POMERENE. Well, if you have anything else I do not want to go I was getting off perhaps into another matter.

HAIRMAN. Well, I wanted to ask Doctor Kelsey if he regarded the on of the civil courts and the adequate payment of the judges as a cardinal importance or not.

or KELSEY. It is one of the matters of very great importance in the very great.

HAIRMAN. We agreed a little while ago, the Chair and the witness, ad not made a great record of constructive work during the five years. e witness perhaps enumerate the three or four things which we ought ould he suggest the bases, economic or educational, or both—admin- we will say, economic or educational—necessary to the development n people?

or KELSEY. You ask, Mr. Chairman, "What we can do? Will you nder what conditions this development is to take place?"

HAIRMAN. Well, let me put it this way. What are the bases necessary velopment of the Haitian people, bases perhaps which can be laid by oration of the two Governments, if you please, under the present or KELSEY. Perhaps the first and most fundamental is the determina- e ownership of the land, as a preliminary step toward the introduction ern system of taxation. There is no immediate probability that the ade of Haiti can be greatly developed. There is the ultimate possibility, not immediate. Before that development of production can go much the land question must be settled. Now, that is so fundamental that these other things are incidental; in other words, the settlement of stion will either make possible or will check any other program that to introduce.

HAIRMAN. Well, I am sure the committee will be glad to have your n the development of communications and revenues.

or KELSEY. Second is the development of communication. In my t, that will not be by railroads for a long time to come. I very gravely urther there is any legitimate business reason for completing the rail- m Cape Haiti down to Port au Prince. There should be, in my as far as I can see the situation, a few trunk-line roads, well enough d to be usable at all periods of the year. I think you gentlemen went t road to Cape Haiti. If so, you know there are several places where are very much needed.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you one of those who believe a road ought to be built from Mirebalais to Hinche?

Professor KELSEY. I am inclined to think there should be a good road through that interior, and if you once get a road in through Los Cabos you must remember that that opens an easy way through Comendador to the center of Santo Domingo. That would be in time a very important line road.

Now, my personal judgment—and do not put any weight on this, it is a personal expression—is that we are going to find that what Haiti needs is a development of trails at the present time rather than roads. The peasants are in the habit of taking their own wares to market. Now, it will take some time to change that habit. I understand that in the Philippines we surveyed pretty carefully a system of trails, laid out certain main trails, attempted to grade the least to lay them out in such a way that ultimately they might be used as a basis for a system of highways. Now, inasmuch as in my opinion pack transportation is going to be the dominant form for a considerable time in Haiti, it would be foolish to talk about a system of highways, which would be very expensive both to build and maintain.

What is really needed is a system of easy trail transportation that will facilitate their getting to their local markets.

In my judgment, those two steps should precede any great attempt to reorganize the school system. You have got to provide a basis for a permanent structure before you can build the superstructure.

Senator ODDIE. May I ask you a question, Doctor? You have got roads and trails. Don't you think it is more important to complete a system of trails and highways, and have the trails as feeders to the highways? In other words, will not the highways bring the markets closer to the interior, so that the interior can be developed?

Professor KELSEY. To a certain extent, but, of course, we do not know quickly the people will change their habits. You must remember that the interior is rather narrow, as a matter of fact. If you take your road from Port-au-Prince over to Jacmel and Cayes to the southwest, and if you would swing to the other road—your present road parallels the coast—up through the Los Cabos district, and on north through Hinche, you will have put every section of Haiti that is producing anything whatever within easy transportation distance of that road at present.

Now, I think those are very fundamental steps that must be taken as preliminary by whatever government is in power.

Now, when we speak of the other thing—the development of a real structure—that is to a considerable extent conditioned upon the habits of the people; and it is not going to be easy to make a shift from the very primitive type of agriculture which is now practiced to production on a large scale. Now, you are going to suggest that it should be done by big corporations.

We have been diverted a little from the earlier question as to what the Haitian Government had done. I attempted to show that they tried to induce forced labor to maintain it, and it broke down. There never has been any habit in Haiti of investing in local enterprises. There has been a great investment in land to be actually used by the landowner, but the plantations of to-day are as nothing compared to the plantations at the time of the French. If we may trust their accounts of those plantations, there is no increase in production. But the agricultural production of Haiti can be tremendously increased. There is a lot of very fertile soil in those plains. I am referring to the plain of San Michel, in the interior, where one American corporation is trying to develop a plantation.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe it is a good policy to permit a single corporation to acquire title to as much land as that company has?

Professor KELSEY. I think it is a very grave question. However, it is settled that they may not be glad to give that away in a few years.

The CHAIRMAN. I know that.

Professor KELSEY. In other words, they are undertaking an experiment.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is a very grave question whether, with our eyes turned toward Haiti, we ought to permit the acquisition of any such great property.

Professor KELSEY. We need to recognize that that is an experiment, and that none too certain, because of the conditions that obtain there.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness before the committee yesterday fixed 12 months as the maximum period for the termination of our responsibility in Haiti. It seems to me that, in connection with what you have been saying about p and agriculture and communications, it might be interesting if you speak of that question of the continuance of our responsibilities or, their termination.

essor KELSEY. If we are to assume that our duty to the Haitian people is our definite presence to-day, my own opinion is that we ought to be there in terms of 25 years, not 12 months. I do not believe that any thorough reform will be accomplished in any short period of time. I think it is to be expected that. The thing that I am personally most anxious about, to continue our experiment, is that we can develop the policy which seems to then give it a continuity of support until it is put through.

CHAIRMAN. What, in your judgment, would happen if at the end of 12 years we were to retire, bag and baggage?

essor KELSEY. There is no disagreement among the Haitians on that immediate revolution.

CHAIRMAN. Assume, Professor Kelsey, that, in the meantime, as in the case of our intervention in Cuba, the so-called occupation assured, as best it can, a fair and representative election of an assembly and president, would not in none the less follow?

essor KELSEY. I asked one of the best-educated men in the island, a man who has not been in political life at all, what he thought about "Vell," he said, "Mr. Kelsey, can you not understand one thing in our country? Those of us who have been trained have never been trained to be physically. We do not believe in it. We have no respect for it. We do not go into the Government service. That is the only outlet for any member of us. It does not make any difference whether the lowest type gets into office or the highest type in this country; the moment he is appointed and appoints his assistants there are many more disappointed people and disappointed ones. And the disappointed ones immediately begin to counsel him to know how they can get rid of him. That has been true all through our history, and it will be true the minute you leave, regardless of your method of leaving a successor." Your question, of course, would really assume that we had been democratic government in the past. That is not true. Haiti has always been under military government. You take Marcelin, the former president of finance, whom I have mentioned. The one thing he is talking about, day through, is the utter futility of saying there has ever been anything but military control.

CHAIRMAN. You mean, in his book?

essor KELSEY. Yes. He is dead. There is no illusion on the part of anyone with reference to her own history.

or POMERENE. What can you tell us about the elections they have had here from time to time?

essor KELSEY. Well, of course, I have only rumors with reference to those elections. They have been described by individuals. The common description is to say that it was practically known in advance which party would win and the opponents would stay at home. They did not dare go to the polls. The election was in control of a certain group. Of course, that meant that one group might be in control in one section of the country and another group in another section, and there was a little diversion of opinion shown in the different districts, but they do practically all vote under orders all the way around. The Haitians themselves just grin when you talk about elections. They simply say that the strong group has always won the election, for some other reason. When it comes to figures, they are utterly valueless; there are no records of any sort.

essor POMERENE. You mean in connection with the elections?

essor KELSEY. Yes; no figures of voters. They are absolutely valueless, at least as I have ever seen. You take all of this much discussed election with reference to the last constitution. There was no complaint made about that time (about the method of conducting it), not until long afterwards. Before it was rather fashionable to say that the Americans interfered in the election. The French priests never heard of any interference. They said only complaint whatever was made about it at the time.

essor POMERENE. As I recall, it was charged that that election was dominated throughout by the marines, that only certain classes of voters would go to the polls and they were often handed tickets favorable to the constitution rather than unfavorable. What can you tell us about that? What information have you on the subject?

Professor KELSEY. I did my best to find out definitely on that particular ; but as I say, the only information I can give is that the French priests heard of that complaint at the time, not for two years afterwards, and simply grin when you ask them the question. They say there is nothing ever to it, and they say, "We were in a position to have heard that complaint instantly had it been real, and would have heard it instantly."

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you believe, Doctor, that even if the occupiers all possible measures to assure a free and representative election, if it were thereafter within 12 months, the government elected under those circumstances would not last?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, absolutely. I do not see any present possibility of permanent government on the part of the Haitians.

The CHAIRMAN. You believe then that even if we insured the election of a constituent assembly, and it adopted a constitution, and, according to the terms of the country and the terms of the constitution, it chose a president, nevertheless if the troops were withdrawn and the treaty abrogated, the president elected would shortly fall?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; there is no reason to question it. Haiti has more than 12 or 15 constitutions in a hundred years.

The CHAIRMAN. Including two emperors and a king.

Professor KELSEY. Not only that, but I met no Haitians who believe there was any possibility of a permanent Government at the present time. I say that deliberately, even of the men who would like to see us get out. No prominent Haitians who believed that a permanent Government could be elected.

The CHAIRMAN. They prefer, however, that we should withdraw even if the revolution was to resume its periodicity?

Professor KELSEY. In my judgment, nine men out of ten to-day want us to stay.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but those who would like to have us get out—

Professor KELSEY (interposing). Oh, yes; those who wanted us to withdraw say it is far better for us to withdraw and let them continue revolution after revolution.

If you are interested, let me just translate roughly a paragraph from Stenio Vincent's book, "Haiti, Telle qu'elle est."

(Professor Kelsey here read a paragraph which is included in the translation published in connection with his statement.)

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor Kelsey is going to send us several comments on Haitian society and Government by Stenio Vincent and others, are you not?

Professor KELSEY. I will do anything you ask me to, sir, unless you request too much. I want to express my appreciation of the quality and caliber of some of these studies which Haitians have made of their own country. They deserve very great credit.

Senator ODDIE. To clear up what was said before in regard to the credit system as applied to labor, what class of people in Haiti are responsible for the ills of that system?

Professor KELSEY. Well, now, they say that that was an old law, which is almost identical with our law in the United States—Senator ODDIE (interposing). I mean, with relation to shipping labor to the United States?

Professor KELSEY. The Cuban labor situation?

Senator ODDIE. Yes. What class of people are responsible for that?

Professor KELSEY. Well, you do not have to go far from the palace.

Senator ODDIE. The natives?

Professor KELSEY. Absolutely; wholly natives.

Senator ODDIE. In regard to the alleged acts of misbehavior on the part of some of the marines, did you find in your investigations that any of those cases were based on hearsay? Did you happen to meet anybody who had actually seen any of those occurrences?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; both. There are unquestionably cases of assault, instance, or rape. I happened to be present when the first complaint was made with reference to one of the men, and I could follow the case right through. There was no question about the man's guilt. In many of those cases, however, I feel that our administration has made a mistake in not more publicly admitting the fact that the guilty men were punished whenever detected.

Senator ODDIE. That is the case?

or KEISEY. That is unquestionably the case, in my opinion. You must at the officials in charge of any organization do not always get all the : ODDIE. Did you find in your investigation that the use of hearsay is more common in that country than it is here?

or KELSEY. That is pretty hard to say. In the absence of the printed a common method of conveying information, rumor is rampant. The Haitian has never seen or known anyone personally who has been really d. And in connection with that, gentlemen, let us remember one thing, Haitian ever says that a policy of cruelty was adopted. He always puts individual man who has committed the given act. That is a very in-oint.

owe. There is one question that I want to ask while we are talking gendarmerie. How soon do you think that competent Haitian officers developed for the gendarmerie?

or KELSEY. Oh, of course, I have no right to an opinion. I was talking of the men who was prominent in the early days of the gendarmerie, aid, "I have disappointed, in that now, at the present time, we have able to secure more first-class officers than we have been able to se- fe said, "I thought we would get them more rapidly." He said, "I ow it is going to take us longer than I had thought in the first instance." ot a question of intellectual capacity. It is a question of mental atti- long as the higher group of Haiti says, "We are going to live on the s of the peasant," you have got a problem on your hands the moment any man and put him in control.

owe. Of the gendarmerie?

or KELSEY. Of anything. In other words, he is under the temptation se that power of exploitation. The problem of Haiti is the reforming ea of the upper classes and the developing of the sense of responsibility he lower classes. Nobody can put a time limit on that.

r POMERENE. We can not do it in 12 months?

or KELSEY. I should think it doubtful.

owe. You mentioned the corvée. Will you comment on what you think ts were of the use of the corvée system under the marines there?

or KELSEY. I am very glad to comment, asking you to remember one at I can pass no judgment as to the extent of the necessity leading to uduction of the corvée. That is a very important modification. In ords, I might have done the same thing had I been put in the position an who made that decision. He had certain things that were of para- importance, in his opinion. I have the feeling personally that the corvée biggest blunder we have made in Haiti. Perhaps we could not have hat in advance, but I suspect we should have known it, and I have the ve were told definitely, in fact, that it would have this bad result, so should have been warned by the advice given us.

undamental trouble with the corvée was the way it was executed, not e thing itself. There were individual men under the corvée, handling ouns of men, who had their enthusiastic support all the way through, er whom the men wanted to remain and continue the work after it was discontinued. But a very unfortunate situation developed in two first, the American officers at first did not seem to realize that the they gave the native subordinates to be spent for food, etc., for the went largely into the pockets of the men to whom it was given. They realize that the local chief of section was perhaps tearing up the rds of men who had served one or two periods on the corvée, and were them back into the corvée again. In that way he was able to punish ho would not pay bribes, or punish his enemies and reward his friends, some men were kept at work for several months. Of course, the aver- ger seeing the great mass of peasants would not know one from the He would not recognize the fact that John Jones had been sent in two s times. He was utterly ignorant. That gave the agitator the oppor- o say to those natives, "You see what the Americans are doing. They ming to enslave you once more." I can give you later on, if the ques- ss, the same illustration from Santo Domingo.

or POMERENE. Was this done by the natives themselves?

ssor KELSEY. By the natives themselves.

or POMERENE. And not by the marines?

ssor KELSEY. Not by the marines.

Senator POMERENE. But that does not prevent the throwing of men and marines?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, no. The word was sent out to the chief of — "Send in so many men to work on the road." He gathered them together and they were sent in, sometimes manacled. They were often sent Haitian gendarmes along the road. And the natives make much more complaint about the native gendarmes than they do about the marines in connection with that.

The next bad blunder was that the corvée system was continued, as you know, for a time after it was ordered stopped. That was very serious.

Senator POMERENE. Are you able to state who was responsible for that?

Professor KELSEY. I have no personal knowledge. It happened long before I ever reached there.

Mr. HOWE. We have that in the record, the order stopping it.

Senator POMERENE. I know there was some testimony, but I thought, for the professor might have some further information.

Professor KELSEY. It is a very interesting point.

Senator POMERENE. I have no doubt that that did create dissatisfaction. It was all wrong.

Professor KELSEY. It did; but I can take you into other districts of Haiti where it led to no dissatisfaction and where the men asked to have it continued.

Senator POMERENE. Will you comment on that?

Professor KELSEY. At the very outset I might mention the fact that it was a question of the way in which it was handled. For instance, the man who was in charge at Cayes, according to the story told me, was in the habit of getting local business men to go out and see the road-construction work in the neighborhood in what was being done, with the result that when the order came to stop it they offered to donate a considerable sum of money to have the road work continued. I think the whole system was unfortunate because the expenditure of a vastly less sum of money would have built the roads, would have given employment to the natives, and would have made the natives eternally grateful to us as Americans. Looking back now, it would have been far cheaper to have built the roads with paid labor.

Senator POMERENE. How would you furnish that money?

Professor KELSEY. That is another problem entirely; I am not passing on that. But I say that in the amount of money, it would have been far cheaper to have built those roads and paid for them than to have suppressed the rebellion that came. Of course, I appreciate the problem of the money, and I guarded myself against any such implication by my first statement, that I did not know what I should have done had I been in the position of the man who felt the necessity of getting a given thing through.

Mr. HOWE. Under the corvée system, as I understand it from the beginning, we have had, each native could be required to work three days, and if it had been kept within that limit I suppose there would have been no objection.

Professor KELSEY. There would have been no objection whatever if the limit had been limited. As a matter of fact, some men are said to have worked three or four months. If it had been kept within the limit and if the men had been locally employed, I think there would have been no trouble. You know the distribution of the population in Haiti. There are large sections there unpopulated, and that meant the transfer of men to those districts. In my judgment, there would have been no trouble had there been a small, regular payment to the men.

Mr. HOWE. There was recently before the committee a witness, a Haitian, who told the committee that the proposed refunding of the loan is not popular in Haiti, and that it would be repudiated universally by Haitians. If there is any choice left to them, and that it is not needed. Have you any comment on that testimony? Would you agree with it?

Professor KELSEY. The financial situation in Haiti is extremely deplorable and more or less desperate, but you must remember that this is, to a certain extent, a reaction because of the war situation.

Senator POMERENE. It is not limited to Haiti, I think.

Professor KELSEY. No; not wholly limited there. That is my personal opinion. But it would be tremendously to the advantage of Haiti to pay off its existing European obligations at the present rate of exchange. I am rather critical of the extent of the antagonism toward that loan. The difficulty is that a great many Haitians believe that if there were such a loan it would be a merican control; and inasmuch as those who are talking about our to it want to get rid of us, of course they are opposed to anything that utilized by Americans to meet the situation there.

or POMERENE. That is, they want to control the expenditure of it?

ssor KELSEY. Yes, sir; if you will give them control of the expenditure, they will borrow all you are willing to lend them.

or POMERENE. For what reason do you think that?

ssor KELSEY. Partially on the basis of past history, I am afraid, Senator.

or POMERENE. What do you mean by that?

ssor KELSEY. I mean that so far as we can see they have never visual-thing more than the immediate result of the borrowing of the loan. ive not seen the tragedy that comes with the question of repayment.

or POMERENE. That is, you think it is the ones who have grown up with ught that they should govern down there who are objecting to this ssor KELSEY. Yes.

or POMERENE. And that that objection would be withdrawn if they e intrusted with the expenditure of it?

ssor KELSEY. Yes. A prominent Haitian told me that 2,000 men control bsolutely. Two thousand was his figure, but if you travel around Haiti while you are very apt to think that is very greatly magnified.

or POMERENE. So that it is not a democracy, but an oligarchy, under ircumstances?

ssor KELSEY. Yes; self-appointed.

or POMERENE. Now then, let me ask you the question again—first, a nary question. How long has it been thus?

ssor KELSEY. Always, so far as I can learn.

or POMERENE. Now then, point out what has been done by this edu-lass for the development of the people down there throughout the island.

ssor KELSEY. With the exception of the beginning of the system of edu-with emphasis on the top and not on the general education of the mass; ie exception of the development of governmental machinery, with the is on the top rather than on the foundation—nothing. There have been three Haitian presidents who seem to have had broader vision and wider of the real foundation of national prosperity. Those men, however, have ort lived, as a rule, with the exception of the very first of the type—or POMERENE. He was down in the southern part.

ssor KELSEY. In the southern part, in the time when the country was l.

l has tried to develop a superstructure of European civilization on an a base. In a word, in my judgment, the Haitians have not yet learned adamentals of national prosperity. I do not believe there is any national in Haiti. I do not mean to say there are no individuals who do not see s involved, but I do not think there is any national spirit in Haiti.

or ODDIE. What is your opinion about foreign interests in Haiti, or pos-tempts on the part of foreign interests to come in there?

essor KELSEY. All business men in Haiti frankly state that the money older days was made either by speculation in the currency or by violating stoms laws. To that, of course, you will add the financing of revolutions governments in the suppression of revolutions. Money has not been made iti by the development of legitimate business, of commerce. The earlier in control of business was largely French. The later group was almost German.

CHAIRMAN. That was true prior to 1914. was it not?

essor KELSEY. Yes; the Germans were in control prior to 1914.

CHAIRMAN. Did they foment revolutions?

essor KELSEY. The individual merchant did not always foment revolu-out he financed it.

CHAIRMAN. After it was fomented?

essor KELSEY. Yes; or he might finance the Government. One President d a revolution himself in order that he might rule as a military despot.

CHAIRMAN. How much did they make out of fluctuations in the value of ourde?

essor KELSEY. I just remarked, Senator, that there are three great sources venue there, and the first was the speculation in the gourde.

e CHAIRMAN. And that was to the disadvantage of the peasant?

Professor KELSEY. Always.

The CHAIRMAN. It robbed him, they told me, I remember, of about the value of his crop.

Professor KELSEY. It might very well be. I have not mentioned it here must not forget in passing that incidentally we have been of the greatest to Haiti in the last few years, because we have stabilized the currency and gourde has been kept at five to one. What would have happened in that or what would happen there now if it were not for that financial support? In the United States it is hard to imagine. The Haitian does not see that. He is not an international financier, but it is a real thing. You see, the value had gone down prior to our going in there as low as 2 cents, I believe, and had gone back to 20. Nominally the value is 96.

Senator ODDIE. And they have printing presses there?

Professor KELSEY. They have had. By a very curious wrinkle the paper currency has been secured and the token currency has not been.

Senator POMERENE. What do you mean when you say the paper money has been secured?

Professor KELSEY. I mean that certain taxes are pledged for its redemption. There is no security back of the token money, except the credit of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor Kelsey, I wonder if you would say to the committee whether you believe we ought to withdraw within 12 months, as suggested by those who do not believe we ought to assume any responsibility for Haiti.

Professor KELSEY. You will remember that I began by saying that if I had any advance idea with reference to our policy in Haiti, it was that we should withdraw as soon as possible. I came away from Haiti thinking that we should have to stay for 25 years or else forfeit our opportunity to be of real benefit to the Haitian people. Of course, I am using 25 years as a round number.

The CHAIRMAN. By that do you mean that if we are to help them reach a stable society and a true civilization it will take that long?

Professor KELSEY. It will take a considerable period of time. You have to train a new group of men to new standards of public morals. At the moment you say you are going to stay there until that job is done. You are going to have more Haitians back of you than any American realizes—Haitians who dare not say a word in public at the present time.

Senator POMERENE. You say they do not dare to. Why do you put it that way?

Professor KELSEY. Because they do not dare to.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean, if we were to withdraw and they had taken another view, the consequences to them—

Professor KELSEY. Their lives would not be safe.

Senator ODDIE. Referring again to what I asked you a minute ago, I ask what do you know of the efforts of German interests to regain control in Haiti?

Professor KELSEY. I have no knowledge of attempts to get control, but I have generally stated in Haiti that in spite of the sequestration of German property and so on, many of the Germans probably really did not dispose of their property, but turned it over to trusted Haitians with some provision for a subsequent return.

The German was a good merchant. As a rule, he was a higher-grade man than the American who had gone there, and a better trained man, and he was married with the prominent families, so that his relations were very close. The German is now coming back, and I do not see any competition of American business men that is going to prevent it.

Senator ODDIE. Is it your opinion that the German interests want us to draw immediately?

Professor KELSEY. I do not think I met a foreigner in Haiti who felt that we should withdraw regardless of nationality. There were very few Germans. There were many Germans of the second generation with whom I was acquainted, but there were very few Germans of the older group who were back in Haiti at the time I was there.

Senator POMERENE. What do you mean by the "second generation"?

Professor KELSEY. Descendants of Germans, those who had intermarried with Haitians as a rule. I think I may say that foreign sentiment in Haiti is practically unanimous in Haiti that it is our duty to stay there. That is mainly the attitude of the French priests.

CHAIRMAN. Yesterday Doctor Gruening, who spent, I think, some three days in Haiti, spoke of the appointment of General Russell as high commissioner. Do you care to express any opinion on that appointment?

SER KELSEY. General Russell has commended himself to the Haitians by his absolute squareness and honesty in all of his dealings with them. Most Haitians do not know him intimately, but those who have come in contact with him have become very friendly in their attitude. He is not the man who goes out on the public platform to advertise himself. He knows his duty was a certain definite thing, and he has done it to the best of his ability. I know of no man connected with the American group there whose appointment will be more favorably received by the best men in Haiti.

CHAIRMAN. Do you think that on the whole it was a good appointment?

SER KELSEY. I do not see how you could make a better one, recognizing the facts in that connection one thing. The problem in Haiti is not military; it is political. That is the one thing we need to look out for with reference to the future of Haiti. It should be under civil control, not military, in its future development.

MR. ODDIE. Is it your opinion that a certain group in Haiti would be hostile to the appointment of any American?

SER KELSEY. There is a good deal of human nature in Haiti, certainly. I will object to anything.

ANGELL here submitted certain memoranda, Nos. 1 to 5, inclusive, and copies thereof, prepared by and offered on behalf of the Union Patriotique. On the suggestion of Mr. Howe it was ordered by the committee that copies thereof, when prepared, be placed in the record.)

Y INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

FRIDAY, MARCH 10, 1922.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

Committee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in the room, Capitol, Senator Medill McCormick presiding.
: Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, and Pomerene. also: Mr. Walter Bruce Howe and Mr. Ernest Angell.

STATEMENT OF DR. CARL KELSEY—Resumed.

WE. In your testimony yesterday, Doctor Kelsey, you made the state-t substantially from the time the French left the island up to 1918 l been no exportations of sugar. In your report you mention large antations, and you give the figures for the sugar export of 1919 and er references to sugar cultivation. Will you comment on that, so ove any possible misunderstanding?

OR KELSEY. Yes. There is a good deal of cane grown in Haiti, and but if you take the plain of the north, near Cape Haiti, which was r of the heaviest production under the French, for the last indefinite of years, it is doubtful if there has been more than 500 acres of cane ntire plain. There is a little planting of cane about Port au Prince or three different directions. Most of that has been used locally, an ordinary foodstuff or turned into rum. So far as I am informed, time the French left until 1919 there was no exportation of sugar.

OWE. I had opportunity to read through portions of your report last d I find, on page 128, that you comment on the fact that the revolumost always have started in the north of the island, and you say it hat distance from the capital has been the chief factor, as some have but others have tried to show that there are differences in the people, gree of culture, etc.

ir opinion, would the lack of any kind of roads between the capital, outh, and the revolutionary district in the north have any bearing ccurrence of revolutions in the north?

SOR KELSEY. Well, it would have bearing on the ease of suppressing ms that break out everywhere, whatever the underlying cause might be.
sed that with a great many Haitians, who were not agreed as to just ting point of the difficulty. The same thing, incidentally, is true in omingo; most of the revolutions have broken out north of the central n range.

ed up by accident an old Spanish book, dating from about 1860, on itions in Santo Domingo, in which the author pointed out very clearly m a military standpoint no central government at Santo Domingo City ver maintain itself in security until there was a road built north nto Domingo into Cibao which would make it possible to move bodies very quickly. You take in the old days in Haiti when the Govern-ometimes went into the southwestern peninsula and gathered forces and carried them away up into the hills, 50 or 60 miles, perhaps, to theast of Port au Prince, which is a difficult marching proposition.
se, it is relatively simple for them, because they march through the woods. Then when they fought their conflicts the Government simply donned them up there and let them get back home as best they could that a system of roads throughout that island would tremendously aid the ease of maintaining order. It is obvious.

The CHAIRMAN. I remember that 10 or 12 years ago the archbishop of Santo Domingo told me that he regarded a highway from Santiago as the most important single public work to be carried out.

Professor KELSEY. In my judgment the roads of the island should take precedence over schools.

Mr. HOWE. Would you include in that a certain mileage of roads for strictly military purposes primarily?

Professor KELSEY. Starting on the basis of what you now have, it is not to see much more than is actually necessary. I would think it desirable to have a good east-and-west road from Santo Domingo through to Port au Prince, which would be very easily constructed. Practically speaking you have a good road now from Santo Domingo through Monte Cristi to Cape Haiti. My own course, is nothing. I should think probably there should be a good road from Cape Haiti, down through Grand Riviere and Bahon into the upper end of the San Michel Valley, rather than following the old trail over the Pico de la Montaña.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not believe that there should be some connection between Las Cahobas and Mirebalais?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, there is no doubt.

Mr. HOWE. That would be the most direct route north?

Professor KELSEY. That would be the most direct route north, much shorter than the present route.

The CHAIRMAN. And these observations of yours as to the justification for military roads are based not only on the present situation, but on the future of the Governments of both those countries?

Professor KELSEY. As I say, I think we can exaggerate the amount of roads needed immediately for military purposes. It is not much. It plays right into the other, as a feeder.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, the roads that you have named appear to me almost, if not altogether, as important socially and commercially as for military purposes.

Professor KELSEY. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask the doctor if he has any information to give the committee about the prevalence of voodoo, or if he thinks it worth while to give it to the committee.

Professor KELSEY. Of course, voodoo is a much-disputed and at times a little overworked term. It depends somewhat on just the signification that you put into that word. If you are referring to the religious belief of the ignorant, and it is universal. Over that is a very thin veneer of Christianity. If you limit the term "voodoo" to apply to certain types of dances—

The CHAIRMAN. No; I mean more particularly the belief in spirit magic, of voodoo doctors, and so on.

Professor KELSEY. I have tried to indicate in my report that we are dealing with two Haitis, the one which has absorbed the European ideas, and the other which retains the African. The great mass of the Haitians are African in their religious concepts and in their practices of life. Now, the voodoo dances, which were prohibited years ago by the Haitian Government, but that prohibition was never enforced, and it is not strictly enforced at the present time.

Senator POMERENE. You mean by that that there was a law prohibiting it which was never enforced?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; it has never been enforced as far as I can find.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not identify the voodoo dance with the bacchanal dance, which is danced every Saturday, do you?

Professor KELSEY. No; but that term, "voodoo," is used so indiscriminately that it is of very little value.

Mr. HOWE. Do you care to ask the doctor to summarize his views?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if he cares to do so.

Professor KELSEY. I think I have summarized them here [indicating] more on Haiti more carefully than I could in an offhand statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you discuss there what has been done and what ought to be done along educational lines, hospitalization, sanitation, and the general development of the island?

Professor KELSEY. I have tried to indicate what the present situation is and have not entered into it in detail as to what might be done, because is utterly valueless unless one knows the conditions under which that report is to take place.

POMERENE. Have you gone fully into the activities of the marine occupation they have been there?

DR KELSEY. I have tried to describe the various features of it; yes, sir.

POMERENE. The doctor yesterday made a suggestion which impressed me much, in view of some things which developed in, I think, Santo Domingo, that as these marines were from time to time court-martialed and punished for certain improper or cruel acts, there was little or no publicity about it. I remember very distinctly one case in Santo Domingo, in which a marine was made against marines of cruelty and apparently were well sustained by the testimony. Later on we found that all, or nearly all, of these men had been named had been court-martialed and punished and were then in the United States in certain penitentiaries, etc. That was apparently to the Dominicans who were there in attendance and heard it, seemed the first time. Do you recall that, Senator Oddie?

ODDIE. I remember it was spoken of afterwards.

POMERENE. Of course, whatever delinquencies and failures to punish have been, they ought to be punished.

DR KELSEY. An American in Cape Haiti told me of one peculiarly discreditable performance, due probably to alcohol, as most of those things are, for a man was tried and was punished. The only notice of it that appeared in the press—apparently because the press was told not to display it—the two-line comment that utterly escaped any observation. These Americans felt that a very great mistake was made in not compelling the press, if necessary, to make a full statement of what was done with this

we. By whom do you mean the press was ordered not to display it?

DR KELSEY. The newspaper editor said he had been told by the military not to make any mention of it. I do not know what the facts are in that, but that is unimportant. My point is that the military authorities have told the press to display it and make it prominent.

WE. If there are no further questions, I should like to offer this report of Kelsey in evidence.

AIRMAN. That has been agreed to.

Report referred to is printed in full in this record following the conclusion of Professor Kelsey's testimony.)

AIRMAN. Captain Angell, do you desire to ask Professor Kelsey any questions?

ANGELL. Yes. You said, Doctor Kelsey, that you learned of the alleged activities of the marines in Haiti before you went down there from the pages of the publications, particularly the Nation and Current History. Do you know whether or not such articles or news items as you may have read at that time dealt chiefly with the charges that General Barnett, the commandant of the Marine Corps, himself made?

DR KELSEY. Some of them, I know. I had a reprint of Mr. Johnson's article in the Nation. I did not pay any particular attention to the charges because I was not going there to investigate the Marine Corps, but, as a matter of fact, that is the way the information came to me as to the alleged charges.

ANGELL. You remember, do you not, that the so-called Barnett charges in the Barnett report of September or October, 1920, were very largely repeated in the press all over the country and displayed on the front pages of the principal New York papers, both Democratic and Republican?

DR KELSEY. I believe so.

ANGELL. And that mention was made of this by President Harding when he was a candidate. Did I understand you correctly to say that there was a feeling of relief when martial law was restored in June of last year?

DR KELSEY. To the extent that the President of Haiti wrote a letter commending the commanding officer on such action. And that feeling was shared by a considerable number of men with whom I talked. Some of them mentioned it to me in advance.

ANGELL. Would you say that the glad acceptance of martial law was

DR KELSEY. I should doubt if I could say it was general, because the man never thought about it; knew nothing about it. The agitators who were carrying on their schemes and hoping to overthrow the existing government were, of course, very much disgruntled. The thoughtful people were certainly very grateful. Many prominent men in Port au Prince told us we must not take those newspaper reports too seriously; that they were for propaganda purposes and did not really represent the conservative thought of the country.

Senator POMERENE. When you say "prominent people," do you mean Haitians?

Professor KELSEY. Haitians, yes; I am talking of Haitians. They came and apologized for that sort of language in the papers and said they did not believe in it. I had a number of conversations with very prominent Haitians on that point. They saw the danger that was involved.

Mr. ANGELL. Just now you spoke of the agitators who were hoping to overthrow the Government.

Professor KELSEY. So much so that there was a plot to kill the President.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think there was any considerable group of people in Haiti who really thought they could overthrow the Haitian Government with the marines there?

Professor KELSEY. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Then any such idea would have been confined simply to the notion of getting rid of the present incumbent?

Professor KELSEY. Not wholly.

Mr. ANGELL. How would they hope to overthrow the native Government with the marines there?

Professor KELSEY. Because they thought they could stampede public opinion in the United States, which was the thing they were after.

Mr. ANGELL. And start out by assassinating the President and members of the Government?

Professor KELSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you understand that there was actually any such plot on foot?

Professor KELSEY. I was told so by the Haitians. Of course I was not a party to it.

Mr. ANGELL. May I ask, do you really believe there was any such plot? Would that come within the class of rumors which you said were so common in Haiti?

Professor ANGELL. The only possible answer to that is to say that if there was not such a plot he was probably the only man that ever filled the position that had not stirred up such a plot. I mean, there were always plots against all Presidents, and I see no reason to make an exception of the present incumbent.

Senator POMERENE. What was the date of this plot that you are speaking of?

Professor KELSEY. I can only speak of the date on which information came to me. That was in June, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me also put a question as to the existence of martial law to which reference has been made. Under the proclamations to which you have referred, the martial law, so called, was applicable to the press?

Professor KELSEY. Only, as I recall it.

The CHAIRMAN. It was in force prior to that as regards the security of persons of the marines and the gendarmerie?

Professor KELSEY. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Well, was the date of this plot that you speak of prior to the resumption of martial law, so far as it applied to the press?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear the names of any persons who were supposed to be connected with that plot?

Professor KELSEY. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. That is, it was merely reported to you that there was a plot on foot?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. From what class of people did you hear that?

Professor KELSEY. I think from some of the men whom I considered rationally well informed.

Senator POMERENE. Were they members of the Union Patriotique or not?

Professor KELSEY. I can not answer—I mean I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. There was, in fact, no attempt, so far as you know, to carry any such plot?

OR KELSEY. No.

POMERENE. If the marines had not been there, would that plot have ed out, if you have any information which would justify your ex-n opinion?

OR KELSEY. There was a meeting held at Port au Prince in one of the ne evening, and a man who had been active in public life in Haiti afterwards that in the old days that would inevitably have been folmarch on the capitol. The only thing that stopped it was the presence ines. I might add that no Haitian that I met thought for a moment resent president would have ruled unmolested had it not been for the f the marines.

POMERENE. Do you mean by that that he would have been removed linary process of election, etc., as we understand them, or by some ns?

OR KELSEY. By the ordinary processes of Haitians.

POMERENE. And what do you mean by that?

OR KELSEY. Some sort of revolution.

BELL. Do you think that that attitude toward the present incumbent : all upon a feeling that he has been to a certain extent the tool of the i, in common parlance.

OR KELSEY. In part, probably.

BELL. And that he has, for that reason, been unpopular with those pposed to the principle of the occupation and some things that have under the occupation and attributed to it?

OR KELSEY. That is one reason for such opposition.

AIRMAN. What are the other reasons, Doctor Kelsey?

OR KELSEY. The tremendous jealousy that has been aroused by the there is one man enjoying good salary and maintaining office for umber of years. In addition to that, you will remember that I com-esterday on the fact that there was always antagonism to the group

The others have had rather scant means of livelihood—I mean those been on the outside. The situation is quite different from that which our own country. The men who are out can see no prospect of preferment unless they can devise some way of getting in.

BELL. Do you think that the feeling of those who are the "outs" for eing has any relation to the nonpayment of the interest on the internal affects them individually?

OR KELSEY. That has been a very great source of discontent and dissat-in Haiti, because the Government bonds are almost the only possible investment of saving in Haiti, and when the payment of the interest ternal loans was stopped it really created hardship to many people.

It practically destroyed the market for those internal bonds, because a speculator would buy them, and at speculators' prices. It has been ly unfortunate situation.

AIRMAN. Did you hear anything of the report or charge that individoyed in the various banking houses in Port au Prince had bought up bers of those internal bonds at a discount?

OR KELSEY. I never heard it mentioned.

BELL. Was the dissatisfaction which you say has arisen from this involved in the nonpayment of interest on the internal debt directed e American occupation?

OR KELSEY. Yes; in part. You see, in the old days, though the income iently inadequate, the government tried to pay the interest on these ause the money having been advanced to further revolutions or to e revolutions, it would not do to establish the precedent that interest be paid on that internal debt, lest perhaps in time it might be more o sell a loan in an emergency. But public officials were unpaid, or rip, so that there are plenty of instances of public officials going r years, just as there were instances where the sisters of the church ome in from the rural districts because they were starving to death, ment having failed to provide any funds.

POMERENE. I think you should say, in explanation of the statement made about the sisters, that under their scheme of government they their pay from the Government itself.

OR KELSEY. Yes; the Government has pledged itself to support the Haiti. I do not know just the details of the channel through which ey has been handled, but the money has not always been forthcoming.

And school-teachers have been unpaid and all other public officials unpaid simply indicates the fact that the income of Haiti has not been adequate for a normal government, with this accumulation of debt on which interest has to be paid.

Mr. ANGELL. You were speaking of education, and you remarked, as I remember it, that there were no public-school buildings, or practically none. Is that not a fact, however, that the Government has allocated to the church, under concordat, considerable sums of money which were for expenditures in the church in what we would call church schools?

Professor KELSEY. Yes. I mentioned the fact that about half of the children actually go to school.

Mr. ANGELL. And that those church schools are supported, wholly or in part by public moneys from the State?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. So that not only are there educational statutes on the books but some expenditures of public money through the church for public education?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; there is some expenditure of public money, but it makes possible education for only a very small percentage of the total number of children.

Mr. ANGELL. I believe you have in your report some figures on that. Do you not?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. You mentioned 40,000, or something of that sort?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. That would be 40,000 out of about 400,000?

Professor KELSEY. At least that, I should say.

Mr. HOWE. I think the report shows that of that 40,000 the actual attendance is only about 14,000?

Professor KELSEY. That is probably true.

Senator POMERENE. In other words, assume that there are about 200,000 children all told. As we understand it, the rule is that there is about one child of school age in each five of the population?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; but one gets the impression that that figure is low in Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. You made reference yesterday once or twice, Doctor KELSEY, to the present constitution of 1918. Have you had any opportunity to learn the detailed history of how that constitution was proposed and framed, particularly as testified in the hearings of this committee during last fall?

Professor KELSEY. I have not read the report of the hearings of the committee at all. I have it on my desk, but I have not had time to go through it.

Mr. ANGELL. So you have not learned the origin of the present clause providing for the ownership of land by foreigners, for instance?

Professor KELSEY. Not in detail.

Mr. ANGELL. You have said, if I am quoting you substantially correctly, that the most prominent, or at least very many of the more prominent Haitians, including the Union Patriotique leaders, do not want the United States to leave?

Professor KELSEY. I believe I said that in my judgment a great number of prominent Haitians, including some of the men who are in the Union Patriotique, were of that opinion.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you care, without violating any confidence, to give me the names of any persons who have so stated?

Professor KELSEY. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. And are you speaking of the opinion and judgment of the men as of the time you were in Haiti last spring, or have you kept in touch with them since then?

Professor KELSEY. I am speaking primarily of the time I was there.

Mr. HOWE. When did you leave?

Professor KELSEY. I left July 2 of last year.

Senator POMERENE. That is, you left Haiti?

Professor KELSEY. Haiti, yes.

Senator POMERENE. And you left Santo Domingo about when?

Prof. KELSEY. About the 22d of October. Referring to that matter of the land law, very many prominent Haitians told me that they believed that the land law was desirable, and they thought it would be very foolish to go back to the prohibition of ownership by foreigners.

GELL. You said that among other things to be done in the future one of the two was the determination of ownership of land?

or KELSEY. Yes.

GELL. Do you think that under Haitian customs and with the illiterate country people, that could really be made an accomplishment and kept in a state where one could tell to whom a given piece of land it any time?

or KELSEY. I do not see any impossibility in that; I see certain added. For instance, if you consider the possibility of imposing the land obvious that you must have some way of determining land ownership. You have in reality in Haiti a great many families claiming owner- large areas of land, which land is in the hands of independent peasants cultivating it. Now, inasmuch as the old Haitian law has recognized sovereignty the question of the real ownership there is a very delicate If you impose a tax, who is going to pay it? You have got to deter- land ownership. You have got to survey your country and be able to locate the location of the piece of ground.

POMERENE. Was there a land tax prior to the American occupancy?

or KELSEY. No.

WE. Is there one now??

or KELSEY. No.

GELL. Would not the successful administration of a land tax depend ability of the public authorities to tell at any moment to whom all the substantially all the land, belonged?

or KELSEY. I said it was fundamental. The Haitian Government owns to own large areas of land, but it seems to have no accurate descriptions of that land. It does not know what the Government itself owns.

GELL. Do you not think that a survey of the land of the country would expensive in the first place?

or KELSEY. There is no question of that.

GELL. And the first determination of titles an almost impossibly expensive task, assuming the illiteracy of the squatters or owners of the land?

or KELSEY. I imagine you would find the peasants have pretty definite on as to the facts of occupancy which could be established.

CHAIRMAN. If you wish to argue this point, gentlemen, I think you had generalize on what has happened in Santo Domingo, instead of dealing abstract.

GELL. In your report I notice, under the heading "Government," page is pamphlet, you speak of the existing organization of the Haitian Government. I do not find anywhere at this particular point—perhaps you at some other place in the report—any mention of the existence of a state, which is provided for in this new constitution of 1918, the of legislative functions by that council of state, and the dissolution of members in 1917, and the fact that there has been no election or convening of chambers since that time.

or KELSEY. I have mentioned that on another page of the report, but not discussed it. I have just been trying, in the paragraph you mention, a few words to draw a general sketch of what the Government in Haiti was up to the time at which we entered.

GELL. So that when you speak of the existing organization of the Government you simply mean—or KELSEY. I am speaking of the Haitian Government and not of the changes. Perhaps I should have gone into further details, but I had certain limitations to contend with.

GELL. So this would be a general outline of the organization of the Government, rather than the facts as they actually are at the present or KELSEY. Yes.

or POMERENE. You say you have certain space limitations, and I understand you mean by that. Have you any other treatises or articles which you prepared on this subject?

or KELSEY. No. I had hoped that I might have several months in which to prepare this, and found I had to write it within a month after going.

Mr. ANGELL. In speaking of the corvée you said you thought that was the greatest blunder of the occupation during the six and a half years we have been there. In your talks with the Haitians and with the marine officers—

Senator POMERENE. Let me understand. I did not understand the doctrine that the corvée of itself was objectionable, but the manner in which it was carried out. Am I right in that?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; it is the general result. I remember I said I did not know what we would have done had we been confronted with the problem from the standpoint of a man in charge.

Mr. ANGELL. I am glad you corrected me, Senator. I did not mean anything more than to repeat the substance of what he had said.

Did you gather from Haitians and marine officers with whom you discussed this question any idea as to whether or not the marine officers knew in advance that the administration of the corvée would be attended with such difficulties as would make it the source of great dissatisfaction?

Professor KELSEY. I was told by certain Americans that they had acted against it in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. Certain civilians?

Professor KELSEY. Certain civilians advised the military authorities against it and had been met with the answer that it was a military necessity and had to be put through.

Mr. ANGELL. Did any of the marine officers, especially those in higher authority, give you so to understand also?

Professor KELSEY. No. You see the marine officers in higher authority were there at the time had gone before I reached Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. You said, as I remember, that in some districts they had expressed dissatisfaction with the way the corvée was administered, and that the natives had asked to have it continued. Shall we understand from that that you were referring to unpaid compulsory labor for a period beyond the statutory thirty-day period and in other districts than those where the men lived, or simply to paid road work?

Professor KELSEY. I said that they had asked to have the road work continued. The corvée has never been discontinued; it is still on the law books of the country. They asked to have the road work continued under the existing conditions.

Mr. ANGELL. And what were those conditions, as you understand them?

Professor KELSEY. Those were in those districts where, as I understand, through tactful management and regular, small payments to the men, the natives were perfectly satisfied.

Senator POMERENE. You used the expression that they asked that it continue. Whom do you mean?

Professor KELSEY. I understand that in certain places petitions were gathered up by the Haitians asking that the road work be continued.

Senator POMERENE. In other words, it was the natives?

Professor KELSEY. The natives; yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Not the military?

Professor KELSEY. No.

Mr. ANGELL. It was paid road work?

Professor KELSEY. As a matter of fact, there has been unpaid road work since, to a considerable extent, with the cooperation of the natives.

Mr. ANGELL. But limited, I take it, to a short period of time and in districts wherein the men lived?

Professor KELSEY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring to the proposed loan, you said you were skeptical of the extent of the antagonism on the part of the Haitians to the loan. Do you think the extent of their antagonism or the lack of antagonism has any connection with the operation of the loan and the necessary continued financial control of the country?

Professor KELSEY. My impression is that the first reaction against the loan was due to the feeling that the United States had definitely promised at the very outset of negotiations to make a considerable loan, which it had failed to make, so that after a time they said, "Well, you did not make the loan, you won't make the loan. Now we won't have it." It was just a general irritation.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that irritation, some of it, personal with the financial adviser?

or KELSEY. Some of the later irritation was, I suspect, personal. So far the average man analyzed the situation I do not know. They were very much depressed over their financial situation; they did the way out, NGELL. If the United States were itself to make a loan to Haiti, or the making of a loan to Haiti by private American bankers, and United States marine forces and treaty officials were to withdraw, there would be no opposition to the loan, would there?

or KELSEY. I think not.

NGELL. Do you think that the opposition would be genuine and at spread if the Haitians realized any such loan would have to be led by continued control of their finances for the life of the loan, for 40 years?

or KELSEY. Well, there are many thinking men in Haiti that recognize the fact, and no matter how much they may regret it as a fact they NGELL. What do you refer to as a fact? The necessity for a loan?

or KELSEY. The necessity for control.

NGELL. The necessity for control in their minds?

or KELSEY. Yes.

CHAIRMAN. By "control" you mean what?

or KELSEY. Some financial control in some way.

NGELL. Control simply of the national revenues, or of the expenditures as the income?

or KELSEY. Well, I am assuming that we are discussing some system of control there which would set apart on some definite basis the revenue to be used, comparable to the Dominican system.

CHAIRMAN. To the service of the debt?

or KELSEY. To the service of the debt.

NGELL. A moment ago, Doctor Kelsey, you said that you had not had opportunity to read the record of these hearings. I take it, then, that you did not read the testimony of Admiral Caperton, showing the detailed history of the intervention, day by day, from June, 1915, to well along into 1916?

or KELSEY. I glanced over it in a very summary fashion.

NGELL. In your recommendations or your conclusions, then, you have considered, have you, such contrast as may be between our purposes, as stated by Admiral Caperton at the time of the intervention, and the results which were used to effect that intervention?

or KELSEY. In a way, I have; in another way, I have not; because the results are not material to what we ought to do in the future. Our solution of the present problem is not to be determined by any blunders that may have been made in the past.

NGELL. Even if those blunders constituted a departure from our proper policy toward internal affairs in Latin-American countries? To question in another way: Do you think that the situation of Haiti is such that we should undertake to regulate the internal affairs of that country?

or KELSEY. My personal opinion is that we ought to absolutely control the situation in Haiti for an indefinite period—that is my personal opinion.

NGELL. And that if there is a departure from all our traditional American principles, you are in favor of marking the departure now in connection with this.

or KELSEY. If necessary.

NGELL. And without regard to the methods which were used to effect the intervention?

or KELSEY. So far as my personal knowledge goes, I have no criticism of the methods of the intervention.

NGELL. I think that is all.

or POMERENE. I want to ask this general question, Doctor Kelsey. In this report in the way that you have described to the American Society of Political and Social Science, and, I take it, that the facts, as we have stated them in this record, are the facts as you gleaned them during investigation in Haiti, as well as from the knowledge of literature that you have read on this subject—or KELSEY. Yes, sir.

or POMERENE (continuing). That, to the best of your judgment, you have correctly stated these facts—

Professor KELSEY. I have tried to, sir.

Senator POMERENE (continuing). And wherever there are inferences or conclusions drawn, you have drawn them according to your best knowledge and belief based upon the facts as you have found them?

Professor KELSEY. I have. I had no ulterior interest of any sort, personal or theoretical, in this matter at all.

Senator POMERENE. You were not there representing the United States Government—

Professor KELSEY. In no way.

Senator POMERENE (continuing). In any shape, manner, or form—

Professor KELSEY. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE (continuing). Or any department of the Government?

Professor KELSEY. No; nor anything else that would affect the nature of my report.

Senator POMERENE. You were not representing this committee in any way or form, or either branch of Congress?

Professor KELSEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Nor any financial interest in Haiti?

Professor KELSEY. Nor any financial interest whatsoever.

Senator POMERENE. I wanted to draw out these facts for the record, to set Dr. Kelsey right, and the committee right, and the Government right. But whether your report is right or wrong, you believe it to be right?

Professor KELSEY. I should be very grateful to be shown where it is wrong. (After informal discussion:)

Senator POMERENE. I move that the chairman be instructed to have a report made of Part I of the hearings of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. May I have your authority to proceed to have a plate made of a little map of Haiti and Santo Domingo?

Senator POMERENE. I move, further, that the chairman be instructed to have a plate made for a map of Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

(The motion was duly seconded and agreed to.)

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, when did you arrive in the territory of the Dominican Republic, and when did you leave?

Professor KELSEY. I landed at Puerto Plata July 4, 1921, and I sailed from the same port on, I believe, the 22d of October.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you indicate the places which you visited and country which you traversed in going to those places?

Professor KELSEY. I spent some days in Puerto Plata. I went to Santo Domingo where I remained until September, meantime making two or three trips to Monte Cristi in the northwest, spending some days at Mao on the rice plantation which has been developed there. I went east several times through Yaguajay and La Vega. Finally, I went overland, over the road which is under construction, down to the capital. From the capital I visited some of the immediately adjoining country, and I also went west as far as San Juan, not far from the Haitian border, through Azua, and then from San Juan went down to Bayama. On leaving the capital we made a brief call at San Pedro de Macoris. Then I went around the island and spent a day at Samana.

Senator POMERENE. Will you state the mode of travel that you used when you went over the island, in a general way?

Professor KELSEY. Around the coast, of course, by boat; overland, either by automobile or horseback.

The CHAIRMAN. During this time were you able to talk with various elements of the population, as in Haiti?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; and even more freely, because the Dominican speaks much better Spanish than the Haitian does French.

The CHAIRMAN. You were able to talk with the peasants, then, as well as with the educated classes?

Professor KELSEY. Yes; so far as my meager equipment would permit.

The CHAIRMAN. When you spoke of education in Haiti you estimated that the percentage of literates varied perhaps from 3 to 5 per cent. At what figure would you put it in the Dominican Republic?

Professor KELSEY. There is more disagreement of opinion on that point. The merchants tell me that not 1 person out of 10 coming into their stores from the country can read or write. The estimate of actual illiteracy, taking the population as a whole, ranges from 70 to 90 per cent. It is very difficult to get at the exact facts. The superintendent of schools, a Dominican, with whom I was talking on this question, said that that was certainly true of the country.

, but that in many districts in the last five years a very considerable children have learned to read and write, and he thought a great deal had been made.

CHAIRMAN. What have you to say about the school population, as to the children that went to school before the occupation and afterwards?

MR. KELSEY. The universal testimony is that there has been a tremendous increase in the school population, particularly in the rural districts.

CHAIRMAN. Is it fourfold? Do you subscribe to that estimate?

MR. KELSEY. I have given a fairly definite statement in my report. In my hands in this way I rather hesitate. In one instance, I think, the increase has been from something like 13,000 to 100,000, but how that applies to the whole country I can not answer. All classes everywhere make reference to education, that there has been a tremendous increase in the last five years. You see, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid of these figures there has never been any accurate source for them.

POMERENE. I think we have in a report from some of the occupants some very definite figures as to the number of children, as to the number which were going to school, and the percentage of attendance among those who were enrolled.

MR. KELSEY. Yes; that you can get.

CHAIRMAN. Among the undertakings by the military government which have met with forth criticism is the road from Monte Cristi to Santo Domingo—criticized until a few months ago at least. What have you to say of that?

MR. KELSEY. That is a fundamental necessity for the country, and is so recognized by every independent native.

CHAIRMAN. Is it too elaborate, too well built, too expensive?

MR. KELSEY. The critic, of course, says that it is too expensive, but it is remembered that in part it was undertaken at a time when all expenses were high. In part, difficulties that no man can imagine who has not been through that country had to be overcome, which made it more expensive than the promise of being.

There is very little real objection to the road-building program on the part of the Dominicans. They are using those roads to the utmost, and many have suggested to me that we should complete them instead of leaving them unfinished. Now, there are engineering problems involved, and I have no independent judgment whether you ought to build a concrete bridge here, or a wooden bridge. I am not prepared to answer that.

CHAIRMAN. Do you think it as important to build a good highway along the coast, say from San Pedro de Macoris to Barahona, as it is to complete the road from north to south?

MR. KELSEY. Almost, because it will open up very attractive areas. The reason is that the district around San Juan, for illustration, should be a producing center of beans, miscellaneous vegetables, and other things. At the present time they can not produce and market to any advantage. And through there will be taken advantage of instantly.

It is that the Dominicans have started bus lines wherever they can run a line, even to Barahona, which is an extremely difficult trail, is an indication of their realization of the value of the road. The way the people at the turn in to do the work when they found money was running short the approaches to that great bridge over the Yaque del Sur could not be denied, is an indication that the Dominican is in favor of the roads. No question about that.

CHAIRMAN. Will you tell the committee something about the agriculture of the Dominican Republic, as compared with that of Haiti?

MR. KELSEY. It is much more advanced. To begin with, you have some extent of large sugar plantations. Now, although there is a considerable amount of cane in Haiti, it is nothing in comparison with Santo Domingo. I have some very large centrales, with thousands of acres under cultivation. Some of it is long established; some of it, like Barahona, which I mentioned, at the mouth of Yaque del Sur, in a country which must be irrigated. That is an experimental plantation, involving a very large investment of capital. This happens to be American capital, I am told, with some $10,000,000 already invested, and they are grinding sugar there for the first time this winter. On the south shore you have about a dozen rather small plantations, Barahona in the west and La Romana in the east being the largest. There is a little district in which there is a good deal of planting at Puerto Plata in the north. There are scattering patches of coffee—where—a little of it over at Monte Cristi.

The great central valley, which is in part an extremely rich area, a basin valley, is as a rule in rather small holdings, which seem to average perhaps 10 acres, of which perchance 10 acres will be under cultivation. This is the Cibao, as they call it, gives you the impression of a population more prosperous than in any other section of the island. It may be only apparent, because of the natural beauty of the country and the way in which it is cared for—they have a good, rich, well-drained soil. Here you find your cacao plantations. You find around Santiago a considerable amount of tobacco. The road makes its way out along the railroad down to Samana or north to Puerto Plata. It is a district of more or less miscellaneous agriculture.

The methods of agriculture are still crude. There is comparatively little power machinery used, except on the sugar plantations. When I say power machinery, I am referring to the use of real plows and cultivators with animals. They have been introduced, and are more common than they are in Haiti, where you practically never see a plow. The general impression of Santo Domingo, over against Haiti, is one of far greater prosperity.

The CHAIRMAN. The visible per capita wealth is greater?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, markedly. The peasants are vastly better dressed. You see, the density of population is only about one-fourth as great as in Haiti. The Dominicans are all landowners. Most of them cultivate the land. They are well dressed. The Dominican almost always wears shoes. The Haitian peasant can seldom afford shoes. The animals appear both more numerous and better cared for. Their foreign trade alone indicates that Santo Domingo has been more successful financially than Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you say, then, that the greater literacy and the period economic condition of the Dominican Republic presents a social and political problem more easy of solution than that of Haiti?

Professor KELSEY. No, sir; particularly if you have in mind at all real progress with the rest of the world. The social problems do not become less serious when the level is raised.

The CHAIRMAN. I had in mind particularly the establishment and maintenance of an effective government—a Dominican native government.

Professor KELSEY. Well, I am not sure how far that can apply. More progressive people, if we may trust the accounts which come to us from around the world, are frequently as obedient to law as the highly developed people. It is more a question of tradition.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they able to choose their own governments?

Professor KELSEY. There you encounter again the divergence of opinion as to how the actual man is chosen. You find on the part of Dominican statesmen and leaders a pretty frank statement that all the voting of any significance has been done under orders in all their history. It is not a real expression of personal opinion. You have not a larger group with independent judgment; if that lower group have an illiteracy ranging from 70 to 80 per cent it is clear that the absolute control is in the hands of the upper 10 per cent, to say the least.

The CHAIRMAN. I was seeking really to get your opinion as to the policy of the United States relative to the withdrawal of the American troops from the territory of the Dominican Republic and the establishment of a Dominican government.

Professor KELSEY. I have tried to cover those points in my report. Of course I am delighted to speak offhand, asking you always to remember that a fully written statement is probably more reliable than an informal statement.

We made our first big blunder with reference to Santo Domingo when we permitted the overthrow of the Caceres government in 1911 and its replacement by a revolutionary régime instead of following out the law of the country.

We made our second big blunder when we permitted the increase of internal debt under President Nouel to the extent of about $1,700,000, as I call it, offhand. We had told Santo Domingo in our earlier convention hereafter the government was to be orderly, and that the debt of the country could not be increased without the advance consent of the United States. At that moment we permitted both the increase of the debt and the revolutionary overthrow of the government we satisfied the Dominican politicians that we could bluff us on any proposition—that we would not interfere. We did not interfere, therefore, in Santo Domingo when we should have interfered. That was my first summary of the situation.

POMERENE. Will you allow me to interpolate this? We took possession in 1908 under the treaty—or KELSEY. Of the financial administration?

POMERENE. Yes; and it appeared before our committee at Santo Domingo between 1908 and 1916, when our marines entered, there were four of them, one of which lasted for a period of 11 months. Now, your thought is that we should have intervened earlier—when these revolutions occurred? Is that it?

or KELSEY. The first one after our convention.

POMERENE. And that we should not have permitted any increase of public debt?

or KELSEY. I am merely trying to point out what effect our acceptance of the debt would have produced.

POMERENE. But also on that question of debt—if you are familiar with the figures, perhaps it is not necessary for me to state them—but between 1908 and 1916 the testimony shows that the internal indebtedness had increased to $16,000,000 plus; and that this commission which was appointed, composed of two Dominicans, two Americans, and one Porto Rican, after a very thorough investigation reduced that $16,000,000 to $4,200,000 of bona fide debt.

or KELSEY. Yes; but it was our initial recognition of the first small step that encouraged them to go on with their financial program. If we had taken positive action with reference to those two things, it is entirely conceivable that the later situation might not have arisen.

or KELSEY. Before we get much further from the questions at the beginning of the examination on the Dominican Republic, will you give us a description of the racial characteristics of the Dominicans as compared with the Haitians?

or KELSEY. There is a larger percentage of mixture with the white race in the Dominican Republic than in Haiti. No one really knows how much is one or what the percentage of what we call white blood would be in Santo Domingo. The color tone of the Dominican is dark rather than light. There are a good many whites in the country, but most of the whites of the Dominican Republic have intermarried with the Dominicans, and is it doubtful if there is much of a white population of the second or third generation that is pure white blood. One can only say, therefore, that the actual line of descent is a larger percentage of a European admixture. You also see what I see anywhere in Haiti, indications at times of Indian features—very Indian features—in the northern part of the island. Historically, we find that there was less antagonism, fewer sharp breaks, and that there was a better blend with the indigenous population.

or KELSEY. The greatest contrast, perhaps, between the two countries is that Haiti has a reputation of being black and that Santo Domingo has claimed to that it was the Dominicans despise the Haitians. I never have seen a sharper expression of color prejudice than is manifested there. The Dominican claims to be a Latin, with Latin culture.

POMERENE. Are you able to express an opinion as to what is the chief dislike?

or KELSEY. I think that in part it is historical, because of the fact that at one time controlled Santo Domingo. And in part, I think, it is a desire to be identified with the white group elsewhere, and that they think that the only way in which that could be done was by denial of connection with the darker group of Haiti.

POMERENE. Haiti, I believe, invaded and had control of Santo Domingo probably 20 or 25 years?

or KELSEY. Yes; and Haiti is now invading Santo Domingo. I mean a large migration of Haitians into Santo Domingo is taking place, because of greater economic opportunities.

POMERENE. Is that permanent, or is it just during certain seasons of the year? I might say that while we were there I had some information that these waves were over there during the cane-cutting period, etc., and would return when the cane-cutting period was over.

or KELSEY. The older practice in Santo Domingo was to issue a permit for these cane plantations to bring in laborers, which were brought miscellaneous from the West Indies, not primarily from Haiti. So far as my information goes, the Barahona Co., in the west, is the only one which has drawn a considerable extent upon Haiti.

or KELSEY. When the Haitian comes in and finds a larger opportunity he is likely to stay, and there is a very considerable proportion of the population of the towns and villages in the northern part of Santo Domingo that is H. There are several thousand Haitians residing permanently in Santiago. They have a permanent population of some 20,000. They have quickly adopted the Spanish language, and are indistinguishable.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, the witness has been giving a running account on our action as a Government in the Dominican Republic, and I would ask if he has anything to add to that or draws any conclusion from that.

Professor KELSEY. You are asking a fundamental question. It is the fundamental question. The question of whether law No. 1 or law No. 2 passed by our forces there has been unwise is of relatively small importance. It is obvious that we have established order, on the whole, in Santo Domingo with relatively very small difficulty. It is obvious that we have maintained peace in the country on the whole very satisfactorily. But the fundamental question remains as to what we are doing there and what we are going to do in the future. My personal ideas are of no particular importance, because the Government of the United States has stated the terms under which it would draw.

Mr. Wilson made the first proposition, which was not accepted. There was nothing done, apparently, because the Dominicans believed they would have a more favorable proposition, as they considered it, from the incoming administration. President Harding finally—I use his name merely as the head of the Government—made his suggestion in the early summer of 1921. That suggestion was known to the Dominicans in this country and in Santo Domingo in advance, and apparently the local politicians and press decided to oppose it as they did, so that almost on receipt of the details they were able to dispose of objections.

That plan, as proposed by our admiral in charge, called for elections to be held. The papers immediately came out in antagonism, called every man a traitor who would take part in any such elections, and demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the American forces. Apparently they thought that a firm statement of that sort at that time would lead to a change entirely our program. Inasmuch as our Government had been in advance that this program was generally satisfactory, obviously it was no reason for changing the constitutions—

Senator POMERENE. Do you know that to be a fact?

Professor KELSEY. One does not know certain things; he has to infer from things. I am giving my interpretation of what took place, which you, with greater knowledge, can correct.

Senator POMERENE. Was that from conferences with different Dominicans?

Professor KELSEY. Yes. I can give you, if you want, the places where I have detailed statements and the places where I am reading between the lines.

Senator POMERENE. I wish you would go ahead and give that in detail.

Professor KELSEY. I was told by Dominicans that this plan had been approved by the State Department with representative Dominicans, and was accepted by them as satisfactory in advance. I am reading between the lines when I say that after it was rejected by the Dominican politicians the State Department saw no reason for changing the plan because it could not have any greater dependence on any assurance that the next plan would be acceptable. Therefore the United States gave the answer, in substance, inasmuch as the Dominicans had rejected it there was nothing left for the United States to do.

Now, that rejection dumbfounded the Dominicans. It put the political situation in a very awkward position. The one thing they had stated they wanted to accomplish most was the withdrawal of the marines. The one thing they accomplished by their rejection of the Harding plan was the indefinite retention of the marines in the island, and they were keen enough to see the situation in which they put themselves.

Now, my judgment is that there was no particular objection on the part of the Dominicans to calling these elections, but the Dominican politicians did not dare risk such an election. They have never had any completely free, uninfluenced election. To feel that an outside force here is so strong as to make it possible for any man to go up and cast his ballot as he sees fit means that you have got comparatively little control of the vote. The political leaders, not being able to foresee the result of that election, were naturally opposed to it.

ter the United States had refused to modify its suggestion—

POMERENE. Well, had the election been held, had the plan been carried would have been a contest among Dominicans themselves?

DR KELSEY. Absolutely. But they could not foresee the result of it. There is no one group strong enough to know that they could dominate. They might have time enough to dicker between groups to make any coalition they might have been put through had they had two or three months having only a couple of months, they were quite unprepared.

After this happened the Dominican political leaders began conferring together, and I was personally assured by the time I left the island in that the political leaders were ready to have the election. I have never heard since of any call that they have made for it.

My argument is that there is only one thing in our suggestion to which the Dominican leaders take serious exception. They are perfectly willing to follow the acts of the Government; they recognize that as the simple A, B, C of government. They are perfectly willing to increase the loan, however large it may be of certain expenditures made under it. They see the situation. There is no real objection to that. The real point that the Dominicans complained of to me was the presence of the American officers in the country.

That seemed to be the straw that broke the camel's back, in their opinion, that indicated to them that they were confessing to the world that they could not handle their own situation.

WE. May I interrupt you there? When you refer to the American officers, the Guardia you refer, do you not, to the stipulation in the program of occupation which would maintain a military force of Americans in the country?

DR KELSEY. Yes; certainly. Now, there are some extremely well-meaning and able Dominicans who believe that the difficulty can be met by a verbal convention, which would save the face of the Dominicans. All things will be accepted. There are some who doubt the possibility of any agreement.

WE. I should like, with the approval of the chairman, to ask this question. Did the provision for the retention of control of the internal affairs by the Americans have any great adverse effect on the treaty problem?

DR KELSEY. That is a difficult thing to say, because they do not know themselves. You see there is still a somewhat divided opinion as to the introduction of a land tax. Many of the Dominicans feel that is one of the most useful things made by the American authorities. They accept it in principle, they are rather critical of the way in which it was carried out. I have reacted just as human beings do everywhere on earth with reference to a taxation system.

POMERENE. Prior to this time there had been no land tax?

DR KELSEY. As I understand it, there had been no land tax.

POMERENE. And as I understand further, after this land tax was introduced under this scheme, which was adopted by the American occupancy, these so-called politicians encouraged the landowners not to pay their taxes?

DR KELSEY. I believe that has been true through this last year. Of course, we have to recognize that the introduction of land taxation in a sparsely populated country with, theoretically at least, large holdings of unused land does present a very serious financial problem for landholders. I think that has been recognized. It is one thing to take a large area of land that is produced and devise a fair tax upon it; it is another thing to take an equal area and and devise a fair tax upon it. But the Dominicans with whom I deal, on the whole, "We do not believe the land tax will ever be abolished, we, and hereto stay. It is too valuable a source of income for the Government."

POMERENE. Doctor, there is one matter I should like to have your opinion on. I do not have in mind the date, so that I shall refer to the event. After our occupancy the President of the Dominican Republic and several officials all resigned, after which resignations there was no Dominican Government, and it became apparently necessary for the military to extend its jurisdiction to that part of the Government which the resignations was administered by the Dominican President and his officials.

Now, I wish you would discuss that and give your judgment as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of those resignations and what the result was.

Professor KELSEY. The answer that I should make to that, Senator, is to think it was an extremely clever political move on the part of the local officials. They had challenged the right of the United States to step in in any way. When they calmly walked out of office they threw the whole everything that happened on what they considered the invading force.

Now, that was not bad politics. It put them on the outside where they no part in the actual administration, and left them free to criticize and make appeals to the world at large. I think it was a clever dodge on their part. However, that immediately presented an extremely difficult situation both for the Washington Government and for the men in charge, and it led to my fundamental criticism of our relations with Santo Domingo.

So far as I can discover, there has not been a semblance of any proper part of the United States. We got in there by accident. Other accidents happened. That is, our train was derailed by the resignations of these officials. We had to establish an emergency relief station, and then we established a relief station and told the men to go ahead and run it, giving them almost no instructions and no program, leaving the impression in the minds of the officials there that probably they would be removed to-morrow or the day after to-morrow at the outside.

Senator POMERENE. Well, is that a fair statement? You say there was no program. There was a proposed program of an election, which was a primary step to our getting out.

Professor KELSEY. I know, but that was proposed four years or more after we went in. I am speaking of the time we went in. That difficulty probably is due to the European war situation and the fact that all our interests were wrapped up in Europe. However, it creates a very embarrassing element in our dealings with that particular country. Instead of turning right around then when the emergency arose and saying, "Now gentlemen, we have to find some solution of this," we simply took charge and instituted a civil administration by military force in a friendly country without express approval of Congress.

Now, that tallies neither with our scheme of government nor with the nature of the situation there. Somewhere we should have worked out a program and done it at the earliest possible moment.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let us approach this from another viewpoint and recognize the difficulty. I recognize the embarrassing position in which our American occupancy was placed by that resignation. On the other hand, from this viewpoint—and I do not know whether I agree with your statement or not that it was a clever move. The civil government there had been established with certain authority by the Dominican people, and as I view this it was the duty of that President and that cabinet to do the very best they could for the Dominican people, even if they were unnecessarily hampered by the American troops. And as it has seemed to me, when the Dominican President and his cabinet resigned and threw off all responsibility and left the Dominican people helpless, it was as if I, as an attorney representing one litigant, when I see that the opposing litigant and his attorney would not do what I wanted, to do or what I thought was proper for them to do, it was as if I were justified in deserting my client under that contingency simply because I could not get for him what I wanted. If that reasoning is not right, I should like to have it pointed out.

Professor KELSEY. It is absolutely right, Senator. But you are discussing a moral problem involved, and I was merely mentioning the effectiveness of the move. I am not putting my standard of government into the Dominicans. You might find ourselves in hearty agreement as to the moral problems involved there, but I say that from the standpoint of effectiveness it worked.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it important, in the interest of the economic development of the country and of the maintenance of order after the termination of the occupation, that the north and south and east and west highways be completed before we leave?

Professor KELSEY. Oh, that is fundamental. I think we will make a mistake if we do not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else we could do that would contribute greatly to the ability of a native Dominican Government to maintain peace and suppress revolutions as the completion of those highways?

Professor KELSEY. No, sir; not in my judgment. I think that is the most important thing we can do in Santo Domingo.

MAN. Do you think it reasonable, then, to refund this so-called loan and to borrow the sum necessary to complete the highway?

KELSEY. I would strongly advise it personally.

1 Americans. We have only one desire, and that is to further the and the complete independence of both these countries. I knowican in public or private life who wants to destroy that indeed who would not like the most complete development of a responsibility in these two countries. I think we are willing to pledge their future independence and their full freedom from interference the outside world. I am perfectly willing to recognize that we es, both in internal politics and in relations with outside groups. ngo and Haiti must recognize that they are a part of our political virtue of location. If we will try to put the Haitian finances on a sound basis, on basis as Santo Domingo is at present, where if normal conditions- lebt will be wiped out in a very brief period of time; if we will make is understand that we, the people of the United States, are perfectly onfess the sins and crimes of individuals or the mistakes that the Gov- ay have made, and are determined to be of help in their future devel- l solemnly pledge that when they are in a position to maintain an- t government based on law and not on revolution we shall deal with- tely independent, I think we shall have no trouble in securing their- peration.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that everywhere I had the most friendly and cordial relations with both Haitians and Dominicans. I have not hesitated anywhere on the island unarmed, with the exception of one small place where there is a little too much political activity against the Americans—that in Santo Domingo. I mean that in Haiti I would go across the country day or night unarmed at any time, and everywhere expect the most friendly treatment. I might meet the crook or the degenerate man, just as I might him here.

I am very much inclined to feel, therefore, that we have the solution of the problem largely in our hands, and I just want to emphasize that it depends primarily upon the selection of wise representatives and assuring that their decisions will be backed up and that we will have continuity of policy on the part of official Washington.

I think, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that is all I need to say.

Senator POMERENE. I would like to make this observation: I have never heard any American, whether in official life or out of official life, who has even suggested that America wanted to stay there permanently in either of those Republics; and everyone with whom I have talked seemed to be sincerely of the opinion that whatever we do there should be from a purely altruistic disposition toward those islanders, and for no selfish reason on our part. I am satisfied that, whatever mistakes may have been made, that is the purpose of the American people; and I say that notwithstanding some of the untrue, and I think in some instances maliciously untrue, and un-American statements which have been made to the contrary.

Professor KELSEY. May I add a word? Pardon my comment on your statement. There is a selfish interest which is righteous and just. In my opinion we have a selfish interest in the conduct of this Western Hemisphere, because it does affect us and it does affect our relations with other great countries.

Senator POMERENE. If you mean an indirect interest, I accept your statement. Professor KELSEY. And I think we gain by frankly saying to the world, "Gentlemen, we are involved. It is a part of our problem, and we deal with it because it is a part of our problem and not because we are forcing it upon other people."

Senator POMERENE. I mean selfish in the monetary sense or in the sense of attempting to deprive them of their sovereignty, or anything of that kind.

Professor KELSEY. I mean, we are frequently told by Haitians and Dominicans, "You have a selfish interest."—

Senator POMERENE. We have a selfish interest, just as you would have doing some charitable work in your own community. In that sense it is a selfish interest.

Senator ODDIE. Doctor Kelsey, you observed the character of road building that is being done under the American occupation. Is it your opinion that it is of very high class?

Professor KELSEY. I am very favorably impressed, on the whole, with the sort of road which has been put through. I believe that the roads constructed there will be one of the most valuable assets of the country in the future. My personal opinion is that it will be wiser to construct them on a permanent basis; of course we all understand that permanency is relative—on a permanent basis with permanent bridges, if possible, rather than with temporary, makeshift wooden structures that are sure to go out in some flood.

Senator ODDIE. From your observation, that character of work is being done there now?

Professor KELSEY. It is being done there now, and under difficulties. The American road builder has ever had to contend with. I mean the water-culties in that mountain district.

Senator POMERENE. You refer to the excessive rains at certain times?

Professor KELSEY. Excessive rain. You take ground that is permanently soaked from 3 to 6 feet, that never dries, with practically level country. Now, how are you going to get that water away from there so as to get the ground of the road dry? They have found that they can not even put the road on with machines, because they are too heavy. They have to carry the road in on mule back until they get a cap to shed the water.

Senator ODDIE. You are of the opinion, then, that the road work being conducted under the American occupation is equal to the best that is being done in this country?

Professor KELSEY. Certainly equal to the average that is being done in this country. Let us not be superlative. It is high-grade work.

ODDIE. Do you not think, from your knowledge of the country and that we owe it to the people of Santo Domingo to set them as high of road building as we have in our own country?

KELSEY. I think it is most desirable.

ODDIE. And that if we attempted a road-building program on a lower our own we would not be doing them justice?

KELSEY. Not only that, but in view of the tropical rains you would get nothing that would remain there at all. Their road work must be more than ours, if it is to survive.

ODDIE. We would be doing the people themselves an injustice if we attempt to give them the best possible in the way of roads?

KELSEY. I think you have put my idea in other language.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCE,
Philadelphia, March 14, 1922.

SENATOR: Because of your interest in the statements that I made to the committee last week, that Haitian writers had themselves recognized weaknesses in their social organization and had criticized it and the government, I have translated a few paragraphs from the works of the most thoughtful Haitian writers and am sending them to you as you desire to make of them.

Until Tippenhauer, who was born and has lived in Haiti, is one of the best men in the country by common consent. His book published in 1802 still remains one of the very best descriptions of Haiti and its contents on this work I take almost at random the following paragraphs:

"Newspapers which are independent or which are organs of an opposition are not tolerated, although on paper the freedom of the press is there; there remains nothing to do but to flatter, praise, defend the administration until it is moved as a reward and encouragement for so many services and for such submission to grant assistance by a contract for financing or by a regular yearly subsidy." (Vol. 2, 559.)

"The state of Haiti is primarily military. The largest part of the income is maintained in a numerous army. The generals are powerful in state affairs. The president is a general, by preference in uniform; his palace is bristled with the headquarters of a field chieftain, and in the official processions the general staff follows him. The chiefs of the Arrondissements are generals, true satraps, each ruling over his territory as the highest power; they increase their meager pay by all sorts of devices. The local commanders are generals." (Vol. 2, 571.)

"Do not think that the grafters are despised by the people or even before the courts, for one often finds the most prominent grafters of influence in the 'high life' of the capital." (Vol. 2, 602.)

"Executive power is unlimited." * * * "Like master, like servant." * * *

"Interest, individual desires are the guiding principles of administration."

* * * "With inconceivable callousness the government totally ignores the most just claims or modifies them according to those interested."

"Enemies are personal enemies. If an underling does not demurely kneel obedient back before the omniscience of the President, then is he a traitor of the fatherland, a 'disturber of the public peace.' * * *

"If an illegal means the party in power seeks to make its opponents harmless, means are ready at hand. In the best cases the irreconcilable is removed from the military ranks or interned; in moderate cases he is indefinitely imprisoned; in the worst cases he is exiled or summarily shot without trial."

"Election elections are peculiar. For instance, if 5,000 voters have registered, a thousand or less vote in reality. The whole procedure is arbitrary. No one can do justice to the autocratic acts perpetrated by officeholders on any day at the secret command of the administration. The voting booths are closed before the appointed hour that military companies may vote as they please; entrances are forbidden; indeed, may be imprisoned if they refuse to poll; the booths are prematurely closed that the number of votes correct in case of a plot of officeholders (seilens der in Complot Beteiligten) (Bureaumitglieder vorgennomen wird). These things are all in the day and every time cause the most vehement protestations. Thus the administration the glittering result that in congress only individuals advise, who, at the wish of the administration, ignore monstrous things and for a 'Calypso,' or present of gold, willingly agree to all acts of the cabinet, who, above all, help the government to act" (Vol. 2, 619-621.)

Mr. L. J. Marcelin in 1892, the same year as the book of Tippenhauer : lished at Paris, Haiti, Its Civil War, while he was connected with the Ha : legation. He undertakes to describe the economic background and sta : reasons for the continued disturbances in Haiti.

"I must admit that while writing these lines I have been dominated by : presentiments and weighed down under the mass of evils which threaten : country in the presence of the grave signs on our social and political b : . Thus, almost everywhere increasing effeminacy, shameless industrializ : faith, systematic corruption, the bloody reign of brutal force substitut : for the practice of the principles of laws and institutions." (P. 5.) "At : present moment all the impressions received by the heart, all that the eye : or the ears hear is but the expression of sorrow and bitterness, while ev : there rule among the citizens on one side misery, mendicancy, vagabond : despair, or sad resignation; on the other side, the endless exaggeration : tens'ons, ambition, cupidity, devouring hunger for power, unsatisfied de : vengeance which survives each defeat." (P. 6.)

"What until to-day has been the product of our system of educa : * * * "These tormented souls given over to intrigue, with respect for : laws or traditions, without scruples as to the means for serving their inte : also without any real devotion to any cause, without personal prudenc : not even understanding the men whom they would serve, these poor and : able citizens (ces pauvres citoyens et en meme temps ces citoyens pa : : learn nothing and are only destined in all their career to disturb the p : peace." (Pp. 188-189.)

"Speaking of politicians, he says:

"They know no other means of making their ideas triumph but brut : No public law, no constitution, can in such a case oppose any serious ob : to the "coups d'Etat" and to internal conflicts with all the'r evil res : (P. 191.) "Yes; the political groups of Haiti are only factions." * * : "After more than 80 years it is these factions which dictate the measur : government in our country, and through their subversive principles our : body has been deteriorating and falling gradually into corruption under : despotism of him, who, more cunning and with richer means of destr : gains the power." * * * "All these struggling groups but aspire to : nate each other, to perpetuate their domination not by means of constr : assuring the free exercise of rights, mutually accepted in pacific comb : free and reasoned discussions, but by exclusions, by proscriptions, by mass : by wholesale destruction, in a word by terror and crime." (P. 194.)

"The first class of politicians whom we have occasion to note are those : really desire the progress of Haiti, but a progress through peace, union, coo : by means just, appropriate, and regular. These form the minority; the : impotent and rarely conduct a militant movement save after having bee : urged, and when they do this it is with the hope of bringing things back : level where they belong." * * * "The second category desires progr : but they see before all the common mass which suffers from misery, both p : and intellectual. This group would provide both food and education f : masses, but the means employed are not fitting and produce no durable res : * * * "Finally, the third category includes the ambitious who but : of the overthrow of the nation to satisfy their egotism." (P. 200.)

Of the peasants he writes: "See them scattered in their fields, pursuin : obscure career, these men who, not participating in any of the pleasures : society, nevertheless bear all the costs and are entirely sacrificed to the oc : of the few." (P. 44.) "Education is for them a thing absolutely unkn : (P. 45.)

The author points out that unless a change comes in the customs and pr : of the government, the final result will be "that our country will be : slavery, if it be only moral slavery." (P. 374.) The Haitians have two c : "To devote ourselves to the interests of our country and thus to cons : nation, laborious, prosperous, happy, both small and powerful; or to : to stagnate in apathy, in incapacity, in the habit of going from revolution : lution, from anarchy to Caesarism, from Caesarism to anarchy, anarchy a : always anarchy—until the day when, weakened by our divisions and b : civil wars, we fall into slavery, into mud and defilement." (P. 378.)

The late Mr. Frederic Marcelin was one of the most distinguished : men in Haiti and had served as minister of finance and in other high pos :

INTRODUCTION.

d Haiti about the 1st of February, 1921, and remained until July 2, ent to the Dominican Republic, staying there until October 22. I saw every important town of Haiti with the exception of Jacmel, and spent weeks on a trip through the interior. In the Dominican Republic I got a glimpse, at least, of nearly every province. During this time I had opportunity to talk to people in all walks of life. I had no fixed itinerary or set plan. I roamed about as opportunity presented trying to see things for myself. I had no official connection of any sort with the Government, though it was difficult to persuade the natives that an American civilian traveling alone was not on some secret mission. While there I read all the best available newspapers written by Haitians or Dominicans, and kept in touch with the news. Perhaps I might add here that if some of my strictures seem severe they may be duplicated from the works of reliable native writers.

Everywhere I was received with courtesy and friendly attentions. Every opportunity was given me to meet men or see conditions. This applied to the United States officials, both civilian and military, to foreign residents to the Haitians and Dominicans. I was welcomed in the local clubs of the larger towns. It is my own fault, therefore, if I failed to get an accurate picture of the situation. Of course, there were many men whom I wanted to meet but failed to see for one reason or another.

It is utterly impossible to try here to thank by name all those who gave me their time. Nor can I even name many of those who opened their hearts to me, lest I be the indirect cause of harm to them. I tried to tell them all that I was appreciative of their aid, and to them all I again express my gratitude.

On my return I am again struck by our ignorance. Too many people here confuse Haiti and Tahiti. The two islands of Haiti and Santo Domingo appear in questions put to me. "Is the United States involved in Santo Domingo?" was asked the other day by a man of education. Unfortunately much of the material which has appeared in our newspapers is so grotesque, or deliberately twisted, that the reader gets a very false impression. Our future relations with these countries are destined to be different than they have been and it is important that we should come to know the essential facts. Is it too much to hope that in the day of the new diplomacy our public departments may tell us of their operations and their problems instead of waiting until the attacks of enemies put them on the defensive? I shall be well content if I have in any way thrown light on the situation. I shall be grateful to any who will call my attention to errors.

Some of my Haitian and Dominican friends will not only disagree with my judgments but may feel hurt at some of my statements. From this there is no escape and even they will be glad that I have tried to tell the truth as it appeared to me. Some things impress the foreigner differently from the natives. I am confident that all will find running through these lines the same free feeling which I find in my heart. Obviously one can not enumerate the individual exceptions to all general statements. Haiti and the Dominican Republic are struggling with an age-old problem, the attainment of civil peace. No people can guarantee the financial success of another, or its political success, but we may by our policies help or hinder, and my sole desire is to find a way to help.

THE ISLAND.

About 1,200 miles south of New York City one will find on the map the island of Haiti or Santo Domingo, considered one of the most beautiful in the world, lying directly between Cuba and Porto Rico to which it is intermediate in size as well. It is some 400 miles in length and 170 in width, but of irregular shape. The total area is over 28,000 square miles, or a little less than that of Ireland. There are a number of dependent islets, some of considerable size but of little value to-day, though a few thousand people manage to obtain a precarious existence on the island of Gonave in the Bay of Port au Prince.

Topography.—As a whole, the island is extremely mountainous, the mountains running from the west with a southerly trend with intervening valleys in which rivers are found. The mountain slopes range from steep to precipitous, often to more than 3,000 feet, a few peaks reaching 8,000 or 10,000 feet. The mountain ranges constitute serious obstacles to travel and make roadbuilding but a difficult and expensive task. Thus the whole southwestern peninsula is a mountain range rising abruptly from the ocean on both sides, with no level ground to the south except the plain of Cayes, and with none on the north until it reaches the neighborhood of Port au Prince. Save in a couple of places possible to cross the peninsula. At some recent time, geologically this peninsula seems to have been separated from the larger island. Southeast from Port au Prince there is a low plain extending into the Dominican Republic, with sulphur springs on the northern border and numerous lakes of brackish and salt water, one of which is below sea level. St. Marc is the mouth of the Artibonite River, the largest in the mountain ranges which stretch from Mole St. Nicholas on the northwest to the most eastern coast form the backbone of the island. These divide the Dominican Republic and offer one good pass at an altitude of 4,000 feet. South of this range at its eastern end is a considerable plain, largely of coral formation. North of this range, from Monte Platero to the west, is a large valley divided into two parts, the eastern section to which Columbus gave the name of Vega Real, rich and well cultivated. To the west of Santiago is found the Yaque del Norte, running through the mountains to its mouth at Monte Cristi. There is another low range between the valley and the coast. Although there are many rivers and streams, there are only two in which boats of any draft may run. As a matter of fact, they have never been useful as waterways, and such use in the future. All the rivers are subject to sudden flood, thus making fording as well as sometimes dangerous. Their availability for purposes of navigation will be mentioned later.

—The influence of the mountains on rainfall is most marked, and at a few miles apart may vary greatly, one being humid, the other arid. The southwestern peninsula is well watered while the northwestern is a barren desert. The actual rainfall varies from 12 to 150 inches per year. In 1919 rain fell on 16 days only; at another there was rain on 115 days. In certain mountain districts 12 inches was the lowest record for a year, and rain fell nearly every day of the year. As a rule the rains are more than general and are also of short duration, an all-day's rain is not an exception. Most of the rain falls in late afternoon or evening, in the morning. In most of the island the natives expect a longer rainy season in spring and a shorter one in autumn, the intervening periods being in different terms do not have fixed values, and the periods are more or less uncertain.—Although the island is within the Tropics, lying just south of the Tropic of Cancer, the proximity of the ocean, the contrast of mountain and valley, and daily winds modify the temperature and the nights are usually cool.

Here, again, local conditions vary, but taking Port au Prince as a standard, the hottest day of 1919 was on August 6, when the thermometer registered 95° at 1 p. m., while at 9 that evening it stood at 71°. The lowest temperature recorded for the year was 68° on January 18, and the highest was 77°. In the high mountain valley of Constanza frosts are reported in winter, and many an American in the hills at night, after being caught in a rain, has been convinced that he was about to freeze. The intense heat of the sun, coupled with the steady heat, makes advisable the use of sunburn creams by visitors from the north, while the towns with paved streets and public buildings during the days of summer. Violent storms and electrical storms are not common, although great damage is occasionally done along the coast by hurricanes, as the wreck of the Memphis lying against the sea at Santo Domingo City testifies.

—Most of the reports on the island speak of the wealth of mineral resources. It is true that the Spaniards found some gold in the possession of the natives, and that to-day in a few places peasants can make 30 or 40 cents per day by digging gravel. It is true that one can find pretty good specimens of copper and other metals. It is true that small deposits of lignite are known. It is true that more or less constant prospecting since the time of Columbus has failed to pay its own cost, let alone reveal any great deposit. If there are any deposits worth mining, their location is not known. Just now there is a possibility of the discovery of oil in paying quantities. The opinion of the best men seems to be that the fertile soil rather than metallic deposits is the source of the wealth of the future.

—There are no large wild animals. In some districts the goats are still wild. Bird life is fairly abundant and practically every kind of bird that can be killed is eaten. Doves of several species are abundantly and highly esteemed as food. Ducks are common locally. The guinea hen is widely distributed and sometimes becomes a nuisance to the gardener, particularly since the elimination of firearms by the American forces. There are hawks but no buzzards. Other than scorpions, centipedes, and tarantulas there are no animals whose bite is at all poisonous. Flies are not numerous, mosquitoes are, and malaria is a prevalent disease. The mongoose has been introduced from Jamaica and, though little known as yet, may be a source of trouble in the future. Fishing is not a well-developed industry, largely, I doubt because of the absence of ice, yet there are many fishermen along the coast, and the kingfish and red snapper are seen in the markets. Lobsters are common enough though seldom eaten by natives who catch them only for sale to foreigners. Turtles and crabs abound. Little lizards are everywhere in evidence, but the great iguana is now very rare. There are crocodiles in the mangroves.

Vegetation.—Mahogany and other desirable trees are scattered about the country, however, in large quantities, and most of the remaining specimens are a result of access that they hardly repay costs of transportation. There is some promise that some trees little used heretofore may prove available for the American railroads. In some of the mountain areas, particularly in the Dominican Republic, there are considerable stands of yellow pine. Most of this is unused. An owner of timber land in Haiti told me that he could afford to cut timber when he could get $120 per hundred feet. There are a few mahogany trees in the Dominican Republic, but lack of transportation still blocks any large-scale development. Most of the building lumber is therefore imported from the United States. Dyewoods are fairly abundant, and in prosperous times are exported. No attempt has ever been made to plant valuable trees.

Wild fruit trees of many sorts are found, the mango being the most important. Citrus fruits do well but are very irregularly distributed. Many grapefruits are seen in the markets of Port au Prince, but in the city of Santo Domingo the grapefruit are imported from Porto Rico. There are no real orchards on the island, though there are large plantations of bananas and plantains. The coconut palm grows freely but is used locally only, no copra being dried for export. At the altitude of about 1,500 feet a subtropical zone is reached where all sorts of vegetables and fruits of the temperate zone prosper. I have seen Irish potatoes of excellent quality which were grown in the hills near Santo Domingo.

The island is divided between two countries, the Dominican Republic occupying the eastern two-thirds, some 18,000 square miles; Haiti, the western third, with some 10,000 square miles.

CHAPTER I.

THE HAITIANS.

Population.—No census has ever been taken, but the estimated population of Haiti is 2,000,000, or about 200 per square mile. As a matter of fact there are large areas almost uninhabited, like the arid district from Port-au-Prince to St. Nicholas to Gonaïves, the San Michel Valley and parts of the eastern border; in some places the population is dense, very dense when considered in relation to the agricultural development. There are no reliable figures for birth and death rates, but the estimated population in 1890 was about 1,550,000, and there has been little immigration. Children are everywhere in evidence, but the death rate appears to be very high and the aged seem numerous.

Origin.—The overwhelming mass of the people, at least 90 per cent. I would say, seem to be of pure Negro stock. The upper classes are notably light in color and there are small areas where a relatively light color tone prevails. We know that there was a considerable mixture in colonial days, and that time there has been considerable intermarriage between the French, the Europeans and the Haitians, so that there are no pure white families, but those of recent immigrants. The original Indian stock seems to have left no trace. At first one gets the impression that there are twice as many women as men. This is probably due to the fact that the women go to market more often than the men, because the men are working in the fields, away from the house. In the old days the men who entered the towns were often seized and made to serve in the "volunteer army," so the women carried the produce to town.

The Syrians.—About 1890 there came into Haiti the first of a group determined to play a considerable part in the retail business—the Syrians. At first they bought largely from German merchants and peddled their wares through the country districts. Later, finding they could buy more cheaply from the United States, they did so. Being shrewd merchants, they were disliked by the Haitians.

ed by the Germans. Although they never numbered more than a ad, they were ordered out of the country by a law of 1913, passed, at the instigation of the German merchants. Since the occupation, f them have returned. They claim to do $3,000,000 business yearly ulted States. A few of them are American citizens. Save stragglers islands, these represent the only immigrant group which has en- in many years. This, of course, leaves out of account the marines, ests and sisters, and other foreigners temporarily resident in the Barring these, there are only a few hundred whites in Haiti. The are all in the towns.

tion.—All the large towns of Haiti are on the seacoast. The capital, ince, has about 100,000 inhabitants; Cape Haitien, 17,000; the rest maller. The bulk of the population live in villages scattered through r or in isolated cabins. Go where one will in the country, provided is possible (and in many places where it seems impossible), he will cays" of the peasants. These are often temporary rather than structures, for a considerable percentage of the peasants seem to ther freely, clearing a little patch and cultivating it for a couple of then wandering to some new location.

-Wherever possible the towns of Haiti are laid out in squares. The Port au Prince, in the business section, are well paved with concrete. s streets are macadamized, as are some of the streets in Cape Haitien ere. In every town there is some central square, often decorated s and flowers, and a market place, the latter being usually the most ; spot in town to the stranger. The water systems are not very but the officials tell me that there is difficulty in keeping them in tion owing to the acquisitive habits of citizens who need pipes and n older days the towns are said by old residents to have been ex- thy, and one had to walk in the middle of the street and keep a out to avoid unexpected shower baths from the second story. The are praised for having "cleaned up" and for prohibiting the of refuse in the streets. The stores are usually one or two story , looking like warehouses, and such they are, for the stock on display ly a small part of that on hand. There are practically no sewers, ainage is all but universal.

—The prevailing diseases in Haiti are gonorrhea, syphilis, and yaws e said to be very common), tuberculosis, malaria, filariasis, and in- arasites. The country has been very free from epidemics, such as er and bubonic plague. Yet these would probably run through the t like wildfire if they ever got a start, owing to the hordes of mos- many districts and the armies of rats which infest all the towns and the country. Much fun was poked at the financial adviser for in- couple of rat catchers at Port au Prince when the bubonic plague was n New Orleans.

out 1921 an epidemic of smallpox swept the country, having been l from another island. The efforts of the American doctors to check start were rendered futile by the ignorance of the masses and the ejudice of local physicians. The papers everywhere denounced the s, saying that it was nothing but chicken pox, but when the deaths began e the criticism became that the Americans were incompetent. Several thousand persons were vaccinated. Thousands on thousands suffered. en smallpox patients deathly sick lying by the roadside soliciting n passers-by. Often they were left in their cabins without food and he ignorant peasants were seen vaccinating themselves from virus om active cases. One girl under quarantine was observed to take down the flag, carry it while she visited a friend across the street, and replace it on her return. Hospital facilities are inadequate. Exorbitant fees are charged for country visits. The number of lepers is estimated at 500 or 600, the number about 600. There is no special provision for these. Sanitation is unknown; a minister of the State was indignant when compelled to clean his latrine.

Amusements.—The favored pleasures of Haiti are cock fighting and dog cock pits are found everywhere. Gambling is universal. Dancing in the country is to the thumping of the drum, almost the only music of rural Haiti. These dances get pretty hilarious at times if the rum supply is adequate. Tourist hails every simple dance as "Voodoo," but he exaggerates. In clubs of the upper class chess, billiards, poker, whist, all have their admirers while orchestras provide the music.

Domestic animals.—The average peasant has few domestic animals. He owns a few pigs which are allowed to support themselves and which develop nose, and legs at the expense of fat. The burro (worth from $5 to $10) is a common work animal and is also the most valuable, for he carries a large load of the goods to market, with the owner perched on top of the load. Cattle are scarce. The horses are small. Save on large plantations, the animals are seldom used for draft purposes. Chickens abound and are all of the Mediterranean breeds. To judge from casual observation, they are quite common in the towns as in the country, in part because they are being kept until time to cook. There are a good many turkeys, which sell for $1 in the Port au Prince market. Goats are common.

Land ownership.—There is great, almost endless, confusion with reference to the ownership of the land. There has never been a survey. The Government claims to own large tracts, but it seems to have no maps or adequate descriptions. There are some titles coming down from early days, and the plantations appear to be held by relatively few people. Many families profess to have holdings in the hills, but from these little revenue is derived, as land is rented but is managed directly by the owner. Inasmuch as squatter title is admitted under the law, any attempt of these supposed owners to take possession would be most difficult. It seems to be the practice for the peasant to settle wherever he finds land not in use. The settlement of this land question is one of the most fundamental prerequisites to any improvement of conditions in Haiti. Foreigners were forbidden to own real estate until the adoption of the last constitution in 1918.

Agriculture.—While there is a good deal of fishing along the coast, and a certain amount of cattle raising in the San Michel Valley and the upper Artibonite Valley and locally elsewhere, agriculture is for most Haitians not only the fundamental but also the sole means of gaining a livelihood. The fact that there are in the country no nurseries, no seed houses, no regular dealers in stock, indicates that conditions are very primitive. A prominent man told me one day if I had seen one of the many beautiful mountain places, I would have said, "No," and added that I wished he would take me to see some of the best farms. He replied, "There are none," and this answer was almost literally correct. There is no agricultural school save a rather pathetic beginning school in the capital. Outside of the larger sugar plantations, largely though not wholly under foreign control, there is no real agricultural development.

Of course, there are in fact well-located and prosperous farmers who are contrasted with others poorly located and shiftless, but their methods are about the same. A plow is rarely seen even in the plains and would be useless on most of the steep hillsides. The one universal tool of the Haitian peasant is the machete (almost identical with our corn knife). With this he clears ground, piling and burning the brush. Then with his machete he digs in the soil a little in just the place where he is to put his seed or plant. He cultivates with his machete by cutting the weeds or stirring the soil about the plants. Axes, hoes, etc., are known but seldom seen. The farmer saves his own seed or gets it from neighbors. Much time and energy are consumed in these processes. Arriving at Port au Prince early in February one finds the hillsides of the town almost deserted, few cabins being visible. By the middle of March the hills are dotted with dark spots, which are the cleared areas being prepared for the spring planting. Trees are rarely planted. There are not even banana plantations. All the natives do is to pick the berries from the wild plants descended from those brought in by the French after 1788. A competent observer said that in 1915 not over 1,000 acres in the entire country were well cultivated.

Marketing.—The roads of Haiti are lined with women and burros hauling produce to village or town. These women often walk from 15 to 25 miles ed if they sell 50 cents worth of provisions. Indeed, they might all their load should you meet them 10 miles out, for they would the joy of barter and chatter afforded in the town. All night long en route to arrive at daylight. Picturesque? Yes; but the waste of t in such a system is enormous. At the market they must pay a r the privilege of displaying their wares.

Industries.—The making of a few sweets, like the crude brown sugar adou, some candles of beeswax to be burned in church by the faith- ats of palm, or simple baskets, practically exhausts the list of home es.

In the towns the houses range from the crudest of hovels to fine residences, oftentimes with very attractive grounds. At Cape Haitien show the Spanish influence which is not seen in the south. In the cabins are of two types. The more common is a framework of oven with splints and plastered with mud, with a roof of palms. ntial structures are made of split palm boards. —The official religion of Haiti is the Christian (Roman Catholic) ate assumes the support of the church. There are fine cathedrals in Port au Prince and en and churches in all towns. There are a few Protestants on the ne being descended from a company of American negroes who m- re many years ago. A few missions are maintained by other groups. ut the highest circles the real religion of the people is of African th a veneer of Christianity. It is common to speak of all these tes under the name of "Voodoo," a term often overworked. The dif- es originally had different customs, but as no tribal distinctions have survived in Haiti the resultant is a blend. Based as African religions were, on fear, the propitiation of the deities was very important. With as every student knows, was a curious emphasis on sex. The voodoo of to-day, therefore, often degenerate into sexual orgies. Several attempts were made by the Haitian Government to suppress these voodoo dances, but the Government dared not be too stringent, and probably was not very elastic in the first place. They are now under the ban of the law, but still exist, though seldom seen by the whites. Some of the presidents have been voodoo priests. When President Simon left office a fetish of this sort was found in the palace and his successor, though personally not believing local beliefs, feared to offend, so sent for a voodoo priest (a Papa as he is called) to perform the requisite ceremonies. To an annual festival the name "barka" is given. On one occasion Simon tricked the Catholic bishop into performing the funeral services of such a "barka," a goat case. The deception was subsequently revealed and more stringent measures for the identification of corpses were adopted by the archbishop. Few Haitians, for political reasons, perhaps, deny the power of such barkas or fetiches.

In the country food is usually placed on the grave. I once witnessed a memorial service for a recently deceased child. The priest was busy with voodoo rites as we approached the cabin, but seeing us shifted to the opposite side of the room, where Christian emblems were displayed. Later he was scattered on the highway, and on inquiry he told us that he did not know the reason for this, but that it had long been a custom of his father. Even Christian celebrations like Easter have a strong African infusion. From Friday to Sunday the Lord is supposed to be dead and the devils then have their opportunity. To hinder them it is necessary to knock over the house. So all day long there comes rolling up the hills about Port au Prince at intervals the reverberations of the faithful.

As is natural in this stage of religious development superstition is prevalent. No native mother attends the funeral of a child, as this would cause another death in the family within a year. Should a funeral procession stop for any reason in front of a house holy water is secured at once and the house sprinkled. From such naivetes to belief in charms and witchcraft the simple mind runs the entire gamut.

Human sacrifice.—The idea of human sacrifice is as repugnant to the class Haitian as to the American. Many of the best Haitians do not believe that it ever occurs, and are sincere in their belief. Others have told me positively that it does. Such is the belief of some of the best informed residents, including many of the French priests, one of whom said he had put the number at one a year for the entire country. It takes a long time to overcome old customs. Such sacrifices are said to be of children only.

Cannibalism.—The eating of parts of human sacrifices is alleged to occur sometimes. There is some evidence that the eating of parts of brave enemies in food in the ordinary sense but in an effort to gain the qualities admired in the victim, may have occurred. The American marines in Haiti firmly believe this happened in at least one case, for a native confessed that he had taken therein. It is also believed by foreign residents to have happened in several instances. A magistrate told an American that he knew a man on trial in court of this offense in 1909. Only one Haitian admitted to me that he thought it possible, but I was present in a little interior village when a gendarme accused a woman of having eaten human flesh. This she denied with every indication of horror. If it ever happened, it is certainly extremely rare and is viewed by nearly all Haitians just as we view it.

Personal traits.—The first strong impression I got of the Haitian people was their manly, self-respecting bearing. There was no subservience in their attitude toward the whites. I do not mean that there was any indication of meanness or insolence. Speak to the market woman or the peasant on the road and you are sure of a "bon jour," often accompanied by a tipping of the hat. They seemed willing to do any favor. Everywhere they have borne the reputation of being very hospitable, without demand for money. If one spends the night in a country cabin, the best is offered and payment very often refused. They are sometimes likely to deceive you, for they are inclined to give you the best when they think you want. In general, however, they are honest when charmed by definite trusts. It has been necessary in days gone by to send large sums of money by messenger and in sailboats around the coast, and I am told that the money was always delivered. The life of the white man or woman has been secure, and the murder of a white has occurred only under great provocation.

mpression is that the people are willing to work, but their work re not ours.

I speak of schools. Here I want to mention the handicap the rry because of ignorance. ly.—The fashionable marriage is under the auspices of the church, the legal form. As a matter of fact, most marriages are what we on law," while in local dialect the girl is said to be "placed." Such are often followed later by formal ceremonies when the couple have l adequate funds. They are not always permanent, and there seems lerable freedom in forming and breaking them. One caco leader is e seven camps, with a wife in each. Stories are current of men with more wives and many score of children. Children are desired, and i spoiled as abused. A couple will sometimes sell a child for a dollar this involves an idea on their part that the child will be better off ter-situated family than at home. it is largely a question of the available supply. Formerly the omen coming to town are said to have worn blue costumes. Now, es are made of any material obtainable. The men are more or less r exposure of the body is no offense, and the wash women along the e often practically nude. This fact makes the complaint of one paper merican doctors made the Haitian women bare their arms to the hat they might vaccinate them seem a bit ludicrous. Shoes are seldom worn by the peasants, and the white man going about in the rainy season often like to have the feet of the peasant. The clothing of the peasant seems overly clean, and yet soap in the form of bars about an inch square 13 inches long is one of the articles most frequently imported. Bath is frequent, but whether in waste water or stream seems to make little difference. The wealthier classes draw their styles from Paris, and are so lacking in formality that at Government receptions the men must wear heavy dress suits.

The color line.—At first sight no color line seems to exist in Haiti, but observation reveals it. True, the blackest man may aspire to any position in the country, and, if he has enough force of character, may attain it. The country has boasted of the expulsion of the white man and the elimination of the white color from the flag. "Black man with money, mulatto; mulatto with money, white man; white man, always white man," runs the local saying. A color line can be found. The servant is usually darker than the master. Blacks can be found in the highest circles, but these circles are decidedly lighter in color than the lower. Low-grade foreign whites marry at times into the native circles. One native father was surprised when advised to find out anything about the American who would marry his daughter. The idea of mating the white man had not occurred to him. A citizen came to an American official asking the release of a prisoner. He admitted his friend's name and said, "Don't you know he is compelled to work under a black serpent?" "These girls are praying the Lord every night to send them light-colored children," said a French woman. Two Haitian girls educated in France were founded on return to Haiti to find themselves of mixed parentage. A French woman hearing that the Dominicans were of mixed descent plaintively said: "Then why do they hate us so?" The color line has found its way into politics, and there have been "black" parties opposed to "mulatto" groups. We do not know how much emphasis to give this factor. The Haitian writers who discuss it are not agreed. It may be in part a tacit acceptance of a widely held philosophy that the black is the inferior. I was told of one able man who could not marry into the lighter group and who therefore refused to marry. This indicates, in any case, a desire to be accepted on a basis of equality which at times is almost pathetic.

The upper class.—"What did you expect to find when you came to Haiti from Europe or Africa?" asked a charming gentleman one day. Yankee-like, I replied in return, "If I go out into the hills, what will I find?" His reply was a surprise. Go into any gathering of the upper class, shut your eyes and listen, and you will believe yourself in a cultured European gathering. In bearing and manner, in interest and appreciation of art, music, and literature, in ability to sing, play, dance, or discuss, the American finds that he has no advantage. Their feelings lie a bit nearer the surface than our, and voices break forth more readily in angry discussion or boisterous mirth more quickly, but they as quickly subside. Why should not these things be so? Many of these people who can afford to have been educated in Europe and go there whenever possible. Their traditions are European, not African. They know more of foreign languages than the corresponding groups of Americans and are more likely to talk in French to you than you are to talk in French to them. Like gentlemen, they react at once to courteous treatment, and like gentlemen they resent condescension or overbearing manners. Too often they have received the latter when they had a right to expect the former.

The two Haities.—Geography sometimes misleads us. There are two Haities, not one, though the geographical boundaries are the same. The first is of Africa, for there is little essential difference between rural Haiti and Africa. The second is of Europe. The first is illiterate, the second educated; the first is uncouth, the other polished; two languages, two religions. An African struggling to keep itself alive in this physical world; a small handful struggling to attain equality with the civilized world! Where can a more striking contrast be found?

The slave tradition.—Haiti is suffering from a survival of slavery traditions. The French masters directed; the slaves did the physical labor. When the French came the leaders, usually mulattoes (though the men of action, the military chiefs, have often been black) tried to carry on the old traditions. Educated Haiti does not like work nor has ever learned the dignity thereof. Day your Haitian gentleman will not carry packages from store to store. Your high-toned Haitian girl will hardly stoop to pick up a handkerchief dropped on street or in church, though she will call a servant to do this nk ideal, and whenever possible the lower classes follow the exam-ses and the classes.—Haiti won its freedom but in a very real sense sters, substituting mulatto for white. For 40 years or more, the tried various devices of compulsory labor to get the fields cultivated, tion decreased. They wrote growingly of agriculture, but the State done anything for agriculture save to establish a fête and to permit turist to pay most of the taxes. It puts no tax on the land, but it ivy tax on the chief export, coffee, which must be paid by the poor ho gathers it. It refuses to tax the manufacture of liquor but it export of cacao. The burden is all thrown on the poor man. The all this is that while there is patriotism in the sense of love of the upper classes there is none in the sense of sacrificing self for or is there any real appreciation of the basis of public welfare. The as been governed for the interest of the upper classes.

corality.—Haiti has not yet learned that a public office is a public trust.

 hat a corporation, nominally at least American, gave shares of stock ily of a high official even after the coming of the marines. An Amer-rator told me that officials suggested grafting schemes to him. So it it any wonder that many Haitians to-day sincerely believe that officials must in some way be making extra money out of their ong attitude.—There are some who will say that all these things are e of the capacity of the negro. Not so, for they have appeared everywhere on earth when similar theories of government have obtained. The mental reform needed in Haiti is a change in the attitude of the upper Government.

Government.—Barring the short periods when a couple of rulers style themselves emperors, Haiti has always been a republic. In reality, however, it has always been a military despotism, as the 39 military posts would indicate. It has had an ample supply of constitutions from 1805, 1806—when it was called a new and regenerative constitution was needed—through the years 1843, 1846, 1859, 1861, 1867, 1874, 1879, 1889, down to the last in 1915. "elections" had always been a farce in that they but "elected" the man who had seized the power in his hands as the "savior of his people." However soon as things were settled and the appointments to office made there were hungry and dissatisfied people on the outside of the administration that tented within, and the conspiracies started anew. As a rule they did not result in great loss of life or danger and loss to foreigners. One fact in Haitian history not yet adequately explained is why practically all of these revolutions occurred in the north. The later revolt against the Americans was in the same direction. It may be that distance from the capital has been the chief factor, as some have claimed, but others have tried to show that there are differences in the people in the degree of culture, etc. The first effort of the revolutionist was never to get control of the customhouses in order that money might be secured.

The existing organization of the Haitian Government is simple. The executive department consists of the President (elected for seven years by the National Assembly, and ineligible for reelection till one term expires) and a cabinet of five members appointed by the President, to wit: Secretaries of foreign relations and justice, interior, finance and commerce, public instruction and worship, public works and agriculture. The Republic has two legislative houses: a chamber of representatives, with 99 members elected by the people, and the Senate of 39 members elected by the representatives from lists furnished by the departments and the board of electors.

(The above paragraph describes the organization existing when the Americans entered Haiti, and which still exists, according to law. In the section on the civil side of the intervention it will be shown certain changes in actual administration have been made. The National Assembly was dismissed in 1917 and has not been reassembled nor have elections been held since. The administration is carried on by the President with an appointed body of ministers called a "council of state," and all new laws are the decrees of this council. I add this statement to avoid any misunderstanding or misconstruction of the above paragraph.)

The country is divided into five departments, in each of which is found a commissar directly appointed by the Government, and a man of great power who practically controls all appointments of local officials. Under the departments are the communes, 92 in number, each administered by a communal council whose head is called the communal magistrate. The smallest divisions are sections under a chief of section. The section and communal officials receive very small salaries from local funds arising from sale of market place licenses on business, etc. There is much complaint as to grafting here. Practically all local improvements are paid for by the national treasury.

In the judicial system we find at the bottom the justice of peace with a salary of from $16 to $20. The courts are the court of first instance, the court of appeals, and the court of cassation (the supreme court). The president of the court is paid $200 per month, his immediate assistant $175, and there are judges at $150 a month.

According to all accounts many of the lower judges are incompetent. A critic put it, perhaps 30 per cent of the judges know the law and 30 per cent can use it; the rest are worthless. The Haitians themselves have little confidence in the courts. One prominent lawyer said he could win any case for $1,000. He assumed, of course, that his opponent did not have $2,000 to pay. Some of the higher judges are able men. Haitian lawyers seem to prefer to settle cases out of court if possible.

Cases in court.—Little dependence is placed on the courts by foreigners. Let a few cases suffice:

A firm arranged with a local agent to purchase 10,000 pounds of tobacco of a certain quality. Being told that this purchase had been made, it investigated and found a very poor quality, which it refused to accept. Suit was brought and the court ordered payment for the entire amount, even though it was shown that the agent had only about half of the contracted amount in the warehouse.

a subject paid a garage man $53 for repairs on an automobile estimate at $10. Incidentally he found that garage man was using it without permission. Disgusted, the owner decided to sell the car. He sold it four days. Four months later the garage man demanded $25 as commission. When refused he used threats, then presented a bill of $40 for the car. When this, too, was refused, he brought suit. The owner was not in court; the case was to be heard. On the testimony of the garage man, without the owner, the court gave a verdict of $40 to the garage man plus $20 for moral damages.

Thefts occurring in a certain boarding house, a lieutenant of the police arrested all the servants who could have had access to room from which money had been taken. One servant practically confessed. Another brought suit for damages, claiming her reputation was injured. It happened that it would not lie, being brought against a foreign vice consul, but the case was fully expected to win. The only connection of the vice consul with the case was that he had lost the money and notified the police.

An American struck a native boy. Suit was brought. The American doctor to examine the boy and the doctor returned a bill of $500. The American accepted $100 in settlement. The American had two short suits with a lawyer, who returned a bill for $2,500, but accepted $650 in settlement.

The American did not dare let these bills go before a native court, for the lawyer had charged more than he was earning in two years.

A French merchant imported shirts of a peculiar pattern not elsewhere on sale. A man wearing such a shirt entered the store. Examination at the rear of the rehouse, where the shipment had been left, revealed the fact that the shirt had been stolen. The man could not tell a straight story as to how it had come into his possession. Yet, as there was no direct evidence, he was charged and started a counter suit for moral damages, which had cost him 1,500 gourdes up to the time I left.

A French firm bought a quantity of coffee, but examination showed that the bags contained stones only. Yet the court ordered payment in full.

toward property.—In Africa, it is stated, food is tribal and not property. That is the opinion of the Haitian. The universal story of the world and foreigners alike is that foodstuffs (and practically anything else) is tribal property. If you see yellow oranges on a tree in Haiti, you may know they are bitter. No sweet orange ever gets that color on the tree. Garbages are constantly watched. A Belgian told me that on a banana plantation compatriots they got no bananas until several natives opportunely came along, a peasant leaving his cabin unguarded must bury or carry with him his sessions, and even then he fears to find the doors stolen on his return. Everything must be taken off the porch at night and locked up if it is to be kept.

It is not mean to imply that all Haitians are thieves but enough are to make the country somewhat of a nuisance. There is no danger of your automobile being stolen for it can not be hidden, but it may be used without your knowledge. A friend of mine was ordered to pay $1,000 for an injury done to a car by his chauffeur, when at the time he had supposed the car was standing in front of his place of business. Such an attitude toward property is a hindrance to development.

Education.—The common statement in Haiti is that from 95 to 97 per cent of the population can neither read nor write. A prominent European resident Prince, told me that one day he stopped on the street and pretended not to be able to see the hands on the large clock above. He asked passers by until he had reached the seventeenth, a boy of 10, did he find anyone who could tell him the correct time. The Americans have found teachers who can sign their names or add sums of money up to 30 gourdes; music teachers who knew no music and could play no instrument. Here, too, was not paid for school buildings burned years before; salary to a teacher who admitted not having entered the building in years. Although there is a complete system of schools in the country, with attendance and tuition free, there are no publicly owned buildings. The schools are usually closed to open in October and close in July. On paper there are some 40,000 pupils, but the enrollment is admittedly only about 40,000; and an investigator who studied them carefully, stated that in 1920 the actual attendance was not more than 30 per cent of this number, say, 14,000, with as many pupils in the schools under the charge of the French fathers and This same investigator reported some 1,300 teachers on the list. The salary paid primary teachers being about $7 a month; the actual payments ranging from $4 to $15. Some of the town schools are pretty good, although there is a feeling that they have suffered in recent years. It is admitted that the church schools are by all means the best. The average attendance in the public schools seems to be about 10 pupils to each teacher. At Port au Prince, with a population of 100,000, there are not more than 7,000 pupils.

The condition is deplorable and the worst aspect of it to me is not the lack of teaching material or the inability with present income to pay living wages or extend the system. But I could find few indications of a genuine and widespread belief in public education. There are highly trained and able men who have come up from the public schools, yet those in power are only too ready to tell the people that they will do their thinking for them—an attitude unknown even in America. What I mean is that not until the dominant class see that they and their country are held back by the ignorance of the masses there is not likely to be a great movement in favor of public education. Some outside stimulus is supplied. Many people now favor the extension of education who do not see any way to get it. So much for the Haitians; they are. Let us now consider the use made of the country, and its possibilities.

Ports.—There are 12 ports open for foreign commerce. Of these only Port au Prince is equipped with a wharf. At the rest lighters are necessary. Most of the ports are practically open roadsteads, dangerous at times. There are two lighthouses, one at Mole St. Nicholas, the other at Port au Prince. At Port au Prince are forbidden to enter or leave before sunrise or after sunset without special permission, this second light has little utility.

Railroads.—There exist several stretches of what will be a through line from Cape Haitien to Port au Prince, which, when completed, will be a part of the interior. At present the road borders the ocean most of its length and was constructed primarily for military purposes. The line from Cape Haitien runs south some 24 miles to Bahon, and handles some local business. The second line, in the vicinity of Port au Prince, handles a certain amount of passenger traffic to Leogane, but is primarily a cane-carrying road. The future of railroads in such a rough country is very problematical. A branch serves as a street-car line in the capital.

Roads and other communications.—Much headway has been made in recent years, but there is great need of roads into the interior, as for instance, the upper Artibonite Valley. Some systems of trails in the hills, models of which, on that in the Philippines, would be of great value for the bulk of the produce is carried on animals. There are thousands of trails now, but they are usually in bad condition.

The larger towns have telephone systems and the country is fairly well provided with telegraph and postal service. There is cable connection with the United States and America and inadequate wireless service. Information spreads from mouth to mouth. Military men tell me that they never make a journey without finding themselves expected at the destination.

Steamer service.—Regular passenger service from most of the ports comes from New York is maintained by the Panama line, while the French line runs a direct steamer to Europe about once a month. A Dutch line has several cargo boats for Europe. There are many sailing boats about the coast, more or less regular connections to Santiago, Cuba.

Commerce.—The chief exports of Haiti are coffee, cotton, cocoa, sugar, and dye woods. The chief imports are foodstuffs, cloth, iron and steel, etc. The figures on main articles for the year ending September 30, 1919 are as follows:

Imports:
Wheat flour	$2,500,000
Rice	1,000,000
Meat	1,000,000
Other foods	1,000,000

Chief ports for imports are Port au Prince ($9,597,499), Cape Haitien ($1,469,278), or $13,318,687 of the total; for exports, Port au Prince ($7,450,599), Jacmel ($3,256,580), and Cape Haitien ($2,933,689). Over 90 per cent of the imports were from the United States, while of the exports 52 per cent went to the United States and 48 per cent to France. To this is an indication of war-time conditions, for Haiti has previously traded with France, but in part it is an index of a growing dependence on the United States.

—There are thousands of little booths along the roadsides and in the towns, and there are many tailors and shoe-making business is largely in the hands of foreigners. At an early date the French seem to have been dominant; in later years, prior to the war, the control had passed to the Germans. Germans had built the Port au Prince and one of the railroads. These have passed into American hands, nominally at least. American concessionaires had built the roads. There were no other American enterprises in the country of any importance. In recent years a plantation company has invested about $1,250,000 in the St. Michel Valley. There is a small factory for the extraction of rubber at Cape Haitien, and in 1921 a company was formed to grow and can rubber at Cape Haitien. Several Americans have entered business in the country. There is a cigarette factory at Port au Prince. The City of Port au Prince has purchased the Banque Nationale and become the strongest financial institution in the country. The American Foreign Banking Corporation has a foothold, but found business unprofitable and withdrew in 1921. The Royal Bank of Canada, a strong institution, has several branches in the country.

From what has been said it must be evident that the Haitians are perhaps the first strong impression the visitor gets. Only a poor wage for 20 cents a day, the prevailing wage to-day. Only hungry peasants will deliver coffee for 3 cents a pound, which is all the peasants get.

One can even understand the reply of the President in days of complaint was made to him that the Haitian coffee brought a low price in Europe because it was so dirty and full of stones: "But we get 3 cents a pound for export duty, stones and all, do we not, even though you say that the coffee is full of stones?" "Yes." "Then let the old law stand." Need Haiti be al possibilities.—In spite of the dense population of Haiti, which tends to overflow into the Dominican Republic, the soil can be made much more than it does to-day. The hillsides where the rainfall is high are covered with valuable woods and with fruit trees yielding returns to the cultivator than do the few vegetables he grows. The wonderful mountain scenery, only a few days from New York, is very attractive to those seeking to escape our cold winters. The great possibilities which are unrealized to-day, for their soil is not adapted to the production of sugar, cacao, etc., is only a small fraction of what it is capable of. Let us examine them a bit.

It extends out to Cape Haitien over the plain of the north which stretches back to the hills, on one of the highest of which are perched the famous "Citadel." will find some 70,000 acres of level land. The soil is a mixture of red and black clay to a depth of 12 to 14 inches, with subsoil of sand and to the water table at 10 feet. There are no stony outcrops. The soil is suitable for cane, pineapples, etc. Yet to-day it is overgrown with woods. Agriculture is possible without irrigation, but there are three small streams flowing through the plain. Everywhere the towns are ruins of old gateways and stone walls encircling acres of land. He goes down a muddy path in the center of what was once a wide avenue. He crosses brick culverts built perhaps 150 years ago. Before long he realizes that he must at one time have been a garden spot, and such it was, for here was the center of the old French culture and from here went enormous quantities of sugar, 24,000 tons in 1793. Probably there are not more than 500 acres of cane here now and practically none has been grown for a century.

The second plain is on the west coast, the Artibonite, between Gonaïves and St. Marc, with some 20,000 acres of level land. Here the country looks like Arizona. The Artibonite 25 miles from the mouth is running about 1,000 gallons of water every 24 hours, entirely unused. Here the problem is to dam it, for the Artibonite will be hard to dam. It is here the French once stalled what appear to have been the first steam pumps in the New World. I am told their remains are still to be found.

About 17 miles north of Port au Prince, the plain of Arcadère covers some 20 miles along the coast with a width of from 2 to 5 miles, some 10,000 acres. This has been under cultivation for a century. There are now 5,000 acres of cane, 8,000 of plantains, and 3,000 of minor fruits. The soil is easily worked but is depleted. There are five small streams, four of which were used by the French for irrigation. The works have not been kept up.

Just between Port au Prince and Lake Saumatre lies the plain known as the Cul de Sac, containing some 98,000 acres, of which 70,000 are adapted for cane, the balance being mostly low marshes, of which 10,000 acres are used for pasture in dry seasons. This was entirely cultivated by the French. To-day 30,000 acres are wooded. By the proper development of irrigation projects, for the rainfall is inadequate here, it is believed that 1,200,000 tons of cane could be grown on this plain. Just west of Port au Prince is the plain of Carrefour of 1,700 acres, 1,200 suitable for cane. Three thousand tons of cane is the estimate of possible production.

A little further west is the plain of Leogane with dark rich soil which reminds one of the Mississippi Valley. It contains some 20,000 acres of cane ground, with an estimated possibility of 350,000 tons. There is a great deal of cane here but it does not seem to be well cared for, the production seeming to average about 10 tons an acre.

On the south shore is the plain of Cayes, rich soil of some 150,000 acres of which perhaps 10,000 are now in cane. Here the rainfall is some 75 inches and irrigation is unnecessary. Within sight of the town of Cayes is the island, Ile de Vache, with a central plain of some 8,000 acres, on part of which cane might be grown, though it is used for grazing land to-day.

The French in 1791 with 792 mills produced 163,500,000 pounds of cane. From the revolution down to 1919 no sugar was exported. In the year 1919, 8,798,877 pounds were exported, the product of one American-owned mill.

Haiti's need.—This summary indicates that there are great opportunities for Haiti, if. Now what is this "if"? Primarily, stable government. That, of course, not the sole factor, but it is one great fundamental which Haiti lacks. So far as I can learn, it has never been the practice for either Haitians or foreigners to invest their capital in Haiti in any enterprise not under immediate control. In large measure this has been due to the many uncertainties surrounding property. If there is to be a solid and substantial development in Haiti, some way must be found to induce the residents to make investments at home and thus to gain a personal interest in the use of the land, the organization of the markets, and all the other essentials of community welfare.

CHAPTER II.

THE MILITARY INTERVENTION.

Although the United States had always respected and upheld the independence of Haiti, it became increasingly worried over the situation after 1900. Sami, Alexis, and Simon were overthrown and exiled; Leconte was driven up with the palace; Auguste was poisoned; Orreste and Zamor were killed, and the latter killed on his return—all between 1900 and 1915, when General Gauthier was killed. Haiti was heavily indebted to French and German banks, and, to a lesser extent, to England. These countries were beginning to es with reference to collection, and once or twice money had been force. Moreover, after 1912 there came to the State Department t Germany was talking to Haiti about a loan of $2,000,000, to be certain port rights, control of customs, and rights in a coaling ole St. Nicholas. All of this seems to have happened without the e the American minister to Haiti, a man who had had no previous xperience. Germany denied the charge, but added to her denial f the statement: "The German Government has joined with other overnments in representing to Washington that the interests of untries in Haiti are so large that no scheme of reorganization or be regarded as acceptable unless it is undertaken under interna-es." This challenge to the Monroe doctrine could not be ignored. e incessant revolutions in Haiti were producing a state of anarchy. a six months' rule of Zamor in 1914 it was rumored in Haiti that was negotiating with him and the report was used against him. 1914, the Haitian Senate passed the following resolution: "The hearing the denial of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, nce of negotiations between the national administration and the of the United States, declares its satisfaction with his explana-ndemns any kind of treaty." On November 7, 1914, Theodore nor as President, and early in December the American minister ailly-Blanchard, who for a generation had been secretary of our Paris and knew French perfectly) made certain proposals with the control of the customhouses, and on December 10, 1914, sub-ject for a convention. On December 15 this was peremptorily the matter was dropped, with the statement that the United States ed entirely by a disinterested desire to give assistance."

. 1915, Vilbrun Guillaume Sam was President of Haiti, and a of two men from Washington arrived, claiming to be agents of ilson. Their powers were challenged and they soon left. In May iller, jr., was sent to Haiti with the title of envoy extraordinary. he submitted a proposal covering the following points:
United States will protect Haiti against all foreign attack.
United States will assist Haiti to suppress insurrection by the rces needed.

This action forced the hands of the United h seems to have had no thought, let alone plan, of active interven-ly American marines landed in Cape Haitien from U. S. S. Wash- J. S. S. Eagle. The latter was left at the Cape and on July 26, 1915, ton sailed for Port au Prince. The next day 160 or more political ncluding members of many prominent families, were murdered by a President, who took refuge in the French legation. The official responsible for the massacre was taken from the Dominican legat-elled. The English and French representatives cabled for warships. the President was dragged from the French legation and cut to ur Admiral Caperton at once landed marines from the Washington l. Jason was ordered to bring all available men from Guantanamo.*

Possession of the city was taken with little opposition. On July 30 the French cruiser Descartes arrived and landed a legation guard. On August 12 Dartiguenave was elected President. On August 16, at the request of the War Department, Admiral Caperton was ordered to take charge of the customs and to use the receipts for organizing a constabulary, for public works, the aid of discharged soldiers, and relief of the starving populace, and for support of the Dartiguenave government. This was done against the wishes of the Haitian Government.

A large part of the people were well pleased with the advent of the Americans, but many politicians who saw their plans checkmated were, and continued to be antagonistic. Bands of "cacos," the local term for revolutionary bandits, which also included all sorts of lawless and criminal persons, roamed the hills and offered opposition to the Americans wherever possible. It should not be forgotten that these men lived by theft and robbery, and were doing no work, and that the poor peasants of the hills have suffered throughout loss of stock and crops. In some sections practically all the domestic animals were killed or stolen. The suppression of these bandits was a long process and the last of the bands was not broken up till the summer of 1900. These troubles have all been in the north central and eastern sections of the country; the whole southwestern peninsula has quiet almost from the first.

In attempting to judge of what has been accomplished certain facts must be kept in mind. Here is a country where a small number of intelligent, energetic and sometimes unscrupulous men control a great mass of ignorant peasants. It is a country where the tradition of having overthrown the flower of the French army still survives and where orators still boast of their ability to overcome any invader, a land where the simple peasants still believe that they can be rendered immune from bullets by charms. The cacoe leader is carried a book of charms with him and yet evidently was a bit skeptical when urged, only a couple of days before his death, to surrender, he did not dare to for his followers would kill him if he admitted his ability to win out. Given the conditions of the country which make life easy and difficult, it is clear that the suppression of opposition is difficult. So the Haitian Presidents have always found.

The fact is, then, that a large percentage of leading Haitians were thoroughly despondent over the situation and were ready to welcome any force that would give them peace and order. They fully expected that the Americans would take complete control and work order out of chaos. In fact they expected the impossible. When, for reasons we shall consider elsewhere, a new day did not come promptly and in all its glory, they lost faith both in the ability and the sincerity of the Americans. There were plenty of persons shrewd enough to capitalize this natural reaction to their own advantage, to foment an antagonism which is by no means as great as it appears. It is now return to the main course of events as they affect the military forces.

The corvée system.—Within a year from the arrival of the Americans the country was quiet save for sporadic outbreaks of cacos, and the year 1900 was relatively uneventful. In the effort to suppress these bandits one of the greatest difficulties was presented by the lack of roads. General Butler revived a law, dating from 1865, requiring citizens to work on local roads, and thus initiated the corvée system. The execution of this law and the supervision of the road work was turned over to the gendarmerie. From American residents of Haiti have told me that they advised against this system but were met with the answer that it was a military necessity. At first there was little opposition. The communities were glad to have roads and repaired. Soon, however, discontent arose. Instead of working near their homes men were being taken, sometimes driven manacled under charge of the gendarmes, several days' journey on foot from their homes. It is alleged that in some places no shelters were provided. The Americans made provisions for food, but later it was discovered that the natives in charge did not give the men, or did not turn over more than a small part of the money allotted for food. In practice, too, the local head, known as the "chef de section," was never called on for men sent whom he pleased, even destroying the cards showing that given individuals had done their share. He thus favored his friends and punished his enemies. Some individuals worked two or three months instead of the two weeks theoretically required. Many, naturally enough, fled to the hills.

In other cases the mistaken zeal of Americans fomented opposition. An American tells me that one day he was riding with a major and a lieutenant criticized the lieutenant because the men were not working on the latter replied that it was the planting season, and that he and his men two weeks on their promise to return at the end of that road work. The major objected, saying that he would be held to insist that the men be called out at once. The lieutenant took his promise and so was transferred and replaced. This was the trouble in that neighborhood.

men were tactfully handled and fairly treated, different results. Captain B——, who had charge of the section between St. Iboro Mountain, not only finished it but, when ordered to go on action, carried some 800 men as volunteers with him. He managed to each gang of 30 men had a cook. A regular diet, with meat once provided, and the men were paid 2 gourdes (40 cents) a week. — lived with the men and was the only white man with them. With as 8,000 men working under him. The men worked about 10 work stopping at noon on Saturdays. In the south, near Cayes, he so managed that local merchants contributed considerable money, the stop order was issued there was a petition that the work be continued where there seems to have been some graft by gendarmes and local let men off on payment of bribes.

the system itself, then, but the way it was handled that seems to be fault. As one priest put it, the worst feature was that it gave the bold leader the chance to tell the natives that the whites were trying to enslave them, and that it made the men afraid to come to the towns and be seized. So great was the outcry that it was stopped on October 1918. At this time there were no marines in the interior and the commander either permitted or ordered the corvée continued in the Hinche district. The facts were discovered by chance, the corvée stopped. The martial of the commander advised, but in some way he seems to have been. I was told by — that in his presence General — called a murderer and a liar and unfit to be in the service but added that for one of the Marine Corps he would have him transferred. When it was then that the corvée had been ordered stopped, the antagonism against the system is easily understood. Well-informed men have told me that it has been an easy matter to have got all the men needed for a small force and that the total cost to the United States would have been vastly more if of the suppression of the rebellion which was occasioned, though caused, by the system. In my opinion this was the greatest mistake of the Marine Corps in Haïti. It should be added that the law itself is repealed and that American officers since have been able to get things done on local roads by appealing to local pride and self-interest.

January 1, 1919, there was a great increase in cacao activity which contributed to the establishment of garrisons of marine in the interior, the constant presence of the country and many armed encounters with considerable loss of life. It opened, of course, that the men fomenting this activity, and to some extent it, supplying arms and ammunition at times, etc., were safe in Port-au-Prince and the Cape. The number of marines in the country increased from about 1,000 to over 2,000 and has since been kept at that figure. After the foolish and futile attack on Port-au-Prince early in 1920 the leaders seem to have expected a mass uprising of the people, but the warfare decreased and it became a problem of protecting isolated posts against the attack of cacos for, I repeat, the chief sufferers have been the peasants. Patrols are now maintained largely to give confidence to the people, for the bandits are gone. So quiet and law-abiding are the people that they do not hesitate to go anywhere in Haïti at any time and unarmed. It is then, that at the present time there is no military problem what-so-ever in Haïti, but there is and will continue to be a police problem. It should be noted, however, that only the presence of the marines makes possible the peace in office of the President and the peaceful functioning of the government. In this connection, let me add that the bills for the Marine Corps are paid by the citizens of the United States, not, as many Haitians think, by some American writers have been intimidated by the Haitian Govern-

Note.—One of the first efforts of the Marine Corps was to establish a force of Haitians, officered at first by Americans, with the plan of replacing these by competent Haitians. On July 1, 1921, there were 100 men officered by 16 Haitians and 122 Americans. Four of the Haitians were first lieutenants and it was expected that three others would be advanced to that rank. Privates in the gendarmerie are paid $10 per month, corporals, $15; sergeants, $20; first sergeants, $25; all in addition to 15 cents a day allowed for rations and lodging. The total cost to the country per man upwards of $1,000,000. The Americans are drawn almost exclusively from the Marine Corps. To secure good men and hold them it is provided that in addition to their pay from the United States, the Haitian Government shall pay sums which run from $250 per month for colonels, $150 for captains, to $50 for second lieutenants. The United States Congress passed a special act to induce the men to accept this service. An officer providing his own car, as now is allowed 30 gallons of gas a month and may bring his car in duty free has to pay this duty if he sells the car outside of service ranks. As a man occupies one rank higher in the gendarmerie than he holds in the Marine Corps. This force is scattered in all the communities and rural districts of the country. It is uniformed, the suits being made in the prisons, and is the police force of the nation, replacing the old army, which was disbanded at the time of the occupation. It gives great promise of future usefulness.

The Haitians complain that the pay given them is so small that the grade of men will not enlist and that many cacos and other unfit men are enrolled; also that many incompetent Americans have been appointed. There is a measure of truth in the claims. Yet the pay is not small judged by Haitian resources and compares favorably with that available elsewhere. Many mistakes in appointments have been made, but there is a steady weeding out of the unfit. Promotions of Haitians have been slower than many of the American organizers had expected, but, on the other hand, it has been hard to get Haitians whose standards approached those expected by the Americans. It will take a long time to dislodge the belief that office is to be made a source of personal revenue and it is difficult to prevent abuse of power. Some of the marines advanced from the ranks to become lieutenants in the gendarmerie lacked the necessary tact and executive capacity and some of the commission men lacked the proper personality. Again, some curious errors have been made in Washington. I recall that one captain in the gendarmerie with a splendid service record in the Marine Corps, who had been a splendid success in receiving high praise from his commanding officers, was reduced to the rank of private, practically driven out of service by the "plucking board" at Washington. A lieutenant under him, who chanced to have been sent to France while the captain was kept in Haiti, was given a permanent berth.

On the whole, my impressions of the Americans are very favorable. While there are a few sinecures for the men in a couple of large towns, the average officer in little rural communities, living in what we would call a shack, isolated from all white society and deprived of all opportunities for amusement, deserves great credit for his work. Such men are often petty kings, and it is to be expected that they fail at times. The evident esteem paid most of them by the natives and the answer one gets if he suggests replacing them by native officers is sufficient reply to the criticisms. It will be a long time before they can be replaced to advantage. At first the gendarmerie had various duties, but now it is almost wholly limited to police work. The danger that I see is that it may be thought of as a military force, whereas it should be a civil force comparable to the mounted police of Pennsylvania and under civil control.

Prisons.—Great complaint has been made of the prisons which are under the control of the gendarmerie. I visited most of them and found them to be the cleanest buildings on the island. As buildings they are not very satisfactory, but no just complaint can be made as to the way they are kept. A reliable witness I saw says that they are vastly better now than in the past. Formerly, though the Government was supposed to allow 10 cents a day for food, little of the money ever reached the prisoners, who depended on their families or on alms for practically all they had. The prisons are said to have been extremely filthy as well. The total prison population averages about 3,000 a day. In May, 1921, there were 4,179 inmates. During the year 1920 there were 30,398 prisoners and 1,497 deaths. During the first six months of 1921 there were 9,842 prisoners admitted and 229 deaths. I examined the prison population and found an average of from 40 to 50 deaths a month. During the summers of 1919 and 1920 the deaths rose to about 60 a month. The chief causes of death were tuberculosis, prison edema (probably beriberi), pneumonia, and smallpox. The epidemic of edema had given the officials much concern. Though the diet was known to be adequate it was modified. Officials hoped the problem was solved. When one sees the conditions ival he does not wonder at a high death rate. I am fairly familiar with prison problems and have no criticism to offer of the way in which they are conducted. The inmates are better cared for than are the free Haitian peasants.

10.—Beginning September 3, 1915, martial law was proclaimed in Haiti and was gradually extended to cover the country. Provost courts were established and the press prohibited from criticizing the Haitian government or the occupation. It was the intention of the occupation to interfere as far as possible with local institutions, but it felt it could not trust the Haitian courts. As a matter of fact the provost courts seem to have awakened no criticism, though there is some criticism that their sentences were too severe. The occupation issued an order that no rum was to be sold to marines. This order was frequently disobeyed. In November, 1919, some marines arrested a boy to the store of one Mangones to buy rum for them. Mangones was arrested and was sentenced to six months imprisonment at hard labor. He did not know for whom it was intended, and is said to have been released through the intervention of the French consul. On September 19, 1920, the provost courts were ordered to sit "only for trial of cases beyond doubt inimical to the United States or a violation of the laws of Haiti." That there was some reason for the earlier doubt was shown in the case of 1921, when a native court freed a customs collector at Ouanaminette who had stolen some $5,000.

11.—Of the press.—In preoccupation days no paper dared criticize the government unless it could get ample protection, and editors were often arrested and papers seized. The establishment of a censorship, therefore, had little effect on their activities, but it gave a chance for an argument that was made to Americans at home. The star case was the arrest and imprisonment of Henri Chauvet, the editor of Le Nouvelliste, the most prominent newspaper in the country, for publishing on November 22, 1918, an announcement pending recall of the financial adviser, Mr. Ruan. This case drew attention to the attention of the State Department, which upheld the court. The result was that the guess was true.

12.—It is that M. Chauvet was punished because he violated an explicit order of the occupation and in such case we can hardly criticize the court, or opinion as to the scope of the original order. Later on the press was removed and in 1921 there began a great campaign of abuse against everything American and of the Dartiguenave Government. I never have been tolerated by any previous Haitian régime. The occupation became much alarmed for his own safety. It was useless to take him out of the courts. The best people and some of the editors did not believe they were forced to keep silent or go along lest they be condemned as enemies of the leading officials wrote:

"I readily understand the position I have taken when you are made the majority of the judges being opposed to the existing state of affairs. Government can not, until the magistracy has been reformed, obtain the collaboration necessary to a good administration of justice. In the face of contradiction they will always condemn when a case is before them. I believe that those are the occasions in which they can hurt the government or the occupation. In the same spirit, they, on the contrary, acquit thieves and robbers under the pretext that the prison régime is too severe and out of control of the gendarmerie, meaning in reality under the control of the occupation."

13.—On August 8, 1921, the following order was issued:

"The freedom of the press and of speech are practically unrestricted, except for speeches that are of an incendiary nature or reflect adversely upon the occupying forces in Haiti, or tend to stir up an agitation against the United States who are aiding and supporting the constitutional government of Haiti. Articles or speeches attacking the President of Haiti or the Haitian government are prohibited and offenders against this order will be brought to a military tribunal."

14.—When the commanding officer was thanked by the Haitian President, he was immediately tested by one of the papers which published an article containing words replaced by blanks. The editor was arrested and his paper was forced to convince the court that only the Lord Himself could know what was represented. The court thought otherwise and a small penalty was imposed as a warning.

Public works.—Another source of irritation in connection with the occupation was the taking over by the military officials of most of the public buildings which remained in their hands practically till the end of 1917. Even civilian Americans had been appointed in accordance with the contract, but there was seemingly great unwillingness to turn over the control. It is difficult for the civilian to get at the exact situation which led to some of these transfers or to pass judgment upon their wisdom. Beyond doubt they caused considerable irritation. For instance, the control of the ice plant at Port-au-Prince, a German-owned enterprise, was taken over, and as there was a shortage of ice during the war all the ice for a time was taken for the hospitals and for the occupation. Thus officers' families were supplied, while American civilians as well as Haitians went without.

It was the occupation as well which forced Haiti to take action against Germany and to sequester German property. That there was some reason for this action is clear when we remember that the Germans had large commercial business interests of the country. The point I wish to make is that the action would probably not have been taken by the Haitians, into whose private families many of the Germans had married.

The Marine Corps.—A word is needed as to the personnel of the Marine Corps. The old standards of the corps were high, both as regards military and moral officers. At first the Haitian clubs were opened to the officers, who attended balls and parties, danced with the girls, and to all appearances enjoyed themselves. When the families, prohibited at first, began to arrive, not only an American social group grew up, centering in the American Club, but a social cleavage was created because of the color prejudice. It was soon confessed that not all of the Americans treated the natives with due respect and this attitude was resented, naturally enough. Moreover, it was difficult for the Haitians to see Americans who had never had a servant at home go on airs, raising the price of house rents by bidding for desirable houses in automobiles on which they paid no duty and burning gas, which they buy at a little over 20 cents a gallon, while the civilian, native or foreign, was paying from 70 to 80. Unfortunately drunkenness was not unknown even among the part of high officials and their wives, while local standards were shown by the sight of women in automobiles smoking in public. Although such things were infrequent, every incident was told and retold and helped to create a suspicion that little help could be expected.

While I saw no American official in the Cercle Bellevue in Port-au-Prince, Cape Haitien the earlier relations existed in large measure. During the war, with the necessity of sending men to France, many privates were made available, particularly in the gendarmerie. This caused much complaint, whatever merits thereof. With the close of the war there came the enlistment of a large number of young boys of decidedly inferior type to the older men. Both officers and older men commented on this and criticized the Washington Government for sending such material to Haiti. This group is being weeded out and the arrivals are of better stamp. It gives me pleasure to add that, with a few exceptions, I was very much pleased with the men I met, both old and enlisted men.

To complete the picture I should add a word as to the location of the marines. Headquarters are at Port-au-Prince, and here is stationed the largest body of men. There is a training camp at Mirabelais, 32 miles to the northeast, a camp at Las Cahobas, 17 miles to the east, 20 miles north of Port-au-Prince, a company at Thomme. Further north companies are found at Hinche, Maissade, while the headquarters of the north are at Cape Haitien. In all, about 10,000 men are in the occupation. The average Haitian sees few marines save those with the gendarmerie.

Atrocities.—It has been necessary to give this outline of the history and policies of the Marine Corps before considering charges of cruelty against the marines. There is no charge that any policy of deliberate cruelty has been adopted. All complaints are against individuals. Rumor is common, but evidence is rare. The cases fall into several more or less clearly distinct groups.

1. Drunkenness and accompanying disorders.—Relatively common. The commanding officer told me that 90 per cent of his troubles with the natives were due to alcohol. Such disturbances have seldom been the cause of mortalities, but have led to fights. In some cases natives unwilling to furnish labor have been threatened by marines with guns. One such case came under my personal observation. In this, as in most others where facts became known, the guilty party was summarily and severely punished.

assaults.—Such have been perpetrated just as they were in France as well as by Germans. I chanced to be present when the first case of rape of a young girl of 10 or 11 was presented. In this man was proven guilty, later admitted guilt and pleaded insanity; he was sentenced to 51 years imprisonment on the combined counts. Severe measures have always been meted out to such offenders.

degree methods to secure evidence.—Admitted. The third degree is unknown either in Europe or America. To a considerable extent it is justified as justifiable under field conditions. That it can be abused and has been is evident, but it can not be judged by parlor standards. It is to find one American civilian taken on a patrol in Haiti becoming enraged at the obvious lies of a woman that he urged the officer in charge to take severe measures and then came home to write up the incident as an example of the cruelty of the marines, forgetting to tell his own part in the affair. Where life is involved human passions run high.

ate striking, shooting, etc., of escaping prisoners and others. Such cases have occurred in some cases. Let a couple of illustrations suffice. A white man riding one day with Captain — saw him spur his horse over women on way to market, knocking them down and scattering over the road. Then he rode off laughing. It is not surprising to find one of the six or seven officers generally accused of being guilty of such attacks. An American told me that an officer out after cacos met a certain place, two of whom were in his, my informant's employ. He saw them where the cacos were; through fear or ignorance they fled. The officer then shot them all and on his return reported that he had killed by 150 cacos and had killed 5 of them. My informant may be sincere in his belief.

must admit that such things have happened. That is the belief of the armed men I have met both in and out of the service, Haitians, and Europeans. As a matter of fact, much as we may regret it, every man knows that they are to be expected. The real question is whether they were abnormally common and whether, when proved guilty, they were punished. Prominent Haitians, French priests, and other persons have told me that these acts of cruelty were extremely rare and that such offenses would have occurred by Haitians on Haitians had there been no intervention. I fear that the emphasis laid on cruelty is because of the sympathy that may have in the United States rather than because of sympathy for the Haitians.

As to the second point, I think the officials did not let the Haitians know which men were punished for offenses. The Haitians got the impression that the guilty men were shielded. This I do not believe, though it is possible that some cases were not investigated with sufficient care. I regret that the thorough inquiry was not made in connection with the few officers whom the natives themselves are to blame for some of the criticism heaped upon them. A certain type of man likes to brag of his exploits and of his wickedness. There has been a lot of this kind of thing where the basis of fact was small. Certain investigators have been deceived in similar fashion. The native men seem to have tried to capitalize their alleged repentance. In the country I tried to observe the attitude of the natives toward the marines. Nowhere did I detect signs of fear or of desire for revenge. On the contrary, there was a feeling of respect, often of friendliness. As a whole I feel that the men in the Marine Corps deserve our respect. I am ready to believe that they change their character when away from the influence of the native people of different color. I am not trying to dodge responsibility, but to keep a balance in my verdict. We did much for Haiti in France but absolutely nothing for those in Haiti. The fact is that there have been many more acts of kindness than of cruelty. The good things have been advertised to the world. Day after day I have talked with officers and men, bending all their energies toward helping the Haitians. I have seen them going out of their way to call on and bring presents to men who were isolated in their communities. The opposition to the marines is not blind and disinterested. The thief and grafter do not like interference. That behind all surface explanations lies the resentment against the marines, the symbol of an outside force preserving order, the reflection of the inability to control self, which hurts the Haitian's self-esteem. Here is the situation.

CHAPTER III.

THE CIVIL SIDE OF THE INTERVENTION.

Immediately after the election of President Dartiguenave, on August 12 steps were taken to secure a convention, which was signed in Haiti September 16, ratified by the Chamber of Deputies October 6, and by the Senate November 11, 1915. Owing to delay in Washington, the exchange of ratifications did not take place till May 3, 1916. In the interim practical control of Haiti, of government funds, and of municipal administration was in the hands of the occupation. Since that time the functions of the military have been reduced; now it does little more than "sit on the lid" and preserve order.

The convention established a financial protectorate over Haiti; it introduced a financial adviser of rather unique powers, inasmuch as the Haitian Government agreed to put his suggestions into effect, and yet left the question to whom he was immediately responsible, and under what conditions he was to be removed, vague, to say the least.

This treaty met with much opposition in Haiti, but attracted no attention in the United States. Its intention is evident from its text, and was well understood both by Haitians and Americans. The Haitians were so discontent over their situation and the future seemed so dark that they were willing to accept the help and protection of the United States, the sincerity of whose intentions they did not question, on any terms demanded. Naturally they wanted as little interference with the local government as possible. It is possible that they thought that later they might evade some of the provisions made.

Subsequently some one, the military authorities get the credit, felt that control of telegraphs, telephones, lighthouse service, and postal service should be in American hands, and a nasty dispute arose. In August, 1916, it was agreed that "the operation, management, and maintenance of the telegraphs and telephones" should be put under the charge of the engineers nominated by the President of the United States. There have been other difficulties over postal service and with reference to public education and control of municipal revenues.

The President.—President Dartiguenave, taking office in August, 1915, served for a period of seven years, at once found his position extremely difficult: he was desirous of pleasing the Americans, yet jealous of the rights of the Haitian Government. Many of the steps he took are sharply condemned as such by some Haitians, defended by others. Putting the worst possible construction on them, we find they are exactly what all other Haitian Presidents have done. There has never been a free and untrammelled expression of public opinion. The group with longest purses and heaviest arms has always won. The wishes of the governments have been accepted unless the opponents were strong enough to overthrow them. But rebels now had to deal with American arms, and the prospect was not alluring. Dartiguenave then remodeled the Government somewhat. He proposed a new constitution, which was adopted by a large vote and promulgated June 18, 1918.

The principal new features of this constitution are the land law, enacted elsewhere, and a special article which ratifies the acts of the United States Government during the occupation; protects Haitians from prosecution because of obedience to the orders of the occupation; provides that acts of the martial law shall not be subject to revision, but without destroying the right of pardon; and ratifies the acts of the Haitian Government up to the time of promulgation. This constitution was rejected by the chambers, and it is charged in Haiti that this action was brought about by money supplied by a few men with German connections.

All the time there was no criticism of the way the election of Dartiguenave was managed, but latterly it has become the fashion to make all sorts of objections against it. No proof has been offered, so far as I know, and the French priests who would have known the facts smile at the charges. President Dartiguenave the chambers have been dissolved and the Government is now run by the Executive with a council of ministers. The President's advisers make much of this. The truth seems to be that the Dartiguenave has done well in a very trying position. He is a cultured man of long political experience. He has a keen appreciation of the dignity of his position. Although he has not been as strong, perhaps, as desirable, but he has reason to think for his safety should any chance remove the Americans.

of the treaty officials arrived in Haiti in July, 1916. It is im-try to trace the history since in detail, but a few points may be general.—The receiver general deserves much credit for the work His administration has been honest and efficient. Smuggling, f payment of customs, etc., formerly prevalent, have been reduced to g point. He has enforced the law without fear or favor and has made enemies. He is handicapped by having to administer an tariff schedule which the Government has refused to change.

figures in part in American money, in part in Haitian, both ad l specific, and the figuring of duties is involved and tedious. The s absurd details as to invoices and fines for violations are frequent.
zed for having introduced non-Haitians in too great numbers. The uses criticize him for the stringent application of the law in such to increase immediate returns, perhaps, but to check the future of business. For instance, the older custom seems to have been ities on the basis of the metric pound of 500 grams, but the receiver es that the Haitian law prescribes the French pound of 489.50 charges accordingly. It is claimed that his office attempted to xtra duty on the 5-gallon gasoline containers, asserting that they market value of 20 cents, also on glass tumblers in which jellies d.

handicaps.—To show some of the handicaps under which merchants illustrate the need of change in the laws, not to criticize the present ion, I mention the following:
merican scales for weights of 1,200 pounds the duty collected was ad valorem, or $33, where the official schedule seems to call for a f $2.

for agriculture or the preparation of the products of the country
e, but a merchant was forced to pay on an engine for running cotton offee sorters 20 per cent ad valorem or $355.21 in gold and 702.17

rted article sent abroad for repairs must pay an ad valorem duty rs, which may be greater than original duty on article.

had to pay $124.71 in gold and 277.11 gourdes for merchandise ever received. By the ruling of the department such goods delivered ay duty a second time, unless found in a Haitian port.

e been paid in such cases as the following:

consular invoice did not state whether the woolen hats were for ths. Because invoice did not say whether handkerchiefs were for
ket. Twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents paid in duty on mixed ad of regular duty of $3.31 due to mistranslation on invoice of the as "confiture" instead of "bonbons." Fine paid on padlocks bece did not state that they were of iron; on lead pencils because not state "office"; on hosiery because invoice did not say they were on ink because color, black, was not stated.

ch of these cases the declaration is said to have contained all the ired by the tariff.

been much trouble because of the custom of assimilating articles not mentioned with those they most resemble and charging appropriate claimed that the present administration has managed to change is to increase cost. Thus, the cloth known as "Prescott stripes," forwith nankinette, is now put with "drill," with an increase of 100 per
y. Italian colored cotton drill, formerly put with "drill," now is lth "Toile de Vichy" and "Bazin," with an increase of 25 or 50 per
t. Automobiles, formerly classified with vehicles, are now put on an basis, with great increase in duty. Perhaps the funniest case is that ce which, first imported some 15 years ago and classified with wine, nt administration was first taxed ad valorem, then as aerated water, elder, resulting in a duty increase of 50 per cent and the stopping rtation.

omplaints are made in great number by merchants all over the coun-porter is likely to feel that the lower rate should always apply; the tempted in the other direction. Wise legislation should remove the adviser.—Two men have filled the position of financial adviser.

their qualifications, they have not impressed the Haitians favorably.

The present adviser has been absent from Haiti continuously for almost a year, drawing his salary and per diem expenses of $15. That this should have been permitted is a reflection on the United States. It is obvious that his recommendations have not been accepted and the Haitians simply refuse to do as he wishes. One thing is certain, and that is that one of the main purposes of the occupation, the determination of the validity of the internal debts, etc., has not been accomplished although six years have passed. Such a condition calls for immediate reform. Of course, many of the criticisms passed on the adviser are unjust. There has been much complaint because of the conversion of $3,000,000 francs, for the payment of interest on the foreign debt was made at the rate of 9 francs to the dollar, whereas a little later francs were quoted at 14 to the dollar. Just how the financial adviser was to know the future is not stated. It is foolish is the complaint that he fixed the value of the gourde at 5 to a dollar whereas it was intended to be of equal value. Such critics should consider the present price of the mark. Another suggestion, much condemned, with reference to the control of the importation of money will be considered in connection with the finances.

Engineers.—For some reason there was considerable delay with reference to the engineers. Although the first chief engineer reported for duty in January, 1917, he had no assistants or employees and no funds until the end of the year. Until that time whatever work was done was in charge of the occupation.

Irrigation was turned over to the engineers in October, 1917; the street pavements of Port au Prince in November, 1917. Management of the 11 telephones and telegraphs was undertaken in February, 1918, and of the 11 operated by the gendarmerie in November, 1918. Roads and bridges were taken over in June, 1919; the water service of Port au Prince in April of Cayes in April, 1920; of Gonaïves, St. Marc, and Cape Haitien in September, 1920.

In Haiti practically every local need must be met from the national treasury. Yet the older law made really no provision for any constructive proper maintenance of public utilities. Not until July, 1920, was an administrative law secured. This organized a corps of Haitian engineers under the chief engineer and put under the control of the chief engineer the construction, maintenance, and repair of public utilities, the operation of telegraphs, telephones, the water services of the towns and communes, irrigation projects, the supervision of the engineering works of the communes, and the supervision of all concessions, including mines, quarries, and power installations. Practically all the public works were found to be in bad repair and to neglect, and repair bills have been high and will be for some time. Money available has been very inadequate. For the three years ending December 31, 1920, $744,000 had been spent for the repair and maintenance of the public works in all of Haiti and $625,000 on new construction. The total length of roads is about 750 miles, but the sum available for maintenance and repair is only $18,000 a month. Many repairs have been made and some important surveys and plans. In cooperation with the United States Geological Survey the work of triangulation for the entire country has been started. Taking into consideration, the work of the engineers has been very satisfactory. A few complaints are made. The only one of any merit coming to my attention is the result of an early decision to replace the old telephone system of Port au Prince, which was very poor, with an automatic system estimated to cost $40,000 (which will cost much more in reality). So little use is made of the native of the telephone that he looks on this expense as made for the benefit of the foreigner. One or two schoolhouses have been built and many repaired.

On the arrival of the occupation there were practically no roads for motor vehicles in the country. As a military measure the old French road from Cape to Port au Prince was rebuilt and was thrown open December 1, 1917. January 5, 1918, the President, with other officials, officers of the marine newspaper men, made the journey from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien. The road and the others constructed are dirt roads. There are practically no bridges, so streams must be forded. The Limbe River, near Cape Haitien, is a serious obstacle, and in high water can not be crossed. It has hitherto been a source of revenue to the natives, who have come to demand American money for pulling cars across. Depending upon the weather, for in the rainy season some of the dirt roads can not be traveled by automobiles, one can go from Cayes or Jacmel to Cape Haitien and on to Ouanaminthe on the Dominican border, whence a road leads to Monte Cristi. The road question is discussed the high construction cost of permanent roads. However, a very beginning has been made.

representatives.—To summarize, there are in Haiti to-day, representing the United States, the following: (1) The military force. (2) The gendarmerie. (3) The receiver general and assistants. (4) The visier. (5) Engineers and medical men. (6) Diplomatic and consular.

and that the overwhelming majority of the Haitians are frightfully and wholly occupied in getting the necessities of life, accustomed to lenders without question. Keep in mind also the fact that there is the idle class. Keep in mind the further fact that a very considerable of the educated classes have been occupied either in staying in office, or those in power that they might get in, and it becomes possible to see the reaction of the Haitians to the working of the convention.

demanded by the American officials on the ground that, almost from the beginning of the activity of the Government has been to defeat the purposes of the convention. As evidence of this is offered the refusal of the Government to entertain proposals made to it. On November 5, 1918, the United States demanded the adoption of the plan of the financial adviser to create a national revenue and to establish: (1) Taxes upon certain manufactures, liquor, patent medicine, perfumery, tobacco, matches. (2) A 3% Documentary tax. (4) Business and occupation tax. (5) Tax on Government land and water rights. This was firmly refused.

Land ownership.—Reference has already been made to a change in the constitution of 1918 permitting foreigners to own land. The old constitution read: "No person, unless he is a Haitian, may be a holder of land, regardless of what he may be, nor acquire any real estate." As a matter of fact this law was repealed by a mortgage scheme but that did not change the law. The new constitution of 1918 reads: "The right to hold property is given to foreigners in Haiti and to societies formed by foreigners, for dwelling purposes for agricultural, commercial, industrial, or educational enterprises. This right shall terminate five years after the foreigner shall have ceased to reside in Haiti or when the activities of these companies shall have ceased." In 1920, a decree was promulgated practically rescinding this provision giving foreign owners until about the 1st of July, 1921, to dispose of their lands. Meantime, some foreigners had converted their old mortgage under the new constitutional provision and some foreign corporations had acquired a great deal of land for agricultural purposes and had invested considerable money. In the spring of 1921 a tenant of a foreign owner refused to pay the rent for the premises he occupied. The lower court, ignoring the provision of 1918, based its decision on the old constitution and decided in favor of the tenant. If this decision is upheld or the decree is put in force, international complications will ensue.

Other recent cases: The receiver general found that certain customs receipts were understamped. Investigation at the bank revealed that one clerk in charge of this matter, without assistance, and that under stamping had been done. The court instantly discharged the accused man and commanded the bank to pay his salary in full, even after he was out of the bank. The bank advised payment. In 1918 a native under arrest was held in a guard, a gendarme, and escaped. He was recaptured but acquitted. The receiver of the Haitian Government said that there was no doubt of his guilt but that no jury would convict in a case involving a gendarme; that is, who was looked upon as an agent of the Americans. These cases show the unwillingness of the courts to cooperate with the Americans.

American agitation.—Attention has been called to the necessity of stopping newspaper agitation in the summer of 1921. This had stirred up antagonism that at a public celebration one orator suggested that Dessalines looked toward the sea and indicated plainly that the French might go in that direction. A younger and less subtle man had advocated the resort to force to drive out the invader. It was in Port au Prince that a plot to assassinate the President had been discovered. The President is unpopular because he has drawn a good salary ($24,000 a year) and because it is felt that he has not always opposed the Americans. The note as follows from a letter from one of the ablest Haitians I met: "The difficulties have come between the two Governments the cause is the Haitian Government was not frank enough. The President of Haiti has frankly accepted the help of the American forces. By obliging Haiti to live orderly he would have been permitted to inaugurate all the reforms of which the country is in need and which could never have been attempted. Instead of that he showed himself to the Haitian as if he were crucified on a cross. On the other hand, he seemed to have no air of accepting all the American views, discussing them with Americans only in order better to deceive them. The result of this sad system is that we have to be waited for long. On one side the Haitian people encourage the President to continue their political cliques, their disorderly designs, assisted by every means. On the other side, the American officials force the Government kept themselves on guard because distrustful. The result instead of becoming cordial and sincere began to be difficult and became so. The country's interests are harmed. * * * When then will stop the trouble and the revenge? An agitation cleverly led by the city caicos has been started. The politicians, who are in search of power and who believe that the day will come back when as masters they can pillage the public cash box, have encouraged the occupation. They want, under the pretext of defending the country of the people, to make them rise up and try once more to get a better power."

This letter indicates what I know to be true, namely, that the cause against the Americans is not wholly disinterested and that it is not in line with the opinion of some able Haitians. Aside from the newspaper and the magazine, which many Haitians disliked, including the editors of at least one important paper, the anti-American, or "patriotic" feeling, as they prefer to call it, has found expression in the Patriotic Union, founded, I believe, in 1911, which includes many prominent men. This organization raised a fund, sent three representatives to Washington in the spring of 1921, and a memoir, published in the Nation, New York, May 25, 1921, may be accepted as the strongest presentation of the criticisms of the Haitians. Of this memoir I will let one of the most prominent living Haitians speak. I chanced to be talking with him shortly after its publication. He asked me if I had read it and proceeded to point out certain serious errors. I asked him if the memoir knew the facts he stated. He said, in substance: "Of course. They are trying to deceive the American public."

I think it evident that a condition of stalemate has been reached in the relations of the United States and Haiti, which is injurious to the prestige and the name of the former and militates against the welfare of the latter. This passe is the more serious when we recall that the term of President Darcave is nearly over and that a new President will be inaugurated on May 1, 1922. Some betterment of the situation should be sought at once.

Evidence from another side is offered by the fact that Haitian officials persist in the old system of graft wherever possible. Some opportunities remain in spite of the efforts of the Americans. A magistrate at Port-au-Prince barbecued three cattle and gave a big feast. Later it appeared that he had stolen the cattle and that he had also been guilty of other thefts. In addition he had charged a fee of 30 gourdes, which he divided with a gendarme for permitting a voodoo dance that he had no right to condone, for this is prohibited by law. Though he was removed from office, he exercised enough influence to avoid criminal prosecution, being released by the commissaire of the Government. In the budget of the town of Port-au-Prince there has been a misappropriation paid of 5,000 gourdes for street lights, but the Americans have been unable to locate the lights.

At Port au Prince, after a disastrous fire in the spring of 1921 the businessmen raised a fund and insisted that the Government put the fire department under the gendarmerie. This was finally done, and an American fireman had been brought down some time before, but whose services had been refused. A fireman was put in charge. About June 1 it appeared that the funds appropriated to the commune, ranging from one to two thousand gourdes a month, had been embezzled or otherwise secreted. Theoretically there were 14 paid fire engines, some had been unpaid for upwards of two years. There were two steam engines, both in such bad order that one to two hours was required to start them, two chemical engines without equipment or chemicals, a Ford truck, the chief with one wheel gone and no tires, no supply of fuel, no hatchets, or axes; but there were some brass helmets and red shirts. The firemen are now paid about $15 a month, and regular drills have been established. Steam can now be had in 15 or 20 minutes. The new chief put out the fire reported with chemicals, reaching the house one minute after the alarm was received, and for his reward the papers published the story that it was the fire arranged for his benefit.

to Cuba.—What is considered by some Haitians to be the biggest history of the country has grown up in connection with the migration of men to Cuba to work on sugar plantations, which became important in the war. Thousands have gone, chiefly from the southwestern peninsula to the northern coast. Several plans have been adopted which need not be detailed here. All migrants must have passports to which photographs are attached. As photographs are not easily available, it is said that the Department of the Interior has a number of pictures on hand which are affixed to the passport. The only check kept is on the number of emigrants, no comparison being made of the men with the photographs. The passports cost $1, but a fee is paid to facilitate their issuance, while a local official gets $2 for his signature. The captain of the boat must pay to the Haitian consulate $2 for each person, $1 of which is supposed to be used for the consulate, the other to be turned over to the Haitian treasury; and that in 1920 nothing was received by the treasury, the Haitian government scheme known as "boxes of cigars" having divided his receipts between himself and the consul in Port au Prince. This consul in Cuba also visits the migrants from time to time on the pretext of supervising the living conditions, and expects to receive checks of from $500 to $1,000 to enable him to make a favorable report. These visits are known as "cleaning up the neighborhood" (rafraichissement de lisière). (A new consul was sent to Cuba in the fall of 1921, from whom better things are expected.) Meantime the migrants, having no such sums of money, sign notes bearing high rates of interest, such as $500 at times before they are out of debt, agree to remain in Cuba, and are carefully watched. The money is generally deducted from their wages. Further, the factory or plantation is said to underweigh the migrants by cut to enable it to meet the extra overhead expenses. It is a sad state of affairs and illustrates the tender interest of Haitian officials in the welfare of their poorer neighbors. It must be admitted that with the war in Cuba the workers were better off than they would have been situation.—I have tried to point out the chief measures undertaken by the Americans and some of the difficulties they have encountered. I think it plain that the fault of the present situation is not wholly on the Americans. Local residents, both native and foreign, complain that there has been a lack of tact and courtesy on the part of American officials, arbitrary decisions and refusals to take advice or be guided by more experienced men. This criticism is not limited to the military men. Some say it is a number of southerners sent down, but my observation does not confirm this. Some of the complaints are humorous, as in the case at C—, where an official, after a heavy flood, waded through the streets barefooted and his trousers rolled up to his knees. The natives said he did it to show his contempt for them, whereas such a thought never entered his head. Another, however, is the case of a civilian official who, finding some land which he wanted to use in the possession of a private firm, peremptorily demanded it. On being refused he said he would send marines to seize the land, alleging that he applied to the commanding officer, only to be rebuffed. He was such a fool. Another official tried to refuse service of papers to a man, on the wages of a servant, as if he were immune to the law. Such men have left bad impressions. Other men have lost esteem by trying to be fair to the natives. A market woman tried to compel a Frenchman to buy a certain piece of meat and finally threw it in her basket, whence it fell. The dealer called a gendarme whom she knew. He seized and arrested the French lady, who demanded to be taken to police headquarters to complain. The young officer who heard the story dismissed the gendarme, saying it was evidently a case of "50-50." This officer is said to have been with a native girl at the time. Later he tried to apologize. On the other hand, many men have gained the thorough respect of all by their willingness to hear complaints before making decisions. The law has since been extended (1917) to cover the second period of 10 years provided for in Article XVI.

CHAPTER IV.

THE FINANCIAL PROBLEM OF HAITI.

The treasury of Haiti is in a deplorable condition. The country has, as has been, practically bankrupt. Under normal conditions the income is inadequate to meet the necessary expenses of a well-conducted government. Haiti has not been well conducted and its finances have been handled in a less fashion. It was saddled at the very beginning of its existence, as the result of French recognition, with a debt of 150,000,000 francs (the sum demanded by King Charles Fifth in 1825, of which 30,000,000 was paid, and the balance which under Louis Philippe in 1838 was reduced to 60,000,000 francs). The revolution followed revolution. The Government borrowed money at ruinous rates to fight the revolutionists; the latter borrowed with promises to repay at the national treasury if successful. The merchants—French at first, German later—took the risk and reaped rich rewards. Internal claims piled up. Payment of the loans made impossible oftentimes the payments of salaries. Claims therefor were bought up by speculators, payment assured if they were friends at court. Foreign merchants openly encouraged the pillaging of warehouses during revolutions, knowing that the Government would be forced later to make handsome amends. Meantime the Government was being run down by its officials, and merchants took advantage of their venality to dodge customs duties. To-day it is impossible to state just what the outstanding obligations of the Government are, for there are some important unsettled claims. Roughly speaking, the situation as of December 31, 1920, is as follows:

Financial situation of Haiti Dec. 31, 1920.

Foreign loans:		Francs
1875, 5 per cent (interest paid to date) .....	19,250,000
1896, 6 per cent (interest paid to date) .....	37,500,000
1910, 5 per cent (interest paid to date) .....	61,250,000
Total .....	118,000,000
At par .....	$23,200,000
At present price of francs (12.5 per $1) .....	9,440,000
Interior debt:
Principal .....	7,500,000
Interest due .....	1,500,000
Total .....	9,000,000
Total debt at present price of francs .....	18,440,000
Deducting paper money which is secured (4,057,972 gourdes) .....	5,000,000
Net total .....	13,440,000

To this sum must be added the floating debt, many unpaid salaries, the guaranty to the railroads, and miscellaneous claims, whose total I cannot estimate but which the delegates of the Union Patriotique seem to place at $4,420,920.

The loan of 1875 bore 8 per cent interest at first. The interest was regularly paid, and in 1880 and 1885 readjustments were necessary. It is secured by a duty of 33½ cents on each hundred pounds of coffee exported.

The loan of 1896 was arranged with the National Bank of Haiti. Bonds of a face value of 500 francs were issued at 400 to the bank, which sold them to the public at 450. Some of the bonds were reserved by the Government. Issued on the basis of a 500-franc bond for each 400 of certain existing and floating obligations, some of which were bearing 18 per cent interest. Interest is secured by a tax of $1.20 on each hundred pounds of coffee exported.

The loan of 1910 was contracted with the Bank of the Parisian Union, Messrs. Hallgarten & Co., Messrs. Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., of New York, and the Berliner Handels-Gesellschaft, of Berlin. The loan was for 65,000,000 francs. The banks paid 47,000,000 francs (72.3 per cent of face value). 361.50 for each 500-franc bond, which was offered to the public at 442.50. It is reported that the banks paid 5,000,000 francs to the Haitian officials who arranged the contract. Interest on this loan is secured by a tax of $1 on each hundred pounds of coffee exported and a surcharge of 15 per cent on import duties.

The Paris prices for these bonds have been as follows:

	1875-300 francs, 5 per cent.	1896-500 francs, 5 per cent.	1910-500 francs, 5 per cent.
.....	240-278	500-524	440-475

oans.—The internal loans are as follows:

 unsettled accounts are those of the railroads. The National Railiti received a concession to build a road from Cape Haitien to Port in 1907. The first section was completed in 1912. The bonds out-eap to be $3,544,548, and interest was paid to 1914. The Govern-d to pay deficit if profits were less than 6 per cent plus 1 per cent

Seeing her at home again, a playmate said: "Jennie was sent to an asylum but couldn't pass the entrance examination and was sent back." The fact is that the courage of one young man prevented the Haitian Government from violating its solemn pledge. Incidentally the most prominent Haitian lawyers supported the stand taken by the bank.

Struggle for bank charter.—The alleged reason for the refusal of Haiti to transfer the charter of the bank to the City National Bank was the inability of the United States Government upon a clause to read: "To avoid the possibility of any currency crisis during the period of retirement of paper money and as long as such retirement shall be in process the Government reserves the right to prohibit the importation and exportation of non-Haitian money, that which might be necessary for the needs of commerce in the opinion of the financial adviser." I am informed that this suggestion was considered in a meeting in Washington attended by representatives of the State Department, by bankers from different parts of the country and by the French representative, M. Casenave, and agreed on as necessary.

The reason for this is that the Banque Nationale has agreed to issue notes to replace the Government paper money and has agreed to keep gourdes at a rate of 5 to $1. A combination of hostile bankers or groups free to import United States gold might influence the exchange and make it impossible to keep this rate. No exception was made of the Banque Nationale which was affected by this law as well as the other banks. A violent reaction broke out in Haiti led by the local representatives of the Royal Bank of Canada and many protests were made, signed by some American businessmen, including the American Foreign Banking Corporation. The reason given for opposition was that it would give the Banque Nationale a monopoly of the importation and exportation and force the other institutions to buy exchange rates it might fix. The bank, however, was ready to establish a fixed rate; this argument does not hold.

Inasmuch as the financial adviser had control and not the bank this objection could hold only on the assumption of improper collusion between the bank and the adviser. Some of the American business men and the Minister later stated that they signed this protest under misapprehension of wording and intent. That there was some reason to anticipate such action is evidenced by the fact that when it was known that the Banque Nationale could not get the new bills ordered in the United States as promptly expected one other agency managed to collect 200,000 gourdes of the new issue, or about one-sixth of the total. I suppose they were starting a museum; there may be valid objection to the proposal. I am not an internationalist and do not know. I am satisfied, however, that a large part of this opposition was not disinterested and I believe that antagonism of the Government to the bank and to the financial adviser is the real cause of its objection to the proposal.

The Banque Nationale, besides its headquarters in Port au Prince, has branches in the eight principal towns of the country with agencies in many smaller places. It receives from the Government 1½ per cent on the receipts and disbursements, which is probably much less than the Government would have to pay if it established its own agencies. This payment is less if the new charter is granted. While the banque is a money-making institution, at least I hope it is, it is compelled by its position to do many things which bring no revenue. For instance it has charge of the issuing of postage stamps, supplying the proper agents throughout the country, and collecting money. For this it receives nothing, although this service costs the bank $15,000 a year for clerk hire. It also tends to the surcharging when it is found that certain issues are too large. Formerly this was done by Government officials at great profit to themselves but not to the country. Owing to the depression in 1921, nickel flowed into the bank until it had something like $700,000 tied up, on which no interest could be earned, and the bank vaults were overflowing. Finally it had to refuse to receive it. There was no legal objection to so receive it and yet the Government found fault with the refusal.

I have no connection with the City National Bank and have never been president, but, in view of the wild stories that have been circulated by Haitians and some Americans, of the evil character of the bank and its influence on the United States Government, it is my duty to tell what I found. I show that in the proposed charter to be granted the National City Bank a number of modifications have been made in the privileges which are all to the benefit of Haiti. I see no fundamental difficulty in arranging things so that to avail itself of the banque's services in the future. I must conclude like to see the resident director an American, and this I say out of criticism of the very able director now in charge, Mr. Scarpa. n loan.—One of the things confidently expected by the Haitians was a loan. I was frequently told that a loan had been the convention of 1915, but this is an error. As a matter of fact seems to have been expected by the American officials. I am in April, 1917, the secretary asked for bids on a loan of $30,000,000 were received. It is stated that these negotiations fell through the opposition of the financial adviser to certain suggestions of the Government. There have been negotiations since, but the details have been public. This amount appears to me excessive, but if the proper can be made between the two Governments I should feel that an favorable terms would go a long way not only toward establishing finances on a sound basis, but as an evidence of sincerity on as partial compensation for whatever mistakes and failures we I have already indicated my belief that a reorganization of the Government of Haiti is imperative as a basis for good government.

CHAPTER V.

A SUMMARY AND SOME SUGGESTIONS.

n attitude.—Haiti is sensitive, oversensitive, perhaps. Her pride over such conditions people are always extreme in their reactions to be hypercritical. Much of the antagonism reported as coming from Haitians is a smoke screen to cover their feelings. With few exceptions are not antagonistic to Americans, but they are critical of our Government. What are these criticisms? The tendency of our representatives.

the underlying complaints. Now, to influence the people of the the arguments advanced may be quite different. We must not some Haitians are trying to manipulate the situation to their own to deceive their fellow compatriots as well as us. What, then, is on which the complaints are founded?

Haiti is in a financial depression. Her merchants are overstocked bought at high prices. There is evidence that American firms had deal of merchandise immediately after the armistice and reckoned credit. The price level of the products of the country is very high international financiers, the people listen to the agitators, who is this is the result of the American occupation. The Germans are and we must expect that they will not always be friendly to the forced them to leave the country. The holders of the internal bonds are both because the interest was not paid and because there is no the bonds. The provisions in the loans setting apart certain reserve security seem to have been entirely disregarded by the American. This is one side of the situation.

that she has surrendered many of the attributes of sovereignty in return for corresponding benefits. She points to the work of Wood in the Philippines, and asks why she has not been favored with the same caliber. She forgets the effect of the war upon the United States and the worldwide financial crisis. Nevertheless, while there may be some justice in this complaint, on which I do not pass, for I can not ignore personalities, I may be permitted to add that in my belief no man could have made a success under the existing conditions. That is to say that I believe responsibility for the development in Haiti rests primarily not upon the shoulders of the men sent to Haiti but upon the Government at Washington. The Government of Haiti, while entering professedly upon a program of financial reform on the island, we have indicated a desire to exercise wider control. It has been exploited by politicians to the extent of their ability and by untrained agitators in this country to assist them. Some have attempted to make a political cast and to throw responsibility on the Democratic Government. I think it is time we stated openly that there is no partisan policy in our regard for Haiti.

Haiti was rather inclined to welcome the marines, but she wants to know why they are kept in the country after the problem has ceased to be military. She feels that their presence is a constant pressure to force the Government to accede to any demands made. Leading Haitians do not emphasize "atrocities" of which we hear so much. They believe many occurrences recognize that cruelty is not an American trait or policy. It is not the uniform, the symbol of outside control, which irritates.

The Haitian dilemma.—A southern writer on the race problem in the United States once said that there were but two solutions: The first was the removal of the Negroes to some other country, which was impossible; the second, race amalgamation, which was unthinkable. Haiti is in a similar quandary. She is afraid the United States will not remove the marines (this indicates inability to maintain self-control, which is galling). She is equally sure that the marines will be removed (that means revolution). Intelligent Haitians all think, whatever they say for publication, that revolution will occur if the marines leave. They would, however, welcome their removal from Haiti and Port au Prince, say to Gonave Island, a few miles away, where they could appear at short notice and yet be out of sight. My guess is that the free and honest expression of Haitian opinion would show 90 per cent in favor of the continued maintenance of order by the United States, but opinions as to the best scheme.

American accomplishments.—To change the viewpoint for a moment, what have the Americans accomplished in Haiti?

1. The maintenance of order.
2. Establishment of the gendarmerie.
3. The honest handling of revenues.
4. The beginnings of roads.
5. The regular payment of Government employees.
6. The cleaning up of the towns and the beginning of sanitation.
7. The maintenance of a fixed exchange rate of gourde and dollar.

Order is fundamental in good government. Even the much-regretted trouble may be of great future value if the people have learned that order does not always pay. The gendarmerie, well paid, is the beginning of an adequate police system. While the roads are far from perfect no one questions their value. Revenues have always been inadequate. Formerly the Government employees were irregularly paid and the bondholders always paid. All employees receive their pay, a matter of no small importance. A small beginning has been made in sanitation, but the first steps are a most difficult. A system of Government employees holds great promise. Haitians seem to have realized what it has meant during the years of their readjustment to have the support of the United States in their efforts. The glimpse of the experience of Europe and South America should be enough in this regard. What would the gourde be worth today were it not for Americans? Incidentally we may note that the presence of 20,000 marines, regular incomes, a large part of which is spent locally, has meant a boon to merchants and workers of the country. Granted these things, the American achievements are not specially creditable to the United States. We have really failed on some of the big things such as emancipation of education. Why, Washington must explain.

What Haiti wants.—In all countries there are dissatisfied who are not keen of action accompanied by freedom from responsibility. There are such in Haiti. But such a program will not work in a world of free peoples. We are vitally affected by the actions of Haiti and we should not forget. This the leading Haitians recognize. What they want is to have the United States "make good" in our control of Haiti.

Present movement.—Haiti has decided that the present movement is wrong. She has adopted a policy of passive resistance and is making no more of an effort. From this situation what next?

The United States is the starting point for the movement. It is the only one we are working. It is an illustration of the situation in Haiti. We are trying to escape it that by "disposition" we can get out of the trouble and seeking an accomplished mission. In the United States the temporary nature of the situation is clear in the minds of the people and the way prepared for a new movement. It is the United States which governs and we are waiting for the United States to make good. However, we are the failure to do so in the United States is a failure. It is the United States which governs and we are waiting for the United States to make good.

more or less coordinate officials, all representatives of Washington, amenable to no one head. The American minister, the commander of the forces, the financial adviser, the receiver general, the engineers, the military and naval authorities. In actual functioning, regardless of their individual merits and relations, there has been no adequate attempt to achieve common action. No one is carrying out his duties in accordance with his own title in conference with the others and with less clear understanding of the situation is really trying to do. Unless the American Government representatives under some one head—military or civil is unimpaired the head be an executive, gives them a policy and backs them in convention is unworkable. It is doubtful now if modifications could be made. Such modifications are not necessary provided Washington stands and will so organize its efforts that constructive results will be obtained. It is difficult to understand why Washington, having secured the situation, did not proceed to make its will effective.

Have been.—Leading Haitians, Americans and other foreigners in Haiti tell me they think that other representatives at the outset voided the present situation. We are, however, confronted by the fact of past possibilities. A change of personnel now is of doubtful value. The other changes be made.

Conclusion.—We should not forget that foreigners resident in Haiti, no matter how critical they are of past performances, are practically unanimous in their opinion that the present situation must stay in Haiti until a new generation of Haitians with different ideas of government are ready to assume charge of the ship of state. The selection of these men should be carefully weighed in forming our policy.

What might be done.—I have never met an American who wanted to absorb Haiti. I know no one who desires to destroy the Haitian Government. No one has any wish save that in the future it may prosper and be independent. The United States has guaranteed the independence of Haiti and there is no doubt will continue to do so in the future. Hitherto, however, we have been content to let things take care of themselves. Now we are confronted with the necessity of some definite policy. Even the most zealous advocates of a "self-determination policy" might be brought to see that a given self-determined "policy" its present inability to stand alone and maintain its obligations. Our duty to the people of Haiti is not fully met by face value all the statements emanating from its upper classes. Judged by performances, not by words. If we believe that we have a duty to help Haiti we must carry out our belief regardless of the popularity of the policy. If we believe that we have a duty to protect the property of the interested politicians, there or elsewhere. But we must not mix words or a purely negative program of "protection." There are things we might do. We might as a nation refund the Haitian debt. We might treat the products of Haiti on the same terms as those of Cuba, for we discriminate between two islands in almost identically the same manner. What should be our policy regarding our markets?

Declaration by Congress of our intentions with reference to Haiti.—The atmosphere there. I do not believe there is any difficulty in our relations with the United States which can not be amicably settled.

Conclusion.—No one knows the future. No one can be certain of the accuracy of our predictions. It seems to me that to-day we are confronted with the choice between two courses, simple yet complicated, complicated yet must rest on continuity of program. We can admit the impossibility of Haiti under existing conditions and withdraw, or we can continue our program, organize our forces, and make good. My humble advice to the United States Government is, then: Get in or get out.

CHAPTER I.

THE DOMINICANS.

The area of the Dominican Republic is over 18,000 square miles, or more than the combined areas of the States of Vermont and New Hampshire. Running east and west almost in the center is the great central range of highest peaks rise to 9,000 or 10,000 feet and where valleys like the San Juan can be found whose elevation is over 3,000 feet. This range is characterized by a heavy rainfall, and is consequently the starting point of many of the rivers. The general course is north or south; but the streams on the north all turn east or west, finally reaching either the Yuna to empty into Sa. Bay or the Yaque del Norte to find outlet near Monte Cristi. The dis. each side of this central range are quite different. To the south, in ad. to a wide territory more or less unoccupied, both because of small popu. and distance from market, are areas like that near San Juan, which become centers of general farming some day. There are wide stretch of ground used only for grazing purposes to-day whose soil is not very good.

To the north lies the great valley, 10 to 15 miles in width, known generally together with the hills farther north under the name "Cibao." Just east of the city of Santiago this valley is divided by low hills some 700 feet high. To the west the rainfall is inadequate for agriculture except along the slopes of the hills on each side. There is some grazing land near Santiago farther west the country is quite arid and is the home of countless herds of goats, which range at will. This part of the valley is drained by the Yaque del Norte, which receives numerous additions from the south but not from the north. On some of these side streams land can be irrigated. Mao, for illustration, a Belgian who saw the possibilities has made a small beginning of a rice plantation. Some 12,000 acres here could probably be irrigated at reasonable cost, and the same may be true on other streams in the neighborhood of Guayubin there are some 50,000 acres which could be irrigated with gravity flow from the Yaque itself at an estimated outlay of $1,000,000. Nothing has been done on this. Between this place and Monte Cristi there are now several sugar plantations which pump the water from the river. Their future financial success is considered somewhat problematical owing to the expensive installations necessary.

Santiago itself is the center of the tobacco-growing district. Its streets are packed at times with horses and burros delivering tobacco to the warehouses. To the east near Moca and La Vega we come to the cacao districts, and to the west to grazing districts. In many ways this appears to be the richest agricultural section of the country. In this region, too, are several sawmills converting native pine into lumber, both rough and finished. I have seen boards 18 inches wide, but the average is much smaller.

North of the Cibao is a low range of mountains with fairly adequate rainfall offering numbers of small fertile valleys. Going east on the coast from Monte Cristi, with the exception of one small area, we find no land of value until we reach Puerto Plata, one of the chief ports of the country, where there are several sugar plantations. East of this city there is nothing of note until we come to the Bay of Samana on the eastern coast. Here are extensive sugar plantations and here also the outlet for much of the cacao of the Cibao.

South of Samana there are some cacao regions and then the low-lying, swampy, or else rough and hilly coast, little utilized at present. On the west side we find again sugar plantations beginning with the enormous development at La Romana. Sugar centrals are found at intervals along the coast as far as Baní, west of Santo Domingo. To the west at the mouth of the Yaque del Sur at Barahona new territory has been planted in sugar within the last five years. The Barahona peninsula itself is arid.

Population.—The first census of the Dominican Republic ever taken was completed in the summer of 1921. This showed a total population of 894,000, or a little over 45 per square mile, or about one-fourth the density of Haiti. Of these some 500,000 live to the north of the central range; 394,000, to the south. The crop areas indicated on the map on page 112 also indicate fairly accurately the location of the mass of the population, although there are scattered holdings everywhere. The country can support many times its present population. To the total given above it is stated that three or four thousand should be added to allow for foreign workers at San Pedro de Macoris. Why these were not included is not stated.

Origin.—In the Dominican Republic one occasionally sees the high cheekbones and straight black hair, which suggest the Indian. History tells us that the racial antagonisms were never as severe here as in Haiti, nor did slavery take as cruel aspects. The Spaniard mingled his blood freely with Indian and Negro. The Dominican averages a shade lighter than the Haitian; otherwise there is no apparent difference save the suggestion of Indian at times. The percentage of white ancestry is larger, but there are practically no families of pure whites in the country save those of recent immigrants. An American lady of mature years chancing to talk to some young marines one evening in Santiago invited them to have some ice cream with her. They did not immediately respond, and after a bit, thinking they were timid, she repeated they accepted, asking, however, "You are an American are you?" A restaurant one youth naively said: "You see there are so many who look white in the evening and much darker the next morning to be very careful."

n.—There are a few hundred Spaniards or Spanish colonials in who have come over for business and a handful of other Europeans is. While it is the desire of Dominicans to encourage such immigration to attract, if possible, Spanish farmers, much of the white population temporarily employed who do not intend to remain. To this have been added many thousand laborers on the sugar plantations who come all over the West Indies. Some of them remain, but the rest return home. The only source of present immigration of any importance is that from Haiti. This began about a generation ago. The Haitians do any kind of day labor, but have settled down to remain.

form a very considerable part of the population of some of the islands. I have heard the number in Santiago estimated as 2,500 or 3,000 out of a population of perhaps 20,000. The Dominicans are not keen about this because the importation of oriental or negro labor is prohibited by their laws, but they have always granted permits to the sugar plantations. Their dislike is in part historical resentment against the Haitians first, because they took the territory, and, secondly, because the Dominicans want to be white, while they believe the Haitians to be black.

ship.—The Dominicans are essentially a nation of landowners. The abundance of population, the abundance of land, has given all a chance. This has been kept in mind for out of it flow some important results. The land has never been surveyed. Titles are in great confusion. Not only have the boundaries come down through long periods of time with the boundaries inscribed but there has also grown up a system of money or peso titles which are called. Instead of trying to divide the inheritance, each man gets a certificate that he owned so many pesos' worth of certain land. These certificates have been passed from hand to hand and many titles have appeared. As in Haiti this is a situation calling for trouble. In the south in the cattle and sugar regions the land seems to be held in tracts by relatively few families. In the Cibao while there are many small holdings the average holding seems to be small. One competent observer of the richer portions of the individual family holds about 30 acres of land and probably cultivates 10. The military government has established a high is grappling with this problem.

e.—The methods of the Dominicans do not differ greatly from those of Haiti. The machete is here also the chief tool in agriculture. The great note, however, is that here and there modern machinery is used. It was my pleasure to see one large farm whose owner prided himself on his efforts to follow improved methods of agriculture. He was even able to produce some American fruit trees. He had over 100 of the best on the island. Out of his own money he was building a road to connect the main highway. The Dominican farmers are more prosperous than in Haiti.

One finds here actual plantings of cane, cacao, tobacco, and other crops to a far greater extent than in Haiti. Most of these valuable crops are well handled, and the products are not of the highest grade. For some time prior to the financial depression the military government was employing some 30 agricultural advisers, was maintaining trial plots, was introducing machinery which it sold at cost, and was introducing good seed.

he most valuable crop of the country is sugar. This is grown in the south, although there is a little grown at Puerto Plata and Santiago. The soil and climate are so favorable that replanting is necessary for 15 or 20 years, and I have seen fields said to have remained in sugar for 30 years. Owing to the enormous cost of the mills sugar is chiefly on large plantations. Of these there are about a dozen, which are to-day under American control. Two of the largest are in the east, where the investment is stated to be some $7,000,000, and one in the west.

acres in cane and a labor force of 7,500, and Barahona in the west. A new plantation which is grinding this winter for the first time. The investment here is said to be over $10,000,000. A splendid plant has been put up with adequate provision for houses for the employees. The total sugar production is a matter of conjecture, but several times the output can be grown.

Domestic animals.—The Dominican appears to have more and better horses than the Haitian. He (and she) are very fond of their horses and are superb riders. Some use is made of the stock for draft purposes. Goats are very common.

Housing.—In the Dominican Republic nearly all the houses in rural districts are made of palm boards. One rarely sees a mud-plastered cabin. The roofs are of palm, metal being preferred by the better situated. The homes are at times very attractive, with well-kept yards, decorated with flowering or brightly colored shrubs. If on the main roads, there is often a neatly kept hedge, which gives evidence of considerable pride. It is said that the new roads are having a marked influence in stimulating the care of premises. There are few outbuildings and latrines are almost nonexistent. The running streams are the main water supply, but in the towns there are many cisterns and a few wells. In the towns the architecture is Spanish. The houses are generally directly adjoining the street, giving a passer-by full opportunity to get glimpses of domestic scenes, as doors and windows are wide open till closed at night. In every town is the park, often so elaborately planted that no open place is left. These parks are the center of the evening social life. Late in the afternoon the girls and boys are promenading, and in the evening their parents are also in evidence. There are given the band concerts which everyone attends. The main streets of the larger towns are more or less macadamized. The sidewalks are very narrow, at times 2 or 3 feet above the street level, and not infrequently at different levels in front of two adjoining properties, so great care is needed.

Sanitation.—As regards health there seems to be no great difference between the two ends of the island. The prevailing diseases are the same. An American doctor, in charge of a local hospital, spoke of the amount of sanitary work needed in a country with few doctors, none, practically, in rural districts. He also had noted a gain in weight of patients after entering the hospital, thus confirming casual observation as to the inadequacy of food eaten. In the Dominican Republic the French law prevails that a doctor can not prescribe or give medicine; instead the patient must be examined by the doctor, and the medicine then secured from a druggist. This leads to doubling of charges, to much neglect of suffering among the poor, and to hardship in emergencies. While such a law may have its advantages in France, it is worse than foolish under Dominican conditions. The druggists are said to charge about $4 for simple medicine, which costs but a few cents, and which the physician would probably give the patient. The number of apothecary shops in all the towns and the amount of patent medicine carried, leads the visitor to accept the low estimate that 5 per cent of the total income is spent for drugs.

Epidemics have been rare here as in Haiti, but the country suffered severely from the "flu," and in the autumn of 1921 the smallpox epidemic had crossed the border line from Haiti and was spreading rapidly. Yet an American officer of the administration was condemning it for buying vaccine points. At first the papers and local doctors ridiculed the diagnosis of the disease as smallpox. One Spanish doctor, having first vaccinated his own family, made speeches against the vaccine campaign and condemned the vaccine which he himself had used. By the end of October the papers were condemning the Government for not taking more energetic measures. While there are some good physicians, the towns nurses are scarce and hospital facilities are grossly inadequate. There are no sewers in the town. A new leprosarium is nearly ready for occupancy.

The family.—The girls are strictly chaperoned in the better families. Marriage is said to be impossible to one who has fallen. In the lower class concubinage is common. The illegitimate birth rate is high, varying in different regions. No reliable figures can be secured. Formerly one civil officer issued the license, while the ceremony was performed by another or by a priest. Under the present law the priest can issue the license also, while one civil official can issue license and perform ceremony. This change was introduced to try to limit common-law marriage. As a rule marriage is contracted early and large families abound. Prior to June 13, 1918 (executive order No. 14) there seems to have been no legal requirement that parents should support their children.

Labor.—In the rural districts the men and women work side by side as both are seen on the roads taking produce to market. In the towns the lower-class women work not only as servants but in the factories. Until lately the higher-class women did no work outside their own homes, and not much the common report, but now, since a number of young women from the United States have set the example, many Dominican girls are found in Government clerks and stenographers. The Dominican is reputed a rather unreliable laborer. In considerable measure this is said to be the prevalence of land ownership. Having his own land he does not work regularly for others. He likes to take contracts, if not of too long a term, can not be relied on for steady performance. He appears to be averse to machinery. It has long been necessary to bring in outside laborers to work the plantations because of these conditions, and the roads are today maintained by Haitian labor. In some of the poorer districts the Dominican is found to be much steadier as day laborers. Common labor was being paid at a cent a day up in 1921, and it was claimed that few would work for less. In the towns, perhaps as a result of American influence, men were charging as much as is charged in our big eastern cities. The Dominican man rather despises manual labor.

Customs.—From the standpoint of culture, there are great differences between the higher and lower classes, for in the Dominican Republic also the same is hardly existent. Both, however, have traits in common. They are proud of their Spanish connection and think and speak of themselves in Spanish. One almost never sees burdens carried on their heads, a characteristic of Haiti. They are kindhearted and generous to their neighbors, though rather indifferent to suffering. Courtesy is a mantle to be worn on occasions. They are outwardly polite regardless of their feelings, and on the sidewalk or street blocking your way, but with no ill will. They are inconvenient to you. Though I was in the country when the agitation was at its height, never once was I treated in dishonor. Among themselves the young men are said to be rather rough. "They are always at it," said one young woman. In pre-war days everyone carried a weapon, and the one most desired was a .44-caliber revolver. Homicide was common.

Press.—There are a goodly number of creditable newspapers in the country, and these are sold on the streets more freely than in Haiti. Rumor is more prominent than news. There are more and better newspapers in Haiti, but the stores carry a large supply of Spanish newspapers of the wild-West type or extremely salacious. Reading is not a popular pastime, although the clubs will have well-bound editions of the classics. They are well patronized, but the films are extremely poor, and one must get a sort of an impression they give of America. There are some good different towns.

Commerce.—Here, as in Haiti, "big business" is in the hands of foreigners, and the better shops are conducted by Spaniards or Porto Ricans. There are many Syrians, who have not encountered as much opposition as in Haiti. American enterprises have been started, such as the electric light and power system formerly supplying Puerto Plata and Santiago, just after the war of suspended animation owing to inability of the company to obtain rates under war conditions and the refusal of the Dominicans to contract in satisfactory manner. The leading banks are the Inter-American Banking Corporation, which is under the City National Bank of New York, the Royal Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Nova Scotia, the latter a branch of the Bank of Montreal. To save the sugar estates, there seem to be few agricultural enterprises and no big ones.

Industry.—Factories are not numerous in this country, but there are a few distilleries where rum is made, which are owned and operated by Americans.

During the war a well-equipped safety-match factory was started at Puerto Plata, which is turning out a good grade of match which finds ready sale throughout the country. There are two cigar factories making excellent cigars, one Dominican owned and operated, in addition to cigarette factories of the same kind. A great quantity of cigars are made up in homes and small shops for local consumption.

—There are only two lines of railroad doing a general business, one of 100 miles of about 150 miles. The Dominican Central Railway runs from Puerto Plata through Santiago to Moca, 60 miles. This was built by private interests, but was taken over by the Government in 1908. It is a single track and climbs up a grade of 11 per cent from the coast in order to reach Moca. The second road, the Samana & Santiago Railway, runs from Puerto Plata to Samana, with branches to San Fernando de Macoris and La Vega. It is of standard gauge, it differs from the first, so no cars can be transferred. No railroad runs from the northern to the southern part of country, and while the project has often been discussed there is no prospect that such a road could pay expenses. On the sugar estates in the there are 225 miles of private roads. There is also a short line of some connecting Azua with its port.

Roads.—Prior to the occupation there were few wagon roads in the although an excellent beginning had been made. Transportation was on horseback. There was no wagon road even between the capital at Cibao, and the journey from Santiago to Santo Domingo was a matter even under favorable conditions. I shall want to speak of the public again, so will only add that it is now possible to go from Monte Cristi capital in an automobile, with the single exception of a gap of some in the mountains, which will be entirely closed in a few months. Even the trip from the capital to Santiago is sometimes made in one long day.

About 1912 an American engineer was put in charge and some were built, but he seems to have encountered much opposition and the priations were irregular and the funds wasted on disconnected bits. To what extent this was due to local politics, to what extent to the who had been trained as an electrical engineer instead of a civil engineer to his lack of tact and uncompromising honesty, I can not say.

Ports.—There are docks at Puerto Plata, La Romana (dock belongs to company but is open to others), San Pedro de Macoris, Santo Domingo Barahona; elsewhere lighters are used. There are a number of lights coast. The harbors are not in very good condition, never having been adequately dredged.

Steamship lines.—The Clyde Line has had a monopoly much of the trade with the United States. Now at least two other lines send steamers regularly. The French line gives direct connection with France. There is also frequent connection with Porto Rico.

Commerce.—The foreign trade of the Dominican Republic estimated by year periods is as shown below.

Foreign trade of the Dominican Republic, 1905-1920.

	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
1905.....	$2,736,828	$6,888,086	$9,624,914
1910.....	6,257,291	10,848,622	17,105,913
1915.....	9,118,514	15,208,061	24,326,575
1920.....	46,525,876	58,731,341	105,257,217

This table indicates a very gratifying increase in the total foreign trade a considerable part of the increase after 1914 is due to war-time prices like the terrific slump which came in 1921, and has little relation to production. The production of sugar has been doubled from 85,000 tons in 1910 to 185,000 in 1920. A large part of this commerce is with the United States. For instance, in 1919-20 the United States trade represented 77 per cent of the imports and 87 per cent of the exports; 13 per cent more of the imports were from Porto Rico and to Porto Rico went 2.6 per cent of the exports.

For the year 1918, which can be taken as typical, the chief imports and exports were as shown in the table on page 173.

Economic situation.—The rapid increase in commerce brought prosperity to the country. The crops were good; the prices were high. In the war there was no special shortage of anything. Those who had previously eaten white bread did not have to make substitutions. The money income was great, both for the individual and the State. The merchants seemed to expect the boom to last forever. They were given extremely liberal credit by banks and by American houses. After the war there seems to have been a good deal of "dumping" here as well as in Haiti. It was not until 1921 that the significance of the war came home to the Dominicans. Suddenly there was no market for their goods. Merchants could not sell because no one could buy. In the summer of 1921 the Dominicans did not declare a moratorium. It was not necessary. They simply stopped paying their bills. I saw many settlements for 85 cents on the dollar. A banker told me that the banks had failed to foresee the crash and were caught with large loans outstanding. He ss was that the loans of very doubtful value to-day ran from about and $7,000,000 to $2,000,000 for the three largest banks. The ware- loaded with goods bought at high prices which can not be sold for fraction of the original cost. This situation and the uncertainty re have greatly increased the discontent against the Americans a mysterious way are held responsible. The Government tried to acco growers by buying crop at a price above the market. It has on its hands and the outcome is uncertain.

The present archbishop is very popular, but the priests as a body are despised rather than respected, both by foreigners and educated natives. Rome appears to have little control of the situation. The local priests openly with their women, and their families are not limited to one. Immorality is frequent among them. The French priests of Haiti are disgusted with them. Judging by appearances, the Dominican men have only a formal contact with the church, the great mass of attendants at meetings being Protestants. The Protestant churches in the country are few and feeble. A number of denominations maintain missions. Except among the immigrants, one finds traces of the voodooism so dominant in Haiti.

Government.—The constitution establishes a representative form of government. The Senate is composed of 12 members, 1 from each Province, elected for 6 years. The Chamber of Deputies has 24 members, 2 from each Province. Suffrage is extended to all males over 18 years of age. The Congress is composed to meet each year on February 27 for a period of 90 days, which may be extended 60 days if necessary.

The President is elected for six years. There is no vice president. He may choose his successor in an emergency. The cabinet consists of the secretaries of the seven departments:

The department of the interior and the police, which oversees the administration of the Provinces, the municipalities, and the police force, and has charge of the archives.

The department of foreign affairs, which has charge of the consular and diplomatic corps and foreign relations.

The department of the treasury and commerce, which collects and disposes of public funds and prepares statistics.

The department of war and navy, which attends to all matters of defense.

The department of justice and public instruction, which has in its jurisdiction courts and prisons, matters of education, and all things pertaining to the Catholic Church.

The department of agriculture and immigration, which title is self-explanatory but whose accomplishments have never been very striking.

The department of promotion and communications, which controls all telegraphs and the granting of patents, trade-marks, and mining claims.

There are 12 Provinces, each with its own appointed governor, who is directly responsible to the secretary of the interior and police. In actual fact these governors have often ruled as petty kings and have sought to overthrow the President. Their powers are considered too large by even the ablest Dominicans. The Provinces are divided into communes, with necessary local officials.

Courts.—In each commune there is at least one local court (alcaldia) presided in all. Each Province has one court of the first instance. There are courts of appeal at Santiago and Santo Domingo (possibly a third at La Vega, but the authorities are conflicting), the number of whose judges can be increased or diminished by the President, and a supreme court at Santo Domingo. The last consists of a presiding judge and six assistants, according to the situation: "During Santo Domingo's 70 years of national life 19 constitutions have been promulgated."

The legal codes are almost literal translations of French codes of the early part of the nineteenth century, with few adaptations to local conditions. The books are usually French. The courts have been poorly equipped either with furniture or books. There has been little supervision of judges or lawyers, the average standard is not considered very high.

The Dominican courts seem to have aroused much less antagonism than those of Haiti. There is little evidence of discrimination against the foreigners. There are, of course, curious decisions. On one of the sugar plantations an automobile driven by a man probably intoxicated and carrying the driver also intoxicated, attempted to cross a railroad track one night at 11 o'clock. It was struck by a train which was being backed down the track. The engine at the farther end, a brakeman carrying a lantern on the footboard. Damage suit was brought and the court held that the chauffeur, brakeman, engineer, and fireman were equally responsible and imprisoned all of them while it fined the sugar company $500. This was paid, as the company refused to fight. This case probably indicates an attitude toward corporations unknown elsewhere rather than an attempt to penalize the foreigner. Incompetency rather than crookedness is the burden of the criticisms.

ward the law.—As regards the attitude toward constituted government need be said. One recent writer has thus summarized the During Santo Domingo's 70 years of national life 19 constitutions promulgated and there have been 53 Presidents, but 3 of whom have terms of office for which they have been elected. Two were killed, and the others resigned more or less willingly." There were 35 between 1863 and 1916, 13 between 1899 and 1917, and 7 between 1916. It is evident that the central government has never been any

The fact is that most of the time there was active revolt in some country. Although the President appointed the governors, he had strongest men even though these were opposed to him. At one time a governor controlled part of the city of Santiago, while the rest by the commandant of the fortress there. Here another governor had his own army and handling revenues with little regard for the law, while elsewhere a private citizen owning a great territory ruled as a lord, gathering to himself criminals and malcontents from other parts where the opposition did not dare come out into the open, guerrilla banditry flourished, often supported by politicians in the towns. These political bandits and roaming criminals no hard and fast line between them. I am informed that even the strongest of the rulers like the Caceres, dictator from 1881 to 1889, of Caceres, who was assassinated, never entirely suppressed the brigands, particularly in the eastern part of the country. The Dominicans have never attained that respect for law without which government is impossible.

Even in a republic, the actual government has been a despotism. There have been political parties as we understand them. There have been elections after their leaders but their programs have been identical—that is, to get to office. It is difficult to point to any measure undertaken by any government for the benefit of the country. There have been no free elections, and the same name, though there have been contests between these personal interests.

The voting has been under direction.

In a country so managed it must be expected that officials will try to make private profit out of their positions. This is freely admitted. The government has dodged his taxes as have other influential men. For instance, in the north, some 66 stills operating in the north, the internal revenue from these was less than $15,000 a month, but when in 1919 an American was put in charge the stills reduced to 9, the revenue increased to $35,000 a month. In the province of Santiago, with from 22 to 28 stills operating, between 1912 and 1913 the total revenue was about $55,000, but in the first 7 months of 1918, the province of Santiago paid $57,000 revenue. A competent observer said that his

that the graft in the civil pay roll was not more than 5 per cent, but that money was made on supplies for the army and in financing revolutions. The last was the origin of a large part of the old fortunes of the country.

Everywhere the people believe that the officials are grafting. Every cigar had to have a separate revenue label and it was forbidden to remove this until the cigar was partially consumed. Now each box of cigars must have a label, and I was told in Santiago that probably three-fourths of the cigars smoked had paid no dues, as only the larger factories could observe the law. I cite this to show the attitude of the common man. I believe that any official is honest, and knows that he would not have similar opportunities. Bonding companies are significantly absent. I have often told that the revolutions were practically bloodless and were more than counterparts of our electoral campaigns, with rifles and fireworks.

Aside from the fact that the natives say the revolutions were becoming more violent, this statement ignores their industry. "The peasants have never had any inducement to save," said a Dominican woman to me one day. It was useless to try to accumulate their property when to-morrow, or next week at the latest, some gang would come along and seize everything. No continued industry is possible if "volunteer forces" might appear at any time looking for plunder.

The handicap to the country was enormous. I am content that there are certain fundamental resemblances between Haiti and the Dominican Republic in spite of equally obvious differences. The Dominican Republic is a bit farther along the road to civilization, but is still overcome by some of the same obstacles. The necessity of an inner change in the attitude of the leaders is just as acute.

CHAPTER II.

THE MILITARY GOVERNMENT.

After the flight of Morales in 1906, Caceres became President of the Dominican Republic and was reelected in 1908. He was assassinated on November 1911, and replaced by Victoria, who was elected constitutional President February 27, 1912. Revolution broke out, and the United States sent a commission which helped effect an agreement between the leaders of the oppositions. The Dominican Congress assembled and accepted the resignation of Victoria, electing the archbishop, Adolfo A. Nouel, as President. In spite of his personal popularity he was not a strong executive, and, after a brief reign, resigned in disgust. Bordas became provisional President April 14, 1913, served for one year. There were other revolutions, and another came down from Washington. The resignation of Bordas was arranged. Baez became provisional President August 27, 1914. In October Jimenez was elected President, taking office in December. For a time all was quiet. In April, 1916, Arias, the Secretary of War, deposed Jimenez and assumed power. With the consent of Jimenez, American forces were landed on May 1, 1916, on orders to support Jimenez, and Arias was notified that he would not be recognized as President. The Dominican Congress then chose as provisional President a prominent physician who had given up his profession to enter politics and who had lived many years in Cuba, Dr. Henriquez y Carvajal.

As a condition of its recognition of the new government the United States suggested a convention similar to the one with Haiti (which is reprinted on page 152). This the Dominicans absolutely declined. The American authorities then refused to turn over to the Government the revenues collected. Finally Washington resolved to end the trouble and order the naval forces to take entire charge. So on November 29, 1916, there was set up "The Military Government of the United States in Santo Domingo," which has remained in complete control since. The governor has been an admiral of the United States Navy, more correctly a series of them. All the high officers of the administration have been Americans.

Lack of definite reasons.—So far as I can learn, Washington has never given either to the Americans or to the Dominicans a definite statement of the reasons leading to the intervention, except the brief statement in the Knapp Declaration that the intervention was to help establish stable government in accordance with that treaty obligations might be kept. It is not publicly known just what advised such intervention. Until some of the inner facts are revealed it is difficult for the outer world properly to evaluate the courses followed or to assign praise or blame. The Dominicans understood at first that a legation guard was to be landed; then that men were being sent to prevent damage by revolutionists; but the subsequent demands of the United States make these seem like excuses.

I have indicated that from the American standpoint the Dominicans have perhaps because they could not, lived up to the pledge not to increase trouble without the previous consent of Washington. The preceding paragraph indicates a great deal of internal turmoil. In all of this, however, neither American lives nor property were jeopardized so far as known.

Prominent Americans and Dominicans have told me that they believe Washington knew of certain plans of Germany to use the island if opportunity offered and, inasmuch as we were not then at war, thought it better to stall such a possibility. If this were the main reason it is difficult to understand why President Wilson waited until December, 1920, before proposing to withdraw the troops. Some Dominicans believe that Washington carelessly identified the Haitian situation with the Dominican and failed to appreciate the differences. It may be that European countries urged our government to intervene. So I was told by one of the highest officials near President Wilson. There is no evidence whatever that this action was due to any unscrupulous or grasping motives. This the Dominicans admit for they can believe it was done in good faith as a matter of necessity. I should not know, nevertheless, just what the reasons were. Admitting, then, that the strongest arguments could have induced Mr. Wilson to order an action seemingly so contradictory to certain principles emphasized by him in admitting good faith, it is possible that the action was a grave mistake. Then, is the fundamental question which makes all the problems of the administration of our trust insignificant but upon which we must pass judgment until all the facts are known.

of policy.—Whatever the facts prove to be in regard to the occupation, there is no evidence that Washington had at the outset developed since, any well-thought out policy or program. It prepared for a new treaty as already mentioned. When this was anarchy threatened, Washington, finding its hands forced, ordered assume full control. Under such circumstances one would naturally expect that the officials in the Dominican Republic would be given a fair trial. No trace of any such policy can be found. Seemingly the occupation has drifted along in a hopeful attitude, settling problems as they come but holding no clear vision of what it wants to do. The government has been left to their own devices. Admiral Knapp interfered as little as possible and Washington was satisfied. Admiral Knapp, who is reported to have said that he "would be damned if he was and damned if he didn't," decided on the former course and as just as satisfied. Whether the State Department and the government saw eye to eye is a matter of doubt. Certain important interests of both military and civilian representatives were quite contrary to the policy of withdrawal announced by Mr. Wilson and I am told the officials knew nothing of this decision until they received the final order to publish. If it be true that Washington had no reflection on our methods. It has put our representatives on the unfair position for they are supposed to be the executors of our policy. I have sought to make this point clear before the occupation has done, because of its bearing on our final hard to find a more responsible or more anomalous position than the admiral called on to serve as governor of the Dominican Republic. Immediate assistants were fellow officers, many of whom, in American traditions, did not know the language of the country. They were the old native officials, the governors, the communal judges. The old system of courts with native judges existed. Congress If new laws were needed there was no way to get them except by executive orders, and 589 such had been issued by December 31, 1920. The courts recognize and enforce these new laws? It is obvious that the governor might obtain the best native advice on modifications of laws (which was often asked) he could not count on the hearty cooperation of the people, particularly of the educated class, which was most likely to be critical. Regardless of the wisdom or the necessity of his decisions he was to be sharp criticism. As a matter of fact, he has been commending orders which affect nearly all departments of the national life. The question to consider all of these and we can only indicate some important changes made and describe some of the new programs and the nature of the criticisms. I should add that the policy has been to employ Dominicans wherever possible.

of order.—While there was some armed opposition to the military entered the country this was speedily overcome. The military was a police problem. There had always been armed individuals and armed bands in various parts of the country whose suppression was difficult, both because of the nature of the country and because they were less supported by public sentiment. As already stated there was a close line between the roaming criminals and the revolting political "villeros" as they are locally called. The peasants feared to oppose them and their fear was justified. Even the big sugar estates depended for protection," and I am told that they have continued this under the military government. To assist in suppressing such activities were required to surrender all arms and it has been very difficult to permit to possess even a shotgun. One result of this policy, overlooked incidentally by all thinking Dominicans, has been a great increase in crime. A prominent man told me that in the Province of San Pedro the occupation there were about 300 homicides a year and that there have been only 50 a year. Many Dominicans freely admitted the statement. This means that over a thousand Dominicans are killed each year, who would have been dead had the old conditions existed. In number, let us note, is many times the total of all the atrocities against all the Americans in the entire country.

There was an increase of banditry in the summer of 1921. About the end of September I heard that arms from Mexico, via Jamaica, had been landed at Monte Cristi, their delivery having been arranged by prominent men. Pedro de Macoris. I was not greatly surprised to learn that in the meantime made at the end of the month, after the English manager of a sugar estate in this town had been kidnapped and held for ransom, brand new Smith & Wesson arms with new ammunition were captured. The politicians in the town, for the early departure of the Americans, were starting their old game.

Barring such local affairs, the entire country has been at peace since a foreigner as well as the native can go about freely without fear. Even a changed order is seen in the fact that many peasants who had previously hidden their cabins away from the main roads are coming out of the brush building new homes on the highways. Everywhere I found that now the people are safe and have no fear either for themselves or their possessions. The people appreciate the substitution of order for the old revolutions. Of course arms and ammunition are smuggled in once in a while. In one case the crew of the Clyde liners had planned to deliver a considerable quantity, which could have sold at great profit, but the shipment was discovered. Nevertheless, few arms of any account in the hands of the public.

Police force.—The military government has built up a local force at first as the "Guardia," and still so called except in official papers. (For this reason the name was changed in June, 1921, to Policia Nacional Dominicana.) This consists of some 800 men, officered by Americans, and is very similar to the Gendarmerie of Haiti, although its duties are more limited. The pay of privates is $15 per month. It is criticized by the Dominicans just as the Gendarmerie is by the Haitians. Its officers, however, feel that it is to be a valuable asset to the country. I suspect that much of the local opposition is due to its control by Americans. Some of the papers in 1921 tried to move to condemn as traitors those who served in it.

Internal revenue.—While on the island I learned that after 1904 when frauds grew up in connection with the internal revenue. In the meantime committed in November, 1920, by Lieut. Commander A. H. Mayo, the then ministering the Department of State and Commerce. I find ample confirmation of this statement, and from his report I take the statements in this paragraph. The total internal revenue collected in 1916 was $72,144; in 1917, $125,000; in 1918, $1,697,163; in 1919, $3,014,230; and in 1920, about $4,000,000 (I have the exact figure at hand). The amount collected on alcohol, which averaged about $210,000 per year from 1909 to 1916, rose to $511,000 in 1917 and to $800,000 in 1919. In July, 1917, the largest distillery was sued for default and paid out of court the sum of $64,340.10 to settle the case. (Com. Mayo adds:

"The frauds committed in the administration of the alcohol tax were exceeded by the illegal traffic in stamps and stamped paper. Government stamps and stamped paper had been used by the Government, or by agents of the Government, to barter for the purpose of obtaining ready cash, and were often sold in large quantities at an almost ruinous discount. Officers of the Government frequently collected commissions on such sales."

Elsewhere he states:

"Enforcement of the old license law has been in the hands of the municipal governments. Due to poor methods and the practice of selling the right to collect taxes, it was not a success. Of the many taxes imposed and collected by the municipalities, it is doubtful if more than 70 per cent of the taxes due and payable were ever collected, and in all cases the cost of collection was enormously high, often reaching as much as 50 per cent."

It is estimated that the municipal collections did not exceed $300,000 in 1919 under the new system $630,305 was secured. These changes, however, to the advantage to the country, have been brought about largely by the system of the work, the discharge of a large number of dishonest men, the introduction of a local bonding system supported by the employees themselves and an increase in the taxes themselves.

Direct taxation.—The tax on land created by executive order No. 2, April 10, 1919, is in many ways the most important change made by the Americans. The original order contained some foolish provisions, such as the attempt to graduate the tax on the amount of land held, not on its productivity, which had to be changed. Leading Dominicans admit the value of the change and there is little chance of its future abolition. The rate of the tax is now half of 1 per cent on the assessed valuation. This law compelled the orce of assessors, and Porto Ricans seem to have been selected at is much complaint of the way they did the work, but it is difficult e the justice in the complaints. As a fact, the difficulties were han one would anticipate, and experience will show what changes has succeeded already in destroying many fraudulent titles. The nation of the real property was $141,000,000. The tax collected $740,924 and in 1920 something over $900,000. The collections considerably behind this sum. This was due in part to the finan- on; in part it was the result of the belief that the Americans would aw and that a native government would repeal the law. As a rule and accepted the law without much objection, but some, of course, nistic. One former provincial governor, for instance, refused to en the privilege of paying within 24 hours or going to court.

of funds.—The American officials deserve great credit for their work g the financial methods of the government, in introducing system, honest employees, and in avoiding the least suspicion of any graft ty on their own part. For once at least the Government funds onestly administered. It is to be hoped that the Dominicans appre- facts. So well have affairs been administered that all obligations net, in spite of the fact that the salaries of employees have been ncreased, and by 1920 there was a surplus of some $4,000,000 in . Just now the situation is changed. The officials do not seem to d the near approach of a financial crisis in the world's affairs, d involve the Dominican Republic. It is now common to condemn ls, but we must not forget that the local banks were equally short- am inclined to the belief that some people in the United States ter informed.

—The Dominicans freely state that the impetus given public edu- e of the best things done by the Americans. Rufus H. Lane, who ge of the school work, appears to have been one of the best men it down; at least the Dominicans are enthusiastic about him. No iastic over the schools is his Dominican successor. Since the ame the number of rural schools has increased from 84, with about n enrolled (average attendance 40 per cent) to 489. The salary of ; has increased from $5 and $10 a month to $55 and the salary is id. (After the financial crisis the salary was reduced to $40 as an easure.) There are to-day 489 rural primary schools, 49 primary 69 graded schools, 6 industrial schools, 4 special schools, 2 normal well as the university which has been somewhat reorganized. The nent has increased to 100,000. It is estimated that some 60,000 to ren have learned to read and write. In some rural districts the ed that 20 per cent of the population could read and write, and that f these were children under 16.

was there is a school day of five hours. In the country there are ; of three hours each for different groups of children, thus enabling ; to do double duty. In the hurricane of September, 1921, many ; were wrecked and many of these were among the first buildings ed. Even the bandits are alleged to have forced such repairs. Local nizations have been started even in rural communities, which have schoolhouses. Five excellent buildings have been erected by the , two in Santo Domingo, two in San Pedro de Macoris, and one in is had been made to erect many others but there were many diffi- untered. Some towns refused to give sites. No reliable contractors ured in the north, and by the time outside contractors were ready slump came and all projects had to be abandoned. Meantime, ex- er buildings to be ready and knowing the delays incident to im- school authorities had made large purchases in the United States d other supplies which must now be stored.

enough it was in connection with the schools that one of the ychological blunders of the Americans was made. Owing to the isis the school year 1920-21 was shortened by two months. This eat furore. It seems to have been a regrettable mistake but the must not forget that in the old days most of these schools were not

Such shortening of the school year is not unknown in this country ar conditions. I trust this new interest in education will not be is not encouraging to hear in Santo Domingo the common rumor that when the Americans leave one of the fine buildings will be used as a residence and not as a school.

Public works.—To the question of permanent public improvements mention has been paid. It is understood that Admiral Knapp at first favored the construction of a railroad from the capital to Monte Cristi, but later that a system of roads was preferable. There was also a crying need for construction of schoolhouses, for the repair of existing wharves and warehouses and the building of new, for the creation of correctional schools, asylums for lepers and the insane, and for hospitals. After long study a program was developed, whose estimated cost was some $16,000,000. It was proposed to meet this cost by using some $3,000,000 available in a fund for public works, by setting apart another $3,000,000 from the accumulated surpluses of Government income and by borrowing the balance.

This program was indorsed by the second Pan American financial conference. I am informed that it was also approved by the State Department; at least such is the understanding of the officials in Santo Domingo. In substance the State Department is alleged to have said: "Go ahead and spend the $16,000,000 and when the balance is needed a loan will be approved." At the beginning of 1921 the officials asked Washington for the loan and were astonished to find that it would not be approved. Finally a loan of $2,500,000 was allowed in order to meet certain existing obligations and to complete some of the building program. Doubtless this change of heart was due to the belief that the Americans would soon withdraw, but its effect on the program is easily seen.

Roads.—Meantime work under way when the Americans entered had been carried on. Many difficulties were encountered. In November, 1917, for road work were advertised in the United States and Porto Rico as well as locally. Two or three American contractors went over the ground, but one bid had been made by April, 1918, and the price submitted was so high that it was immediately rejected. Admiral Knapp wisely decided not to award construction on a "cost-plus" basis. In 1918 two American contractors submitted a reasonable bid for the construction of 50 kilometers of the new road between Monte Cristi and Santiago, the rest having already been laid. This was accepted and the work done. In August, 1918, the department of public works was ordered to start another road. The question of labor now arose. The Dominicans had opposed the introduction of Haitians for road building and had been supported by Knapp. But other labor was not available in sufficient numbers. Admiral Snowden became military governor in March, 1919, and shortly thereafter gave his consent to the importation of Haitians. By October, 1920, sufficient engineers had been found and enough labor secured together with necessary machinery, to create the belief that the main part of the roads could be completed by May, 1921. In January, 1921, owing to the failure to secure the loan above mentioned, it was necessary to discharge 50 per cent of the engineers and all of the laborers and stop work entirely. There was no resumption of the work until July 1, 1921, when part of the $2,500,000 loan became available. The small sum at the disposal of the department enabled it to finish the main road after a fashion, but that is all. Temporary wooden bridges 9 feet wide over some torrential streams must be left in place instead of the permanent concrete structures planned. The local officials can be blamed for the failure of the original program.

From many standpoints this road building has been the most important thing undertaken by the Americans, more important, in my own opinion, than the building of schoolhouses, and we are making a great mistake in not finishing the job. One Dominican said to me: "You are making a serious blunder in failing to grant the entire sum needed to complete permanent roads. The Dominicans would howl and the people grumble at first but the roads would be valuable that in a few years the cost would be a minor matter and they would be grateful to you for leaving a structure they could not hope to build for themselves." In one community when the work stopped, the people gathered together and did a great deal of work to put the road in usable condition. Only one who has gone over the country can appreciate either the value or the difficulties encountered. I sincerely hope that some solution will be found. That the Dominicans appreciate the roads is evidenced by the use of automobiles they have purchased in recent years. Regular bus lines connect all accessible towns about Santiago and the capital.

Wharves.—A new concrete wharf with an adequate warehouse has been built at Puerto Plata replacing an insignificant wooden pier formerly used. The wharf at Santo Domingo has been much enlarged and a fine concrete 1 Pedro de Macoris a concrete wharf is under construction to re-wooden structure. The wharf at Barahona has been enlarged. ice.—In olden days it took from 10 to 14 days to get mail across. This service has been greatly improved and will be further expedite roads are completed. The graph on page 184 will show the advance the last year. The monthly fluctuations are almost wholly due to conditions.

As it is impossible to go further into the details of the work accomplished may be presented in comparative form by the sketch on page 185 the department of public works.

It is impossible even to attempt to sketch all the activities of the officials in administering the government. I have hardly mentioned the public health work. I can only summarize by saying that it is an endeavor to establish such programs as we have found necessary in our country. Before attempting any general estimate of these attempts I wish to consider briefly one or two other matters.

of the press.—In an order issued November 29, 1916, it was declared that any comment on the attitude of the United States or with reference to the United States must be approved in advance of publication, and the publication of inflammatory articles or those counselling hostility or resistance to the military government were prohibited. There has never been freedom of the press in the Dominican Republic, as we understand the term, and the restriction is not without necessity. Its execution, however, and some of the sentences pronounced caused much feeling. Censorship is seldom either wise or just and probably many blunders were made. The funniest story, for which I can not vouch, but which was told me by an educated American, was that the censor had passed an article in which was described the government in Russia, and was called to account by a higher official. He received an article signed by the same writer and rejected it because it happened to be an article on the Red Cross written by a Dominican law recognized two types of offensive statements—"diffamation" or "injurias," an allegation of an act affecting the honor or reputation of an individual, and "injurias," an offensive statement not imputing a specific act. The "diffamacion" against the representative of a foreign country was punished by imprisonment from eight days to three months and a fine of $10. The publisher was not directly responsible if the offending article was signed by another. "Injurias" was a simple police-court matter for one peso (25 cents). After the removal of the censorship it was no longer a protection to be given, to change this law, and so executive order No. 572 and No. 573 were issued December 6, 1920. The first of these (No. 572) prohibited the publication of (a) any article advocating anarchy or bolshevism; (b) any proposal to overthrow by force the military government or resistance to its laws and legal orders; (c) any article in which the military government, of the United States, its representatives, or any person in such form as indicated an intention to provoke disorder or (d) any discussion of conditions in the Dominican Republic couched in such a way as to show an intention to provoke disorder or revolt. The second (No. 573) provided punishment for the libel or slander of civil or military representatives of the United States or similar publications against the United States. Statements against an individual, if true, are neither libel nor slander. It is difficult to find just criticism of these laws, but they have been repealed for reasons unknown to me by executive order No. 100, issued in 1921, which practically limited itself to the prohibition of "anarchy" or "doctrines and practices contrary to public morals and good customs by all civilized nations."

It may be true that the local officials could not count on the backing of the United States and that they were discouraged by the many reversals of verdicts. But the fact that Dominicans in Washington wrote home that the papers could do as they chose and could practically laugh at the military government. In 1921 the Dominican papers became not only free in their editorial conditions but filled with violent, abusive, and insulting comment on Americans. Protests to Washington brought no relief. Dominicans often expressed regret to me that this should be tolerated. I am not drawing on my imagination let two illustrations suffice. Taken from the first (and last) issue of El Machete, published at August 4, 1921.

"EULOGY TO THE DOMINICAN MACHETE.

"Dedicated to Lulu Rodriguez, who knows how to interpret the dance edge of the machete on white flesh.

"Hail to Thee! thou flammiferous cutlass, which in times past in the hands of Luperon and Valeirio dulled your edge lopping off the head of the invader of '83.

"Hail, Machete! which on other occasions solved the problem of an independence, without restrictions, by one act effected in a sure and hitherto manner.

"Oh, Machete! your work, effective, regenerative, and immediate, has been replaced by an act of conservation which at the present time is called 'conservation.'

"What is prudence? What is its interpretation? Is it to put up with the opprobrium of a shameful occupation—of an occupation which is the civil death of the Republic?

"Oh, Machete! Hail a thousand and one times! because thou, burying in skulls, describing a circle of vindication in space, art the only one who gives that which a people not enslaved aspires to—their liberty.

"Machete! thou who are temporarily sleeping the sleep of death, come again, brave and triumphant, swift and avenging, in order that thou mayest bring a lethargic state at the present time may be moved; in order that thou mayest act of honor thou mayest revive the fine tradition of '44, kept down to the ill-omened cetacean of North America which from its maritime post surrounded by the waters of the Pacific, kills with one stroke the weak reprobate of the Caribbean Sea."

The writer, one Jorge A. Gonzalez, lacking the courage of his convictions meekly explained that it was written as a fanciful conceit and that he was doing nothing by it. The military authorities decided to sheath the Machete.

From the same office and under the same men there appeared another on August 27, 1921, entitled El Dogal (The Halter). I quote the last paragraph of an article on "Woman."

"Our women are treading a miry path; and I see the mire already on their fair skins.

"It appears as if the women in my country had allowed themselves to become more imbued with the fatal consequences of the morbid and corrupt influence of the Yankee than the men. In the United States there are no moral utes for the women. The women, enjoying absolute liberty, are in a state of moral bankruptcy. The women there lead a very free life; hence the enormous gashes that cut the heart of morality in two. Our girls copy, unconsciously, some points presented daily before their eyes at the picture shows and in the lives of the mercenary women who come to us from the North, and go smiling toward a sad destiny, prepared, perhaps, for the infamous intentions of this nefarious intervention."

Nothing whatever was done to the writers or publishers of such statements save to warn them and suppress the papers. The regular press was at the same time attacking every move made by the American government or its representatives, asserting the most corrupt motives for action or decision. Yet the local authorities felt powerless. The reader will not forget that much less offensive utterances in Haiti had resulted in the proclamation of May 26, 1921. It is but another indication of a lack of program at Washington.

The Dominican reaction.—Ask the intelligent Dominican for the best done in the country by the Americans and he is likely to reply: (1) maintenance of order; (2) development of schools; (3) the tax on land; and (4) the taking of a census. Some would give the road building an importance, but more feel that this is but a continuation of an older program. There is no one who would suggest that the establishment of accounting systems or an emphasis on honest administration deserved attention. Can it be that they are skeptical of the permanency of such efforts?

Ask the same man for a bill of complaint and he will say: (1) cruelty; (2) arbitrary actions; (3) inferiority of officials; (4) multiplications of law; (5) great increase in salaried positions; (6) failure to understand the Dominican psychology.

With reference to the charge of cruelty it must be admitted that there have been many instances, particularly of what the boys would call "rough justice." However, very few men in reality are charged with these offenses.

There is another side to the story too. There have been a faults on peaceful marines. been both competent and incompetent officials. All I care to say is that I believe the military officials have compared very favor- civilians. Let me add the testimony of an old civilian official. He likely that in many instances native psychology had been ignored ood. It is also true that many natives have not wanted to help, ntrary have tried to make the occupation a failure. Conditions for thoroughgoing cooperation.

in criticism.—My own criticism of the operations in the Dominican old lie in other directions. I have indicated that it is foolish to viduals unless they are failing to carry out some clearly defined e can pass on the work of the collectors of customs, but how can the success of a governor who must issue as orders all the laws ountry, unless he has men of wide knowledge and experience under eling about our administration, then, is that its weakness is likely to lie in the organization and in the excess of devotion which each man has to have for his own special work. The governors have been changed too for the best results, and I do not know how much attention was paid to the peculiar fitness for the position. There seemed to me to be a lack of coordination between the different departments. For instance, I understand that Navy officials, feeling that a new dredge was needed, bought one. This, however, was turned over to the public-works department, which is connected with its operation, without previous consultation as to the type of dredge department thought desirable. An agricultural college was started and it has no connection with the department of education. If we name the military governor, what is the function of a minister of the state department? If the governor comes from the Navy, why should the receiver of customs be responsible to the Army? In other words, we have assembled parts of men on the island and have told our representatives to put them together and let it run. We can not expect to be satisfied with the results regardless of the ability of the individual men. We are to blame, not they. Finally, we made a lot of beginnings, but we have carried nothing through to completion. The result is not creditable to the United States.

CHAPTER III.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The gold standard was adopted by the Dominican Republic in 1904. A new coin was coined, but a considerable amount of debased silver currency was in circulation. The rate of exchange fell to 5 pesos for $1, and this rate was accepted by the Government in 1905 when the American gold dollar was accepted as the standard. The older paper currency has disappeared, but some of the silver coins and fractions is still in circulation. Taking advantage of recent high prices in the year 1919, about $150,000 of this currency was shipped and sold for profit to the Government of $55,000 over all expenses. American currency is gradually replacing the native, and large amounts of American paper currency are in circulation.

Debt.—The total debt as of June 30, 1921, was $12,572,290 (I believe there are some unsettled claims not included) made up as follows:

Balance of the $20,000,000 loan of 1908.....	$2,372,290
1918 bond issue for payment of floating debt.....	1,730,000
1921 loan.....	2,300,000
Total.....	12,572,290

Financial history.—In 1904 the Dominican Republic found itself in a difficult financial situation, the interest on the debt being in default. Foreign creditors had been made recklessly and the creditors were pressing for settlement in accordance with the provisions of one such loan, the United States loan (October, 1904) the collection of customs at Puerto Plata. This led other countries to the idea of taking over other ports. To avoid this, the United States and the Dominican Republic entered, on the request of the latter country, in February, 1905, into a protocol taking effect April 1, 1905. An American commission sent down who examined the outstanding liabilities of the country which amounted on paper to over $30,000,000 but which were scaled down to $17,000,000. The two countries entered into a new convention in 1907. In 1908 a refunding loan of $20,000,000 was secured in the United States. The principal features of this convention were that all the Dominican revenues should be collected by a receiver general appointed by the President of the United States. Not more than 5 per cent of the receipts should be allowed for the expenses of collection. The receiver general was to pay on the 1st of each month to the fiscal agent of the loan (the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York has served in this capacity) the sum of $100,000 with the additional proviso that, if the revenues collected in any year amounted to over $3,000,000, half of the surplus should be applied to the sinking fund for the redemption of bonds. The balance collected was to be turned over to the Dominican Government or put in the sinking fund as the said government might direct. The first sentence of Article III is very important: "Until the Dominican Government has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican the United States." This convention has been carried out and the reduced as the statement above indicated. Should normal conditions, the entire loan will have been paid by 1925 and the financial terminate.

sensions.—Internal turmoil in the country, however, coupled with practice of Government officials of buying supplies without special looting the offices of everything movable and the failure to pay as, created considerable obligations. The Dominicans appear to se obligations had nothing to do with the convention but it is derstand, much less accept, such reasoning. In 1912 the United forced to consent to an additional loan of $1,500,000 which was ff in 1917.

l dissensions increased rather than diminished and at the time ention in 1916 there was a deficit in the treasury of some $14,000 ing claims amounting to about $16,000,000. A claims commission l in 1917 and the claims cut down. To meet these obligations the rnmment authorized the issuance of bonds bearing 5 per cent inter- exceed $5,000,000. Actually, the bonds issued totaled $4,161,300. were for 20 years and were secured as an additional charge on collected by the receiver general. In 1920 this loan had been so it looked as if it would be all paid by the end of 1922, but the up will probably delay final settlement.

ter the United States had announced its desire to withdraw the es, it became necessary to float a loan of $2,500,000 at 8 per cent n obligations and finish some of the public works. This loan was ighest bidders, the Equitable Trust Co., and Speyer & Co. at 964. m was made of the high cost of this loan but comparison with of about the same date shows that the interest rate was not The Literary Digest for September 17, 1921, contains the table d issues found below.

CHAPTER IV.

PROPOSALS FOR WITHDRAWAL.

xclamation of November 29, 1916, made on the entrance of the s into the Dominican Republic, it was stated: "The occupation is with no immediate or ulterior object of destroying the sovereignty ningo, but is designed to assist the country to return to a con- ditional order which would enable it to observe the terms of the treaty th the United States in 1907 and the obligations which rest upon the family of nations." The only possible interpretation to be is that the United States planned to withdraw its forces at the ble moment.

December 23, 1920, a proclamation was issued by President Wilson which stated that the United States was ready to withdraw and suggested various means. Into the detailed suggestions we need not enter as they were not followed. Dominican opinion was not ready for action. Many felt that the plan was a political device of Mr. Wilson to embarrass the incoming administration. Nearly everyone thought that less could be secured from the administration which had ordered the intervention than from a new one politically opposed to the first. Certain remarks of Mr. Harding had been taken to indicate a friendly feeling on his part. Moreover, there was a widespread feeling that the United States was drifting into war with Japan and that much could be gained by waiting. Hence the "Wilson plan," as they call it, produced other results than to start into activity the local politicians.

Harding plan.—On June 14, 1921, what is now known as the "Harding plan" was proclaimed by the military governor. The essential features of this plan were:

"Ratification of all acts of the military government; validation of the loan of $2,500,000; the extension of the duties of the general receiver of customs to cover this loan and to handle part of the internal revenues should customs revenue be at any time inadequate; the Dominican Government to ask the United States to organize the Guardia Nacional to be organized by Dominicans and by Americans (for such time as may be found necessary to effect the desired organization)."

When a treaty covering these points had been drawn and accepted, the military forces would be withdrawn. To make a beginning the military government called for an election, but the Dominicans refused to put the matter to a vote, and on July 27, 1921, a second proclamation was issued stopping further procedure "until such time as the success of an election may be ascertained. No action has been taken since. The last sentence in this proclamation was:

"By instructions of the Government of the United States, announced hereby made to all concerned that the procedure of evacuation of the Dominican Republic, outlined in the proclamation of June 14, 1921, and the terms of the proposed convention of evacuation were fully and carefully considered by the United States prior to the issuance of the proclamation, and the Government of the United States sees no reason for any departure therefrom."

This statement must be considered as the answer of the United States to the violent protests which were at once made in the Dominican papers. Entirely the whole country was opposed. There were meetings and demonstrations galore. It was demanded that the troops be instantly removed and control turned over to Dominicans at once and without any restrictions. An enthusiastic speaker at Santiago suggested wringing the neck of the American eagle and throwing the carcass in the dust. Others claimed that the act of calling the elections was unconstitutional and that it would not do to hold an election as long as the marines were in the country. In order properly to evaluate this protest, we shall have to consider what was taking place at the scenes. Let us begin at Washington.

Whatever the new administration thought of Mr. Wilson's policy to the extent that it disagreed, it would be careful not to make further mistakes. Inasmuch as the United States could care nothing about the specifics of the plan for removing the military forces, it must have sought to ascertain things which it considered fundamental. Naturally it would discuss the plan with prominent Dominicans. Of these there was a committee at Washington headed by ex-President Henriquez y Carvajal. It is natural to suppose that they told the State Department that the proposed plan was fair and satisfactory and would be accepted by the Dominicans. One of them told us such was the case. Naturally, therefore, when the plan as issued was proposed there was no reason to change it for what assurance could be given another plan would be more acceptable.

Native opposition.—I have reason to believe that the plan, in general at least, was known to the Dominican press and politicians in advance of publication. It was decided to reject it; hence, when issued, the opposition was already prepared. I suspect that some of this grew out of a desire to make impossible the later election of Henriquez y Carvajal as president which might easily happen if he could pose as the man who influenced the American to withdraw. It may be merely coincidental that he soon announced that he would not be a candidate. The real local difficulty seems to have lain not in the method of calling an election but in the uncertainty as to the outcome.

which Americans preserved order. No political leader dared he deadlock. When, therefore, the United States "stood put" politicians were nonplussed, for the net result of their antagonistic indefinite postponement of the departure of the marines, the most wanted to accomplish. After publicly proclaiming abstinence as a patriotic duty, it was not easy to come out and ask for although the leaders by October had agreed to the election, it asked for up to the time of my departure. As a matter of fact, Dominicans were ready to ratify the acts of the de facto Government to grant all the other things with the possible exception of having officers in the guardia. They felt that this would mean not for but foreign control.

I take too seriously the arguments used in the heat of discussion, in talking to me demanded the immediate removal of the mail that I wished they could leave the next day and never return and, "you mustn't do that; all my property would be destroyed." I asked, but he grew strangely silent. Thinking Dominicans all believe government must be in existence before our troops are moved, I inferred from what has just been said that all the Dominicans agree. Many do. Many say that they have learned their lesson out of revolution is over. Others are not so certain. There are able Dominicans who want the United States to keep control of for 25 years. These men are not talking for publication for us. They do not hesitate to criticize the Americans, but they are careful and honest administration by their fellow countrymen, just as I believe them, that there are plenty of Dominicans with ability, but that it is impossible to get these men into office.

—I met only one foreign resident (and he was an old Irishman from a year in Ireland) who did not believe that continued foreign control was necessary if the country was to prosper. Some of them were likely to run quietly for a few years, but that if we left the question of a short time only until we should be compelled to return, it seemed better that we should stay and finish the job rather than begin all over again later on. When I recall that among these Irishmen, Germans, Italians, and Spaniards as well as Americans, I had lived a generation in the country and had married native women, I am compelled to believe that their almost unanimous opinion should be followed. The reader should remember that I am not here expressing my own national policy, but that I am trying to state all the facts of the given situation.

I am permitted to summarize my impressions. The Dominicans are not so much as Americans. Quite the contrary. They are, however, critical of our Government. They feel that it sent the troops either under some error or through error. They admit that the military government has done good things as well as some bad things and that the cases of violence are incidental. It seems worse, however, to have offenses committed by foreigners than by natives. They argue that, even accepting our violation of the convention by allowing an internal debt to arise, we did not give the United States any right to intervene as long as foreign obligations were maintained. They recognize the growing dependence on the United States and they will welcome better trade if we assure us that if we guarantee them freedom from foreign interference they will willingly enter into offensive and defensive alliance with us and assure us that no territorial rights will be granted to other powers at least they can make out an excellent case.

—The Government of the United States has pledged itself to the Dominican Republic within a short time, provided certain conditions are met. Inasmuch as there is little fundamental objection to these conditions, I believe that the opinion they will be accepted. In that case we shall have no reason, for any reason the Dominicans refuse to accept the conharmonious phrasing is discovered which will satisfy both parties to decide on our policy and program. Unless we then withdraw I think it obvious that we should replace a military by a civil government that we should select competent men, and maintain and support a government that will consider the advisability of changing our tariff relations with the United States. Such a course has long been recommended by the present administration. It is, however, not within the scope of my report to enter into such questions. I am glad to say in closing that in my opinion we can find a solution to present difficulties and shall be able to develop the most harmonious relations with the Dominicans.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON OUR POLICY.

Hitherto I have limited myself as strictly as possible to a statement of conditions as I found them, giving but the minimum of historical background. In closing the report I must state a few of my own conclusions.

In so far as I can see there are but three general policies which have been adopted by the United States with reference to Haiti and the Dominican Republic:

(1) Withdraw and refuse to accept any responsibility for what has happened in either country; refuse to intervene again and refuse also to let any other country intervene.

(2) Withdraw and refuse to intervene again, but let other countries do as they please in regard to the collection of debts or the establishment of military bases.

(3) Continue the intervention, promising to withdraw as soon as it becomes possible to make possible the restoration of autonomy.

When I went to Haiti I was inclined to feel that the first course was the best, but I left convinced that it was not. There are many who believe that it is, but they have often weakened their case by impugning the motives of those who differ from them. They are inclined to claim that everything that our Government is doing for selfish reasons and dominated by deep-seated cruelty, while accepting all claims of other nations at their face value.

The fundamental cause of the muddle in which we find ourselves in Haiti is the Dominican Republic is a lack of a clear understanding of the situation and our relation thereto. The older concept of the Monroe doctrine is negative. We said to Europe "hands off," but accepted no definite responsibility for ourselves. This attitude on our part was and is a guaranty of independence to the two other countries without which it is doubtful if they could have maintained themselves. More recently we have encountered a rising tide in Europe that we should assume responsibility or else permit other countries to intervene as they might deem best. Under this pressure we have intervened in a half-hearted sort of way. Unless we are prepared to surrender the Monroe doctrine—and of this I see no sign—the time has come for us to assume definitely the responsibilities it entails and to work out some definite policy. Unless we do this it might be better for us to get out and stay out.

A century ago men, sensing an idea a little beyond their powers of expression, spoke glowingly of "individual rights," as if they arose and existed apart from society. We know to-day that rights flow from society and are determined by it. To society the individual is responsible, and when the commands of society are violated the individual is punished; that is, his rights are limited. Society judges the individual by his actions, not by his size. It recognizes that individuals differ and that the rights granted must be proportionate to the amount of responsibility developed by the individual. The insane man must be guarded. When we deal with defective persons we do so not to punish but to assist them and to protect others—that is, society.

Intergroup relationships.—Just now we are passing through a similar development of thought and practice as regards intergroup relations. "Self-determination" in international relations corresponds to the "inalienable rights" of individuals a century ago. Just as our ancestors learned that they had to draw a line between the normal and defective individuals before the law, so we are learning that international law must distinguish between groups of individuals primarily on the basis of their actions; that is, their development of responsibility. The analogy is not perfect, for we must assume that each group has the inherent capacity to develop, an assumption which is not always true of the individual.

In earlier days a man might take to the wilderness or the woods and lead an isolated career almost independent of society. Such a life is decreasingly possible to-day. Tribes, races, countries in the past have had at times but little contact with other groups; but that, too, has become almost impossible. We are living to-day in a world of closely related groups, and our philosophy of international relations must change to fit the facts. It was said of old, "No man lives for himself," and to-day we must add, "Nor does any people." The old idea that each group should be allowed to struggle along by itself, regardless of the

It learned self-control, has become as absurd as the idea that a group of people will be allowed the exclusive jurisdiction of any unless they so conduct affairs that the welfare of others is concerned. It will take a long time to standardize these new relations is freely there are dangers is equally evident. The point is that now nations must ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?" The welfare of Haiti as much on the tariff laws of the United States as on the labors of the world is to intervene, the questions of when, where, how, will be decided. The individual is most affected by the actions of his neighbor. On the adjoining place begins to shoot indiscriminately with a rifle. I am immediately involved regardless of whether he intends to harm or not. In an organized society I invoke the law. Under frontier conditions I solve the problem myself. In the present state of world organization I follow the program of the frontier. The important thing is the recognition that each community must so conduct itself as to offer no threat to the safety of others. The large groups have rights as well as the small. Each nation which desires to be considered as nations must show themselves in the responsibilities of nations.

Haitian friends say, "But we have long been recognized as a free nation by the United States." True. The whale was long hunted, but its real nature was not changed by the mistaken classification. The difference between you and the whale is that you can become independent if you will, and that is what we should like you to do. You are outsiders. You are a part of our problem because of your location. We have been confused in our attitude toward you, as is shown by our desire to call your island Haiti or Santo Domingo. We have regretted the past and for this we accept our full measure of blame, but we believe that the future shall tell another story. Your old programs of indiscriminate borrowing of money must stop, not only because of overdevelopment but because it has become a source of danger to us. Be sure, there is little danger of interference by another nation, but we know what 50 years may bring forth and we have decided that we will keep other nations out than to put them out.

We can with whom I have talked would prefer to let the island go without interference. I have never met anyone who desires to destroy the independence of either Government and no one ever suggests that the island be absorbed into the United States. America is ready to continue its dependence, but it seems ready also to insist on certain reforms. We grant the sincerity of the Government at Washington, and I see no objection to it, what shall we do, for it is evident that we will not let Haiti intervene.

policy.—I believe the United States should again declare to the that we will maintain the integrity of Haiti against itself as well as against the rest of the world.

Haiti asks for no territory from Haiti, but assumes that in any future treaty the United States will grant the use of any facilities needed as a return for the United States to protect it against invasion.

For the time being the United States proposes to maintain law and order and to try to put the country in a position which would make possible a healthy future development.

Such a development should at once be followed by the sending of a proconsul to Haiti with full authority, to whom all other American representatives should report. Provisions should be made for the refunding of the Haitian money. Personally we feel that our tariff laws should be modified to permit the Haitian (and Dominican) goods on the same terms as those of

as to this policy, as generally stated, are that the Haitians do not want that we should find that closer economic relations would lead to a permanent control, which would be for the interests of the super-capitalists. In my opinion, the great majority of the Haitians desire such a program and the fact that some would not should not be a determining factor in our actions. I do not think that Haiti is fitted for self-government at the present time. I do not ignore the dangers of this policy, but

I think they are less than those of the opportunist program. The claim that our intervention in Haiti was dictated by financial can be made only by those who are ignorant of the facts. It is overly difficult to prevent improper exploitation in the future. Just needs capital and needs it badly. The fact that we have not achieved that we should in Haiti and that we have done some bad things are ourselves no arguments whatever that we should now withdraw.

Difference in the Dominican situation.—The situation as regards the Dominican Republic is different in that we have offered to withdraw under conditions, and we must keep our pledge if the conditions are accepted. The Dominicans are further advanced than the Haitians their future what problematical and we may find ourselves forced to intervene. I hope not, but I am not certain. I must confess that I find difficulty standing the offer to withdraw. The fact is that the United States first great blunder when it allowed Caceres to be overthrown and set a revolutionary government. The second blunder came when it repaid $1,500,000 internal debt under Nouel. These two facts convinced the politicians that they could do as they pleased. We did not intervene should have done so. Assuming, as I have, that Washington felt justified in the original intervention it is not easy to see what changes have which now justify withdrawal. If we entered to enable the establishment of a stable government in order that treaty pledges might be kept, before such government should be more in evidence than it is now. If we because of disturbed conditions during the war why did we not withdraw ago? As for myself, as elsewhere stated, I wish we might finish the works program ere we leave. With this idea I know many Dominican agree.

If the United States decides that it must adopt a more constructive with reference to these countries to-day, to others to-morrow, perhaps try to remedy certain weaknesses in our home situation. For instance should be very careful how we send to Haiti as our representatives Negroes, regardless of their personal qualifications. Such action is resented by the Haitians. They do not want to be mixed up in the affairs of this country.

A more serious matter grows out of the fact that five and six years ago the request of the State Department, our marines were sent to the country. During all this time Congress has never directly approved or disapproved. It is foolish to claim as has been done that Congress has not intervened, for it has known the facts and has voted the necessary appropriations. I feel, however, that no department of government should be allowed to run the entire country in such fashion without the express approval of Congress.

The selection of leaders.—It seems to me also that we should devise means to attract into the State Department able men who might have permanent careers. It does not make for our peace of mind to find immediate control of such important matters in the hands of a succession of men. An inexperienced man should not be in a position to determine the report of the commanding officer in Haiti or the Dominican Republic should or should not be shown to the Secretary of State. The man should be vastly better informed of actual conditions than any officer we have, but we can at least make sure that a man of corresponding experience sees his recommendations. It is, of course, the system of individual men that I have in mind.

Furthermore, I believe that more attention should be paid to the selection of civilian and military leaders with special aptitude for the particular duties which they are assigned. The Marine Corps is intended to be a fighting force and we should not ask it to assume all sorts of civil and political responsibilities unless we develop within it a group of specially trained men. It is a foolish and dangerous thing to send raw recruits, whether men or women, into places where their actions have definite and important political consequences. I know that military men are not always to blame for the blunders which they work. Because of some law the marines in Haiti are required to spend thousands of dollars for tents which rot out in a year instead of at a fraction of the cost simple cabins of palm boards which are more permanent and convenient.

Our increased responsibility.—One of the results of recent years is the increased responsibility of the United States. I have tried to point out the difficulties we have encountered in the formulation of policies.

s responsibility. I have tried to be both honest and fair. While critical both as regards our activities and those of the Haitians as, I trust I have not been either hypercritical or hypocritical. I have pleasant memories to my months on the island, and I look for the coming of better and more cordial relations between the two peoples. Everyone must sympathize with the desire of the Haitians to be free and independent, and our constant effort should be to realize their desires by the cultivation of that sense of rectitude without which freedom and independence are empty terms.

BOOK NOTES.

This is a brief list of the best books on Haïti and the Dominican Republic, fortunately, a number are out of print and are hard to find. Two exceptions they deal with the economic, social, or political aspects. No attempt is made to list the many magazine articles of which but a few reprints, in pamphlet form, are included. One who has details of recent events will not need to be told to look in the reports of the Navy, State, or Commerce, the bulletins of the United States, in our country; or similar publications of the other

As indicated above, with the exception of the first and last items, they do not include amortization.

The first item is an external debt; the last item is an internal debt. The CHAIRMAN. Which is that; the railroad?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; that is the paving construction company.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you included the railroad company in here?

Mr. McILHENNY. Not in this; no, sir.

In the case of the debt to the Banque Nationale, a note due December 1921, no provision was made for amortization payments and there were no funds with which to meet it at maturity; and in the case of the others there is no way of determining the amount of amortization which would be required any one year, as the amount of amortization depends upon the amount of the pledged revenue during that year. It is upon such figures as are made which make no provision for the amortization of the greater portion of the external debt, that is based the assertion that the proposed refunding would increase the fixed charge.

In properly computing the present cost of the debt service, it must be taken into consideration that the arrears of interest on the funded debt are capitalized and interest must be computed on that part of the debt which is not now bearing interest, and adequate provision for amortization on the same must be made. Interest on a portion of the internal funded debt is 6½ per cent. Funded and floating debts bear 6 per cent, and others are not specifically interest-bearing; for purposes of computing the cost of debt service a flat rate of 6 per cent is figured on the total internal funded and floating debt with arrears of interest and estimated amount of allowable claims as of February 28, 1922, to $10,769,431.79. In the above statement about those who assert that the refunding plan will operate to increase the fixed charges, the cost of service of the external loans is figured on the basis of the present and temporary depreciation of the franc, which is incorrect. Computing the service of the external debt with the franc at par and the internal debt on the flat rate of 6 per cent interest and 1 per cent amortization and including in the internal debt the arrears of interest and estimated amount of allowable claims to a total amount for the internal debt of $10,769,431.79 the annual debt service is:

Service of internal debt; interest, 6 per cent; and amortization.

1 per cent.....

Service of external debt, 6,952,097.21 francs at par, 19.3 cents.....

Total approximate cost of present debt, service at par.....

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you say "at par"?

Mr. McILHENNY. Because, in setting out the cost of this present debt, it is not possible to take the depreciated franc as the basis of the debt, but it should be taken as it is based on the normal value. That is covered by and explained, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. McILHENNY. Service of debt under refunding plan, $16,000,000 external series, $1,110,000.

That is the interest and amortization of the first year. It is proposed to increase the amortization portion of that charge by $5,000 a year to maturity.

Senator POMERENE. Bonds to mature in 30 years?

Mr. McILHENNY. In 30 years; yes, sir.

Service of debt under refunding plan:

$16,000,000 external series.....

$5,000,000 internal series, interest 6 per cent and amortization

1 per cent.....

Total cost of debt service under refunding plan.....

If the service of the external debt on the present basis be figured at the current rate of exchange for the franc the figures are as follows:

Mr. McILHENNY. Each 20 kilometers of road has bonds issued by the company, and the Government of Haiti, under its contract of concession the railroad, guarantees that interest.

The CHAIRMAN. How many miles of track are there now, about? Told?

Mr. McILHENNY. Oh, no. I am afraid to say. I don't know.

NOTE.—The par value of the outstanding bonds is $3,544,581.60, which a prescribed rate of $20,000 per kilometer means that a little more than 177 kilometers of main-line track have been constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. I was wondering whether it would not be a goal set for the Haitian Government to get out of, if it could?

Mr. McILHENNY. I have had fully under consideration the revision and modification of that contract, Senator. I think it would be very beneficial to the Haitian Government to have the road completed as it is projected.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that the engineers have decided that originally selected the wrong route.

Mr. McILHENNY. They did.

The CHAIRMAN. And they now propose to go up the Artibonite.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; that is a part of the modification I had under contemplation of the original charter, and I think an arrangement can be arrived at with the company by which the charter will be modified, both as to the provisions which are unacceptable or injurious to the Haitian Government, and the provisions which bear too heavily on the railroad. I think it is desirable that we should have a railroad connecting the two principal agricultural sections of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I am not prepared to subscribe to that.

Mr. McILHENNY. I will go on and state what the annual charge or amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. McILHENNY. I gave you for the arrears of interest, $1,700,071.25; arrears of sinking fund is $230,407.77, making a total of $1,930,479.06.

Now, the annual interest charges amount to $212,674.90 for interest; $5,445.81 for amortization.

Senator POMERENE. Then it is in arrears practically for five or six years, is it?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; making a total of $248,120.71 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The road never has earned the interest on the investment.

Mr. McILHENNY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And it has been a charge on the Treasury from the beginning?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that concession made; about four years before the occupation?

Mr. McILHENNY. I think about, sir.

Senator POMERENE. What was the interest rate on that?

Mr. McILHENNY. The interest rate is 6 per cent.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, what would be the proportions of the customs receipts applied to the revenue service, if article 5 of the treaty were observed?

Senator POMERENE. Suppose you insert into the record here article 5 of the treaty.

Mr. McILHENNY. Article 5 of the treaty provides as follows [reading]:

"All sums collected and received by the general receiver shall be applied, first, to the payments of the salaries and allowances of the general receiver, assistant, and employees, and expenses of the receivership, including the salaries and expenses of the financial adviser, which salaries will be determined by the previous agreement; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti; and third, to the maintenance of the customs service referred to in article 10, and then the remainder to the Haitian Government for the purpose of current expenses.

"In making these applications the general receiver will provide for the salaries and allowances monthly and expenses as they arise, and on the first of each calendar month will set aside in a separate fund the quantum of collection and receipts of the previous month."

I have here, Mr. Chairman, a memorandum prepared by the receiver of customs in September, 1920, "Application of customs receipts for the months of July, August, and September, 1920, and for the fiscal year 1921, if made in accordance with article V of the treaty."

Mr. HOWE. That gives the percentages, does it not, Mr. McIlhenny?

Salaries for hospitals.....	$7,000
Supplies for hospitals.....	1,200
Rations for hospitals.....	4,000
Total .....	13,200

The treaty provided in article 13 that Haiti should undertake and such measures as might be necessary for sanitation under the supervision of an American engineer. The former hospitals of the department were taken over by the gendarmerie under military administration transferred to the sanitary engineer on his appointment. Additional hospitals were established, adequate systems of municipal sanitation inaugurated, and in general a thoroughgoing sanitary system placed in operation throughout the Republic for the first time in its existence. There is no record in Washington of the amounts expended yearly for this purpose prior to the fiscal year 1916, but it is estimated that during 1916-17 about $60,000 was expended. In 1917-18 the expenditure was $177,974.15; in 1918-19 it was $191,751.34; in 1919-20 it was $267,718.26; and in 1920-21, $308,296.46. The expenditures last year were abnormally high, due to a smallpox epidemic, in fighting which it was necessary to expend $49,000. The appropriation for the present year for the sanitary service is $268,200.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The appropriation for the department of public works in 1914-15 under the Haitian régime was $201,680. There is no way of determining how much this was actually expended. From the monthly allotments which are available here it is estimated that the following amounts were expended for specified purposes, the figures given being in round sums and for purpose of comparison with the present scale of expenditures for like purposes:

Repair of public buildings.....	$
Repair of public roads.....	1
Repair of prisons.....	1
Repair of bridges.....	1
Repair of wharves, etc.....	1

It will be noted that nothing was appropriated for construction. In respect to the item "repair of prisons," funds for this purpose are included in the amounts allotted to the gendarmerie for maintenance and repair of prisons. The principal current items of the public works appropriation the last year were:

Construction and repair of public buildings.....	$24,000
Repair and maintenance of streets, etc.....	8,000
Irrigation, etc.....	2,000
Ports, harbors, wharves, and quays.....	5,000
Public roads, bridges, etc.....	18,000
Construction of school buildings, etc.....	22,000

"Current" items refers to ordinary expenditures and does not include special projects as the reconstruction of the streets of Port au Prince and the building of a new national palace, both of which have been completed by American intervention. The total appropriation for public works last year was $667,160, and the total expenditures during the past four years for public works have been as follows:

1917-18.....	$329,476.81	1919-20.....	$267,718.26
1918-19.....	451,288.07	1920-21.....	308,296.46

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt to ask if these figures include construction and maintenance both; expenditures for public works for construction and for maintenance?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; with the exception that it does not include the allotment made to the gendarmerie for the maintenance of prisons.

It was necessary last year to curtail public works expenditures much more than the appropriations in order to keep within the revenues, and the appropriation for the current year has been cut to $518,760 pending improvement in the revenue or the flotation of a loan.

HAITIAN GOVERNMENT PROPER.

This includes everything other than services under the jurisdiction of the officials—that is, including public instruction and the judiciary, as well as the ministerial departments, but excluding debt service and services under gendarmerie, the engineer in charge of public works, and sanitary service. In 1919 the salaries of all the ministerial employees were increased 19 per cent.

I may say there the cabinet called to my attention that the cost of living in Haiti had very greatly increased; that the salaries of the clerical service of the Government were very low, and that by reason of the increased cost were put to very serious hardship. I therefore approved an increase of salaries of 19 per cent, which has been continued ever since.

Senator POMERENE. That was a horizontal increase of 19 per cent, was it?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

There are no figures here upon which to base a calculation of the expenditures prior to the American intervention. After intervention, during the administration of Admiral Caperton and during the year 1919 allotments were made to the Haitian Government for current expenses at a rate of $100,000 a month, or $1,200,000 per annum. The expenditures in succeeding years have been as follows:

1917-18.....	$1,109,577.77	1919-20.....	$1,606,000.00
1918-19.....	1,161,374.28	1920-21.....	1,401,100.00

Mr. HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, have you had the opportunity to read the report of Dr. Carl Kelsey on his investigations in Haiti and Santo Domingo?

Mr. McILHENNY. I have read that portion of the report which has to do with Haiti; I did not read it as to Santo Domingo.

Mr. HOWE. Are you prepared now, or will you be prepared to submit a memorandum form later, any comments that you may have to make on much of his report as affects the finances of Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. I have not prepared any memorandum on his report based on the finances of Haiti. I would ask the privilege of submitting, if it is desirable, a report at some later date.

Mr. HOWE. A memorandum?

Mr. McILHENNY. A memorandum.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee will receive the memorandum of Mr. McIlhenny later.

Senator POMERENE. Let me suggest that you do that with as much promptness as you can.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. I am not at all certain that it is necessary to make such a memorandum. My first impression of his report was that it did not call for any definite statement from me as to the direct finances of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. If you would, however, look over his figures and see if there are any substantial inaccuracies there. When he was before the committee the chairman will recollect that Doctor Kelsey invited corrections. And I believe that the financial adviser, with his superior facilities, may find things should be corrected.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; I will review it, and with your permission I submit it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

(The memorandum afterwards submitted by Mr. McIlhenny is printed in full, as follows:)

"I have read Professor Kelsey's report with much interest. His conclusions are well considered and eminently fair, and I find myself very nearly in complete accord with him. I desire only to call attention to a few minor inaccuracies and to discuss briefly some of the matters to which he alludes in order in which he discusses them.

"Page 119: Reference is made to the installation of two rat catchers to enforce quarantine regulations against bubonic plague, which then exists at Gulf ports of the United States, and to instruct Haitian employees in special quarantine measures necessary to prevent the introduction of the disease) and to the exceptional danger which confronted Haiti therefrom because of mosquitoes and rats. When the bubonic plague appeared in the United States ports an absolute quarantine was established in Haiti against the coming from those ports; this led to serious representations on the part presence of the financial adviser in the United States has materially far-them. I do not desire to be understood as of the opinion that the fin-adviser should absent himself unnecessarily from Haiti for extended pe-or that the present incumbent prefers to remain away from his post of but the exceptional conditions which have prevailed have justified the exceptionally long absence, which, moreover, has been under instruction the Department of State. As to his recommendations, while they may be been acceptable to the Haitian Government, they have all been made with entire approval of the Government of the United States.

The first financial adviser secured from the Haitian Government information as he could regarding the various debts and reached the conclusion for the purpose of determining their validity a claims commission should appointed. This decision was approved by the Department of State.
 A protocol for the establishment of this claims commission was signed in 1919, under which all debts and claims other than four debts specified were to be submitted to this commission for decision as to their validity.
 The protocol also authorized a loan from the proceeds of which the awards be paid. Because of the impossibility at first of floating the loan, and when proposals were received, because of the efforts of the Haitian Govern-to attach unacceptable conditions to its flotation, the commission has not appointed and the validity of the debts and claims has not been finally mined. In December, 1920, upon my recommendation and according to repeatedly expressed desires of the Haitian Government, the Depart-State decided that the internal funded debts should be removed from the dictation of this commission and might be paid or served without submisit. In pursuance of the intention to resume payment as soon as the reshould be sufficient to permit resumption, the general receiver was instructed February, 1922, to resume payment of interest. Thereupon the minister finance requested that resumption be deferred until he could have a confer-with the holders with a view to recapitalization of these debts on the basis rates of exchange which prevailed at the time the debts were issued instethe fictitious rates of exchange fixed in the loan laws. This postponement been granted. The flotation of the loan and the appointment of the commission is still a subject of negotiation between the Governments of United States and Haiti.

The conversion of the $3,000,000 into francs and its application to the pay-of interest on the foreign debt has been discussed elsewhere in my report.
 The conversion was effected in accord with written instructions of the H.
 Government, and the application of the francs thus obtained to pay arrears of interest on the foreign debt was with the approval of the H. minister of finance, and such application was later formally sanctioned by law of December 24, 1920. In spite of this the Haitian Government has so far as I am aware given me discharge for this amount.

"Page 148: One of the most pressing needs incident to the financial re-tation of Haiti is a revision of its revenue system and the installation of efficient collection of the internal revenues, together with the creation of sources of internal revenue which will permit removal or reduction of the ous customs export and import duties. My predecessor, in the fulfillment his duty under the treaty of 1915 to 'aid in increasing the revenues' and to mend improved methods of collecting and applying the revenues, presented Haitian Government a project of an internal revenue law, and this project was officially commended to the Haitian Government by the Department State in November, 1918. It was rejected by the Haitian Government on the grounds: (1) That it placed the administration of the internal revenue under American control; (2) that the schedules of taxation proposed were high. After I became financial adviser a counter project was submitted to Haitian Government under which collection was to be under Haitian control exclusively and with much lower rates of taxation. Both projects were submitted to detailed study by the office of the foreign trade adviser of the Department of State, and a memorandum prepared suggesting the adoption of most desirable features of the two projects, in general the American over-collections and schedules of taxation somewhat lower than those originally proposed. A copy of this memorandum was handed to the Haitian Minister the United States, who laid it before his Government. No action was taken During last year, when there appeared to be a probability of deficits in the sums available to meet current expenses, the Government of the United States proposed a law embodying the American supervision of collections and

Mr. HOWE. Consular fees are included when you refer to the internal revenues of Haiti, are they not, sir?

Mr. McILHENNY. The budget estimate of consular fees for 1919-20 is also upon the opinions of the Ministers of Foreign Relations and Finance is $2,000 for the entire consular service of Haiti. The product was $9,000.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. McIlhenny, your statement a moment ago reached my mind the account of your interviews with one of the ministers, in which you asked him for a memorandum showing the amount of rentals, etc., which were collected from time to time, and he offered it, but you, as you explained, never got it. Did you find in the course of your investigation that he sent any report to the President or to any department of the Government of Haiti with respect to those rentals?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; I dropped my investigation; my investigation ended there. I have never gone into it thoroughly. I accepted his statement on those fees. The only records which I have any knowledge of, sir, are those which are maintained by the consul in his capacity as treasurer.

Mr. HOWE. You were commenting on the receipts from consular fees.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. While in Cuba in October of that fiscal year 1919-20, that enormous sums were being collected by the consuls. During the fiscal year 1919-20, 29,181 Haitian laborers went to Cuba to work in the plantations there. From each of these laborers a fee of $2 was collected in Cuba before the consul before the laborer was permitted to disembark. The law established which this was collected establishes a fee of $2 for issuance of a certificate of registration or identity, of which one half accrues to the Government of Haiti, the other half belonging to the consul. There was turned into the treasury of Haiti as the product of this source of revenue for that fiscal year the modest sum of $1,984 instead of the $29,181 belonging to the Government of Haiti the consuls are known to have collected.

The CHAIRMAN. At the rate of $2 per capita?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know that those collections were made?

Mr. McILHENNY. There is in the files of my office a copy of a letter of the Minister of Foreign Relations to the consul of Haiti at the principal port in Cuba stating that numerous persons had reported the practice of making these collections to the department and citing newspaper articles regarding it. It is a matter of common knowledge, in Cuba, as well as Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. What action was taken to secure the turning in of these collections?

Mr. McILHENNY. In an endeavor to secure the turning in of these collections the matter was repeatedly brought by me to the attention of the Haitian Minister of Foreign Relations, who engaged in a correspondence with the principal port in Cuba.

Mr. HOWE. What was the result?

Mr. McILHENNY. There was no result, so far as concerns turning into the Treasury any part of the deficit. The principal delinquent was finally relieved.

Mr. HOWE. Was he prosecuted?

Mr. McILHENNY. No, sir; he was not prosecuted.

Mr. HOWE. Why not?

Mr. McILHENNY. It was several times suggested by my office, after I returned to Haiti, to the minister of foreign relations, who is also minister of justice, that prosecution would be appropriate. I am not informed why there was no prosecution.

Mr. HOWE. Does the same practice now continue?

Mr. McILHENNY. The practice continued until suspension of labor emigration last year. There are no emigrants, and, consequently, no collections, unless restrictions upon emigration have been removed recently.

Mr. HOWE. Was this practice extended to any other class of Haitians traveling abroad?

Mr. McILHENNY. The practice was not extended to any other class of Haitians traveling abroad.

Mr. HOWE. Why was it applied to the emigrant laborers only?

Mr. McILHENNY. It was applied to the emigrant laborers only, because of the fact that they were traveling in large consignments on sailing and other small vessels, which carried only emigrants, all of whose expenses were paid by a representative of the emigrant broker, and this being one of the expenses which he was compelled to pay.

AUGUST 13, 1919

TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FINANCE AND COMMERCE,

At his office.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I send you under this cover, to have your attention to its subject matter, copy of the correspondence exchanged between the department of the interior, Mr. Antoine Pierre-Paul and this office.

The department of the interior having twice requested me to permit Pierre-Paul and Bonnefil, always by way of exception, to embark emigrants without having to me their names, contrary to what is done for the others, I believe I am giving this procedure a privilege to the exclusive profit of Messrs. Pierre-Paul and Bonnefil; and, moreover, by a notice, inserted in the Moniteur, the department of the interior advises the interested parties that applications for passports will not be considered if the prescribed formalities are not observed.

As you will see by the documents, which I communicate to you, it has been agreed with the department of the interior that it must forward to me, at the expedition, a list of passports by name which it shall have delivered, to facilitate the control which must be made by the collectors of customs. (Annex H.)

In bringing these facts to your knowledge for all useful purposes, I ask you to believe that if this office, in accord with one of your predecessors, has to correspond directly with the department of the interior, it was for the purpose of more rapidly expediting this service.

Awaiting your early communications, please accept, Mr. Secretary of State, my distinguished salutations.

MR. GENERAL RECEIVER OF THE CUSTOMS OF THE REPUBLIC.

MR. RECEIVER: My correspondents at Cayes, Messrs. Bonnefil Brothers, have written me on the subject of the difficulties from which they suffer and which impede them in executing their obligations toward the sugar companies of Cuba.

They lack a balance of 300 emigrants to be furnished to fulfill entirely the conditions of their contract with these companies which ends the next month.

In view of the short period which separates them from this date of August 1st and the delay which results in the sending of documents by mail, they request

This authorization having been given by exception by telegram, we L. yet the names of the voyagers. They will be transmitted to you upon receipt.

Pending this, I request you to give the necessary orders to the collector Cayes to permit the embarkation of these voyagers.

Please accept, Mr. General Receiver, my distinguished salutations.

OFFICE OF THE FINANCIAL ADVISER
Port au Prince, August 25.

MR. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE,

Ministerial Palace.

MR. MINISTER: I have the advantage to inform you that the general receiver of customs has communicated to me the letter of April 13, 1919, which was addressed to you on the subject of authorizations granted, by exception, by the Department of the Interior to Messrs. Pierre-Paul and Bonnefil, to embark emigrants without previously forwarding to him the list of names and passports to facilitate the control which must be exercised by the general receiver of customs on the departure of emigrants.

Taking into consideration, first, the notices inserted in the Moniteur by the Department of the Interior, indicating to emigrants the procedure to follow to obtain their passports; second, of the control which the collectors of customs must exercise at the departure of the emigrants over the passports, and that the circumstances do not require a change in the procedure traced by the Department of the Interior for obtaining a passport by the emigrants, I propose to you to suggest to the Department of the Interior not to accord any authorization for departure of emigrants without the list of the passports to be sent to the general receiver of customs to facilitate the control, and to request the authorization granted to Mr. Pierre-Paul for the embarkation of the emigrants, pending the regular issuance of passports and the sending of the list to the general receiver of customs.

Please accept, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

Relations abroad, but the accounts which have been transmitted to your department by your colleague of Foreign Relations as provided by the law.

Permit me to express the opinion that in the case of nonreceipt by your department of the monthly accounts of the consuls and agents abroad a reasonable period after the date fixed by the law measures should be taken by the Department of Finance for the suspension of payment of their salaries and expenses, until they have fulfilled the formalities required by the law.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

OFFICE OF THE FINANCIAL ADVISER
Port au Prince, April 9, 1921

MR. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE,
Ministerial Palace.

MR. MINISTER: I have the advantage to send you under this cover a statement of Haitian emigrants who have left Haiti for Cuba, provided with their passport, during the fiscal year 1919-20.

I have been informed that it is understood between the superior authorities and he or those who engage the emigrants that they will advance a portion of the amount of the passport and of the cost of the voyage, etc., of $2 to cover the immatriculation tax provided by law to be paid to the consuls at the port of debarkation, as is required by the Department of Finance in its notice which appeared in the Moniteur of February 6, 1919.

I have also been informed that for the purpose of controlling emigration the immatriculation of the steamers or sailers on which the Haitian emigrants are obliged to disembark them in a Cuban port where there is a Haitian consulate, and that on the arrival of these vessels the Haitian consul goes aboard and makes the immatriculation on the spot in his registers before departure is authorized.

No doubt can be raised on the collection of the taxes of immatriculation by the Haitian consuls at the Cuban ports during the fiscal year 1919-20, even now a tax which is paid to the Haitian consul by the officers of the vessels transporting the emigrants to Cuba before the debarkation of the emigrants.

The office is in possession of some certificates of immatriculation issued by the consuls of Haiti at Cuba during the last fiscal year; and it is a matter of notoriety that of the $2 paid for immatriculation the part belonging to the public treasury has not been paid to it for the fiscal year 1919-20.

Taking into account that according to the consular law—

(b) Of the product of the immatriculation tax which amounts to $29,181, the half belongs to the State for Cuba alone.

(c) That according to the accounts of the Banque Nationale de la République d'Haiti relative to consular fees, there figures no amount coming from the public treasury paid by the consuls for the fiscal year 1919-20.

I hereby, in calling your attention to the facts above mentioned, respectfully request that a scrupulous investigation be made to find what has become of the portion provided by the law, in favor of the Haitian Government, in respect of the tax of immatriculation, fiscal year 1919-20, collected by the agents authorized by the consular law and not paid to the public treasury.

Second, the reason or reasons why the amounts collected for the fiscal year 1919-20, produced by this tax, have not been paid to the public treasury during the period provided by the said law.

Third, and for all useful purposes.

I avail myself of the occasion to confirm to you my letters Nos. E. 1122 of February 8 and of March 4, 1921, which have remained without response. I would thank you to issue new instructions in order that the necessary measures be done.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN RELATIONS
Port au Prince, May 12, 1920.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FINANCE.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: From the letter which the acting financial adviser has addressed to you, in response to my dispatch of April 19 last, on the subject of the check for $398 (consulate of Haiti at Antilla) retained at this moment, awaiting the detailed statement requested to be transmitted to the consul, I quote the following passage:

"I think it my duty to call your attention to the fact that the check retained at the department awaiting the statement requested to be transmitted to the consul is contrary to article 8 of the law fixing the budget of ways and means for the fiscal year 1919-20, prorogued for the fiscal year 1920-21, and I thank you to lend me good offices in order that a mandat d'encaissement be issued, in order to permit the payment of the sum of $1,456 into the treasury without delay."

The article which the acting financial adviser cites is as follows:

"All the other revenues of the Republique classified in the budget under the general title 'Divers receipts' shall be paid to the bank conformably with the mandates d'encaissement issued by the administrators of finance and according to the declaration furnished by the agents concerned in their assessment section."

"These mandates carry in their body the names and surnames of the functionaries who make the deposit, the nature of the receipt, the mention of the budgetary fiscal year and of the month to which they correspond," etc.

And the fourth paragraph of article 33 on the consular service provides:

"During the first half of the month there is transmitted to the department of foreign relations, who shall transmit it to that of finance, the accounts and taxes collected."

Now, the department of foreign relations, in receiving from our consul at Antilla the check for $398, accompanied by the letter of which copy is attached, had as its obligation before any transmission to require of the account which must accompany in support of the check, and thus conform to the provisions of article 33 on the consular service, because the latter question has made no mention as to the month and the budgetary fiscal year.

Transmitting you now the said check on the demand of the acting financial adviser, I accompany it with a copy of the dispatch which I have addressed to the consul of Haiti at Antilla on the subject of this business.

Please accept, Mr. Secretary of State, the assurances of my high consideration.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN RELATIONS
Port au Prince, December 2, 1920.

MR. CONSULAR AGENT: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 18 last, accompanied by a check for $398, amount of the part belonging to the public treasury of the receipts collected by your consular agency.

In conformity with the law on the Consular Service, a statement of receipts should have accompanied the said check, which would have permitted the department to establish statistics of general and monthly receipts of the consular agency and by budgetary fiscal years.

However, in awaiting the transmission of this document, the department basing itself upon your letter of June 30, 1920, and on that of November 18 above mentioned, notes that you have collected from March 4 to November 18, 1920, the sum of $790, of which the half, or $395, belongs to the public treasury instead of $398.

These $790 are composed as follows:

- |   |         |
|---|---------|
| 1. 372 certificates of identity during the period from Mar. 4 to June 30, 1920..... | $11.00 |
| 2. 5 passports to foreigners, from July 1 to Nov. 16, 1920.....                     | 2.00    |
| 3. 2 birth certificates, from July 1 to Nov. 16, 1920.....                          | 1.00    |
| 4. 12 other certificates of identity, from July 1 to Nov. 16, 1920.....             | 2.00    |
| 50 per cent in favor of the public treasury.....                                    | $11.00 |

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN RELATIONS
Port au Prince, June 2.

The SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I acknowledge receipt of your dispatch of May 21 accompanied by a copy of the letter of the 12th of the same month addressed to you by the acting financial adviser, on the subject of receipts of our consular posts at Cuba.

Responding to the second paragraph of the letter in question relating to the difference which would exist between the sum of $1,456, shown by my department for certificates of immatriculation, collected by the consul of Haiti at Santiago de Cuba, and that of $1,498, which according to the accounts of the same consul (communicated) should have been paid, I inform you that the statement inclosed attests, the consulate of Haiti at Santiago de Cuba collected for certificate of immatriculation $2,912, of which the half of the sum is $1,456. There is also carried $42 for immatriculation in the month of December. Thus is explained the difference mentioned in the communication addressed to your department.

The office of the financial adviser informs you that it is in possession of a certain number of certificates issued by the consulate of Haiti at Santiago de Cuba, bearing numbers which would permit the establishment of a balance in favor of the public treasury.

I would be very obliged to you to request of that office if it can furnish a statement of amounts based on the documents—documents which he possesses not only in so far as concerns the certificates of identity but also in what refers to passports delivered to foreigners.

Relative to the passport of the Haitian who returns to the country, the department had not failed to notify our agents that it was their duty to deliver simply the document delivered by the Minister of the Interior to the consul at the moment of his departure. On this point our consul general at Santiago de Cuba writes:

"I confirm that generally the emigrants do not conserve their passports a year or two of stay, and that most frequently those who engage themselves who are like their general mandatories do not return them, the consul, on the other not paying any attention to them. Under these conditions the consul can only deliver new passports."

because he obliges the emigrant to obtain a new passport for his return. I suggest that this practice is an evil and abuse which should not be allowed to continue.

Concerning the $2 paid to the consul, for each emigrant debarked in Cuba, under pretext of immatriculation, two cases must be considered when the consul collects them: First, he has no right to collect them, or secondly, if he receives a tax provided by law for a certificate of immatriculation, he receives it for the act indicated in the second case he has two obligations to fulfill: Firstly, to pay to the public treasury the half pertaining to the Government, secondly to issue the certificate of immatriculation and deliver it to the emigrant. If he receives this money for the execution of a document which he has not the intention of executing and which is in fact executed, or if he does not pay the portion belonging to the State of the public treasury, in either of these cases he has failed in the performance of his duties and should be properly punished; he can not excuse himself in contending that the certificate for which he has been paid has not been issued.

For the year 1920 we know the number of emigrants who have debarked in Cuba, and the number of those who have debarked in Cuba. We know that under the system existing $2 are paid to the consul for each of the emigrants debarked in Cuba, or a total of $58,362 of which the half, $29,181 belongs to the Government, and we know that of this sum the consul has paid to the public treasury $1,984. This is a scandalous business. As far as the accounts of the amounts collected for the present fiscal year have been examined, the same practice is followed by the consuls in Cuba at the present moment.

So far as concerns specially the ex-consul at Santiago de Cuba, his accounts, including the month of March, 1920, show the collection of $1,438 for certificates of immatriculation of which the half has been paid by him to the public treasury. Therefore, according to his accounts, he had issued 719 certificates at the end of March, 1920. The certificates which he has in the possession of this office are dated March 15, 1920, and bear the numbers 1328, 1330, 1331, 1334, 1335, 1339, 1341, and 1342. This demonstrates that on March 15, 1920, the consul at Santiago de Cuba had issued at least 1,541 certificates, while at the date of March 31, 1920, there figure in his accounts only 719 certificates. The preceding is not given in the idea that the Government will content itself with the payment of the difference between the number of the certificates issued and the smaller number which figure in the accounts of the consul. This would be absurd and puerile. It is simply to declare that his accounts are not correct, even so far as concerns the certificates. The certificates issued represent only an infinitesimal part of the sum of $2 per head of emigrants debarked at Santiago, amount which he has received and he should be compelled to account for the amounts actually received. There is no doubt that your colleague of foreign relations who is also a member of justice can find the legal and adequate measures of compulsion.

But the preceding is not the worst of the situation. That the Government has been defrauded of an enormous amount in consular taxes is as well known in Cuba as it is in Haiti. If this fraud should continue to be practiced, there would be every appearance of justice in crediting it to the acquiescent and criminal negligence of the authorities who have in their power the means of putting an end to this fraud. No doubt the Government has been cognizant of this situation, and that it is still, as is demonstrated in the following letter from your colleague of foreign relations to the consul at Santiago de Cuba on November 6, 1920:

"MR. CONSUL: The newspaper Le Nouvelliste, of Port au Prince, has mentioned abuses which are committed in Cuba, on the subject of immatriculation of emigrants and of the delivery of certificates of immatriculation.

"You know that the immatriculation must be made without any expense, and that the tax collected for the delivery of the certificate, when the Haitian Government demands the certificate, must be divided between the collecting agent and the State.

"Now, according to what appears in the Nouvelliste, and also according to the information which the department has collected, the Haitian Government in Cuba require not only immatriculation but also that the emigration agent cause to be delivered immatriculation certificates, at the rate of $2 per certificate. And all those from whom my department has had information are unanimous in declaring that this requirement is imposed upon them.

The SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 13, 1921, under the cover of which I have found a letter of the financial adviser of the 16th instant, No. E-15-22, relative to the amounts collected by our agents at Cuba for certificate of immatriculation, visés of passports, etc.

This document has been transmitted to our chargé d'affaires at Haiti, who is making an investigation on this subject.

OFFICE OF THE FINANCIAL ADVISER

Port au Prince, August 21.

MINISTER OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE,

Ministerial Palace.

MR. MINISTER: I have the advantage to send you under this cover a "Statement of Haitian emigrant passengers leaving ports of Haiti with passports in due form viséd by the collectors of the ports during the period from October 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921, inclusive," communicated to me by the office of the general receiver, which demonstrates that there were 1,200 emigrants having left the ports of Haiti for Cuba during the period from October 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921.

According to the laws in force, the Haitian treasury should have collected:

(a) Passport duties 21,057 at $2.....	$42,114
(b) Immatriculation taxes belonging to the treasury, 21,057 at $1.....	21,057
Total.....	$63,171

I believe it my duty to call your attention to the fact that in the Monthly Statement of July 2, 1921, is shown in the table "Product of internal taxes" the amount of $3,193.62, collected for the account of the Government from October 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921, collected for the account of the Government:

(c) Passport (duties).....	$3,193.62
(d) Or a difference between the amount which should have been collected and that collected of.....	$3,193.62

While immatriculation duties do not show in this table, I am inclined to believe that this tax is comprised in the said table under the title "Consular taxes," which figure for $3,193.62,

(e) Or a difference between the amount which should have been collected and that collected of.....	$17,977.38
--	-------------

If other consular taxes and other amounts collected by the different collectors are not taken into account.

In bringing these facts to your knowledge, I would thank you to be good enough to send me all information which can explain this deficit.

I believe it my duty to remind you that the tax "passport duty" is levied 48 hours after the departure of vessels from the companies, and that the collectors who collect the immatriculation duties must render account through the Department of foreign relations during the first half of the month for the previous month, and that the law of August 26, 1870, on the responsibility of public officers and all other laws not contrary to the provisions of the said law, are in effect, as provided in article 32 of the law fixing the budget of expenditures for the fiscal year 1919-20, prorogued for the fiscal year 1920-21.

I suggest that the department of finance request the general receiver to instruct the collectors of customs not to permit any sailing vessel to leave the neighboring islands unless the consignee of the sailing vessel presents to the collectors of customs the receipt attesting that he has paid the "passport duties," in view of the fact that these sailing vessels have no definite destination and therefore do not present the guaranties which can be presented by the measures adopted to put an end to the irregularities hereinafter noted at the time of issuance of passports by the Department of the Interior.

Instructions having been given by the general receiver to the captains of the ports:

(a) That a rigorous identification be made between the photograph to the passport, "photograph certified authentic by the seal of the Department of the Interior placed partly on the passport and partly on the photograph," and the person in favor of whom the passport is issued. The reports communicated, like many others, have not been acceptable on account of the impossibility of making any identification, as the photographs are nothing except a black smear on a piece of paper, though bearing the seal of the Department of the Interior.

As a result of the issuance of passports in such condition it goes without saying that the holder can not be authorized by the captains of the ports to take passage on a vessel, even though that may be prejudicial to the interests of the country as well from the point of view of the delay in departure necessary for the issuance of a new passport as well as from the pecuniary losses which the holder suffers for the purchase of a new stamp for the issuance of a new passport and the expenses incurred while awaiting other transportation.

The office thinks that the Department of the Interior, in requesting the captains of the ports to exercise an efficient control over departures, a control which can not be exercised unless the photograph permits the identification of the person who requests the issuance of the passport.

To attain this end it is indispensable that the practice of affixing to the passport a square of smeared paper bearing the seal of the Department of the Interior, for the purpose of avoiding disagreeable surprises to the traveler at the moment of embarkation, because the captains of the ports have formerly refused to issue passports from the general receiver who, to respond to the expectations of the Department of the Interior, gave the order not to permit embarkation without a rigorous comparison between the photograph and the bearer of the passport. Since such instructions were given by the general receiver, the reports of the captains of the port constantly note the number of voyagers who have been refused embarkation by reason of impossibility of identification.

(b) Likewise in the reports of the captains of ports, mention is made of the refusals of embarkation, for the reason that the photograph affixed to the passport, though bearing the seal of the Department of the Interior, has no resemblance to the bearer of the passport.

In support of the facts mentioned in paragraph (a), I inform you that of 250 passengers which were to leave Cayes on May 26 on the steamer Manati 52 were refused.

Likewise in support of the facts mentioned in paragraph (b), of 24 passengers who were to leave Cayes on June 7 on the same steamer 26 were refused.

To these irregularities it must be added that the seal of the Department of the Interior is affixed to the contracts of engagement in blank, not bearing the name of the contractor nor the central where he is to be employed.

The Department of the Interior in prescribing that the contracts of engagement must be submitted to it at the same time as the application for a passport, there can be no doubt that this requirement is made with a view to the control to be made by that department, control which can not be made unless the contract fulfills all the conditions required at the time of its delivery to the Department of the Interior with a view to the issuance of a passport, and to avoid the presentation of passports with contracts not bearing the seal of the Department of the Interior.

In bringing these irregularities coming from a branch of the public administration to your knowledge, I would thank you to take up the question with your colleague of the Interior and advise me what means the department will adopt to avoid a recurrence of such unhappy events which are due to carelessness in a public service whose duty it is to exercise a strict control over a document such as a passport of which it is not necessary to state the importance.

I will thank you to return the communicated documents to the archives of my office.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

A. J. M.
 Acting Minister

it is proper to control the number of Haitians residing outside of the country, notably the laborers who emigrate to the adjacent islands and to accord them the greatest protection on the part of our agents abroad; in view of the law of August 27, 1912, on the organization of the consular service as well as the tariff annexed thereto; on the report of the Secretary of State, the Department of Foreign Relations, and with the advice of the Secretaries of State, has proposed, and the Council of State in its deliberations has enacted the following law:

ARTICLE 1. The tariff of notarial acts annexed to the law of August 27, 1912, on the organization of the consular service is modified as follows:

CHAPTER 1.

COMMERCIAL DOCUMENTS.

1. (a) For the manifest of each port of departure of a loaded vessel.....
- (b) For the manifest of each port of departure of a vessel in ballast.....
2. For the health patent of each vessel with or without load.....
3. For the original of consular invoices.....
4. For the certificate of origin of merchandise, legalization, or visé of this certificate.....

ADMINISTRATIVE DOCUMENTS.

5. (1) Passports of Haitians.....
- (2) Visé of passports of Haitians.....
6. (1) Passports of foreigners.....
- (2) Visé of this passport.....
7. Certificate of matriculation at the consulate or other.....

ART. 2. The second paragraph of article 33 of the law cited is modified as follows: The expenses to be collected are determined by the tariff annexed. One half of all the taxes provided in the said tariff shall be paid into the treasury, the other half shall belong to the agent.

Nevertheless, in so far as concerns the tax coming from the delivery of certificates of matriculation, hereafter made obligatory for every Haitian residing abroad, the half of the part belonging to the consular agent shall be paid to the legation from which he depends.

For purposes of control, the consular agents shall forward during the first half of each month a statement of matriculations to the legation from which they depend.

ART. 3. In the case where the Haitian arriving in a foreign country has not been matriculated immediately in the nearest consulate to his place of residence, the matriculation tax shall be collected at the moment when he shall present his passport for visé or otherwise when he demands a new passport to re-enter Haiti.

Mention of matriculation shall be written on every passport of a Haitian voyaging abroad.

ART. 4. The present law repeals all laws or parts of law which are contrary to it and shall be executed at the diligence of the Secretary of State, the Department of Foreign Relations.

OFFICE OF THE FINANCIAL ADVISER
April 21

MINISTER OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE,
Ministerial Palace.

MR. MINISTER: I have the advantage to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 137, of April 19, 1921, transmitting to me a project of law forwarded by your colleague of foreign relations relating to consular taxes.

The project submitted can not have my approval, because its principal object would be to enrich the minister of Haiti to Cuba and the Haitian treasury without any important augmentation of receipts in favor of the treasury.

5. Every consul is obliged to keep a detailed account of all the taxes collected and to furnish directly to the department of finance a copy of the account that sent to the department of foreign relations, containing in detail every collected by him. This account must be deposited in the mail five days at latest after the end of the month to which it pertains, and must be accurate by the amount pertaining to the Government collected during the month.

6. Adequate penalties should be fixed for violations of the provisions mentioned in the fourth and fifth paragraphs above.

7. And this applies to all functionaries, including those who issue passports in Haiti. Every functionary who, for any reason, shall have received, required, directly or indirectly, an amount greater than that provided for the receipt or issuance of a consular document or passport or other document, shall be removed without prejudice to the imposition of the penalty provided by law.

The adoption of the suggestions made will increase the revenues of the Government to a much greater degree than the project communicated, and indicate also that the Government is really desirous of departing from the disastrous and unjust system of taxation, on which system the present laws are based.

The existing system of taxation only strikes a multitude of poor peasants and laborers for the benefit of the rich landholders, merchants, and others who do not even pay the insignificant taxes established by law.

Notwithstanding, I consider the project of law proposed by your department of foreign relations still worse than the principle which has served as a basis for the laws on existing taxes, because it provides a method which will enrich a half dozen of individuals at the expense of a class of taxpayers already suffering from supertaxation.

I would thank you to note that the views above expressed are the views of the acting financial adviser, based to a great extent on the views expressed by the financial adviser at one of the conferences which he had with the secretaries of state at the time of the discussion of the project of budget for the current fiscal year, when a law similar to that now proposed was submitted to him by the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Therefore I feel that it is my duty to communicate to the financial adviser at Washington the project of law submitted, accompanied by a copy of the present letter, for his information and all useful purposes, which I will do at the first opportunity.

I avail myself of the occasion to request you to lend your good offices to your colleagues of foreign relations to have a reply to my letter, No. E. 100 of April 9, which, according to your communications, has been transmitted to the department of foreign relations for this purpose.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

Mr. CONSUL: It is only yesterday that your report of July 28, 1912, reached the department. The envelope bore the following notation: "This has been found in a city box out of use Cayes, January 30 of this year."

I have well noted the considerations which you have made on the matter of the Haitian emigrants have in registering at the consulate. But in fact, I can only confirm to you the text of the letter of the department of August 27 last. It pertains to the agents of the Government in Cuba to examine Haitians who go to the neighboring island to work of the utility of having themselves matriculated. That is the duty of our consuls and consuls in their respective jurisdictions.

I hope that since that time many of our compatriots have been in the consulate of Haiti at Santiago de Cuba. Please send to the department an extract of these immatriculations accompanied by a statement of the certificates which you have delivered. The letter of November 27 contains necessary instructions on the subject of inscription for which no fee is collected. So far as concerns the certificate, the emigrant who must not be obliged to require it. The option is left to him to request it of the department. And only the delivery of this certificate is subject to the application of the law of August 27, 1912.

The Government accords all its attention to emigration, becoming more important, of Haitian laborers to Cuba, and expects its agents to ensure them the protection to which they have right.

Accept, Mr. Consul, the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

MR. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

Ministerial Palace.

MR. MINISTER: I have the advantage to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 141, transmitting to me the letter of your colleague of foreign relations relating to the amounts collected for certificates of immatriculation.

I have noted from the letter of the department of foreign relations that the product of consular taxes collected by the public treasury during the fiscal year 1919-20, the following amounts figure as collected for certificates of immatriculation, divided as follows:

Santiago de Cuba	.....	$ 1,084
Guantanamo	.....
Antilla	.....
Total	.....	$ 1,084

or a total of $1,084, instead of $29,181, the amount which should have been collected according to the calculations of my office based on the number of emigrants having left Haiti for Cuba during the fiscal year 1919-20.

Your colleague gives as a probable reason for the nonrecovery of the whole totality of the taxes for certificates of immatriculation estimated at $29,181.

I would thank you to lend me your good offices near your colleague of foreign relations to know if, by virtue of the instructions of the department of foreign relations, the necessary diligences with a view to the registration of the consuls has been made, and in case of affirmative reply what amount has been paid for each registration of contract.

I have also noted that efforts have been made to obtain from Mr. Nazon account of taxes collected during his administration as consul at Santo Domingo, efforts which apparently came to and end with the letter of July 1, 1920, which the department of foreign relations addressed to him.

I would thank you to lend me also your good offices near your colleague of foreign relations to inform me if following the correspondence with the consul he received from Mr. Nazon the list and statements demanded in his letter of July 1, 1920, and if they have not been received what has been done to obtain them.

I profit by the occasion to call your attention to article 32 of the law of September 2, 1919.

Ministerial Palace.

MR. MINISTER: I have the advantage, referring to my letter No. E-15-22 of April 27, to inform you that I have noted the following paragraph of the letter of April 19, 1921, of your colleague of foreign relations to the department of finance:

"From a note of the accounting section of my department, it results the following amounts have been paid for certificates of immatriculation in Santiago de Cuba, $1,456; Guantanamo, $130; Antilla, $398 (check retained at department awaiting the detailed statement requested to be transmitted to the consul)."

I think it my duty to call your attention to the fact that the check retained at the department awaiting the statement requested to be transmitted to the consul is contrary to article 8 of the law fixing the budget of ways and means for the fiscal year 1919-20, prorogued for the fiscal year 1920-21, and I thank you to lend your good offices in order that a mandat d'exécution be issued in order to permit the payment of the sum of $1,456 into the public treasury without delay.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration

A. J. MAUMUS
Acting Financial Adviser

Complying with your request to return the documents communicated. I assure you that they will be returned to the department of finance and that they will not be kept by the office except for the time necessary to permit copies to be made.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FINANCE AND COMMERCE
Port au Prince, May 14

THE FINANCIAL ADVISER,
Port au Prince.

MR. ADVISER: Referring to my dispatch dated May 4, No. 156, and in reply to your two letters of the 3d and 6th of the same month, No. E-15-22, I have the advantage to send you under this cover copy of the dispatches of the 12th instant, which have been addressed to me by my colleague of foreign relations with respect to the receipts collected by the consuls and consular agents at Cuba.

The check of $398 mentioned in the last paragraph of the dispatch of the 12th to the department of foreign relations is transmitted to the Bar. tionale de la Republique d'Haiti, for all useful purposes. Pending the statement of taxes collected requested from the consul by the department of foreign relations, I shall not fail to direct the administrator of this arrondissement to issue a warrant for the cashing of this sum of $398.

Please accept, Mr. Adviser, the expression of my distinguished consideration.

J. CHARLES PRINCE

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN RELATIONS
Port au Prince, May 12 1920

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am in possession of your dispatches of the 10th of this month covering, the first, a copy of a letter of April 27, last, acting financial adviser regarding the receipts collected by our consular agents at Cuba; the second, copies of two other letters following the order indicated above.

The office writes:

"Concerning the proposition suggested by the department of foreign relations to send Mr. Denis to Cuba, I have to state that the Haitian Government maintains a diplomatic representative in that island and that is why the expense (that of $300) was not necessary in the opinion of the financial adviser."

The minister of foreign relations knew so well that the Haitian Government maintained a diplomatic representative at Cuba, that on May 27, 1920, he wrote to Mr. Fernand Hibbert, at that time chargé d'affaires, the following telegram:

"Advise immediately if you can go immediately to control and make an inventory on all the receipts collected by category taxes since commencement administration present consul, Santiago de Cuba."

But Mr. Fernand Hibbert, who had just obtained a permit to go to Cuba to undergo an operation, had already charged the consul of Haiti at Santiago de Cuba with the direction of the service at Habana during his absence. It seemed to us that this agent could not be his own controller. It is therefore by reason of the absence of the chargé d'affaires of Haiti at Habana that the department had decided to delegate Mr. Fernand Denis at Santiago de Cuba. So far as concerns the present situation of this post, the department was happy to have at its disposition the information of which it is a question in the letter from the office of the financial adviser. In so far as concerns the list bearing for each certificate issued the number, the date, the names of the beneficiaries, the department does not possess such a list. The sending of the part of the receipts pertaining to the public treasury is accompanied in practice by a statement which the minister of foreign relations transmits to that of finances.

In his letter of May 3 the acting financial adviser requests: (1) If the receipts have been registered at the consulate of Haiti, and in the affirmative

(b) To this deficit it is proper to add the amounts collected for immatriculation, which are $1 belonging to the public treasury on the 25,086 emigrants conformedly to the law and to the instructions of the Department of the Interior to the consuls in Cuba, or, $25,086.

Probable deficit----- unless there is comprised an amount for immatriculation taxes in the year 1921 under the head of consular fees shown in the accounts of the bank on January 31, 1921. In that case, I would thank you to inform me of the amount immatriculation to be deducted from the $11,282, in order to determine the exact deficit for passport and immatriculation duties during the fiscal year 1920-21 so far as concerns emigration.

(c) To this deficit it is proper to add the passport duties on passengers of first and second classes going to Cuba, in the West Indies and outside the West Indies, during the fiscal year 1920-21; this list can be made by the Department of the Interior, which will permit the fixation of the exact amount. "Passport and immatriculation duties for the fiscal year 1920-21."

I would thank you to be good enough to lend me your good offices near a colleague of the interior to send me the list of passports issued during the year 1920-21 mentioned in paragraph (c) of the present, in order to determine the exact figure of the deficit.

So far as concerns the established deficit of $2,396.15 mentioned in paragraph (a) of the present, I think it my duty to remind you that the tax of "passport duty" is due 24 hours after the departure of vessels by the companies.

As the proprietors and consignees of sailors which transport emigrants to Cuba can not be considered "navigation companies," in view of the fact that they pay neither patent nor license in that quality, and as their solvency in the State in so far as concerns the passport duties and the fines which they incur is doubtful, I suggest that the department of finance, with a view to safeguarding the interests of the public treasury, request the general revenue to issue instructions to the collectors of customs and commanders of ports to let any sailing vessel leave for the adjacent islands, unless the proprietors or consignees of these sailors present to them the receipt evidencing that they have paid the passport duties to the Banque Nationale de la Republique d'Haiti.

So far as concerns the companies, I suggest that they be reminded by the department of the provisions of the law relative to "passport duties." I suggest also that all measures be taken with a view to recovery of the $2,396.15 of "passport duties" mentioned in paragraph (a).

With regard to the deficit mentioned in paragraph (b) of the present, I draw your attention to the fact that the law provides that the consuls must render account through the department of foreign relations, in the first half of the month for the preceding month, and that the law of August 26, 1870, is the responsibility of public functionaries, and all other laws not contrary to the provisions of the said law, are in effect, as provided in article 32 of the law fixing the budget of expenses of the fiscal year 1919-20 prorogued for the fiscal year 1920-21.

In view of the preceding, I suggest that the department of finance in concert with the department of foreign relations take the necessary measures with a view to the collection of every amount due to the public treasury mentioned in paragraph (b) of the present.

Receive, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my perfect consideration.

A. J. MAUMUS, Acting Financial Administrator.

1. On the communication made to your office by the department of the interior of the copy of the letter of Mr. Urbina, agent of the United Fruit Co., in which letter he offered certain guaranties to the Haitian laborers who desired to engage for account of his company, did you reply to the office of the secretary of state for the interior "that the letter of Mr. Urbina constitutes no proof that he was engaging in emigration, and that this traffic, being prohibited now by the Haitian Government as well as by the Cuban Government, the collectors of customs would not permit the departure of the emigrants until Mr. Urbina had engaged at Port de Paix"?

In reply, while referring you to my letter No. 534, of January 16, 1922, addressed to your department in reply to your letter of January 12, 1922, I read as follows:

"I hasten to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 35, dated January 12, 1922. This office will not oppose the departure of Haitians with Cuban passports within the conditions of the law on passports, but it will be understood that the passports must be submitted by the holders personally to the control of the captains of the ports.

"However, I will request you to suspend the departure of these Haitians for the purpose of permitting this office to confer with the financial authorities suggestions which may be made with a view to an efficient protection of Haitians in Cuba.

"I shall insist all the more on this point as Mr. Barnave Dartigues, secretary of state titulaire of the department of the interior, agreed in conference with this office that a project of law would be submitted to the sanction of the council of state, a law establishing the conditions of Haitian emigration.

"Public opinion, justly desolated by the disastrous conditions imposed on Cuba by the employers upon our fellow citizens, has demanded for a long time that a law on emigration protecting the emigrants be adopted by the Haitian legislators, and this office strongly believes that no emigration should be permitted until the Haitian laborers shall be efficiently protected against the fulfillment of engagements such as those of Mr. Urbina, representative of the United Fruit Co., as mentioned in your letter which is the subject of this correspondence.

"The hard lesson of the past, Haitians thrown on the Cuban coast, debarked in Haiti in a disgraceful situation, are there to demand that the public powers in Haiti themselves establish the conditions of Haitian labor and strictly see to their faithful observance?

"This office requests of you in the special case of Mr. Urbina to require of this agent deposit at least $25 for each Haitian who agrees to work in the establishments of the United Fruit Co.

"The consuls of Haiti in Cuba should be well instructed in their obligations toward Haitians, and the Government should require of them the accomplishment of their duties.

"Please accept, etc."

I inform you that my opinion has not since changed; that is, the letter addressed by the department of the interior to Mr. Urbina, No. 11 C. S., of January 12, 1922, of which you were good enough to send a copy under the cover of your letter, No. 33, of January 12, constitutes a reply to that he desired to engage in emigration. In effect this letter reads as follows:

"The office of the secretary of state for the interior acknowledges receipt of your letter of January 9, soliciting in your capacity of authorized representative of the 'United Fruit Co.' authorization to engage during the next harvest for account of that company, and on its responsibility and agree to express conditions the Haitian laborers necessary to the operation of sugar centrals in Cuba.

"The office of the secretary of state for the interior notes the formal declaration which you make in the name of the United Fruit Co. and by virtue of your powers to offer to the Government of Haiti all the securities and guaranties which may be required of you to assure good treatment, equitable remuneration, healthful food, and return to their respective homes of all those who wish to engage to go to work in your centrals, and who shall remain under the protection of the United Fruit Co. until the completion of the work.

"The office of the secretary of state for the interior notes also that the United Fruit Co., which you say has never failed in its engagements with Haitian laborers, does not come to establish a recruiting agency nor to make any gilded offer to the said laborer, but comes solely and exclusively to place its large ships at the disposal of those who desire voluntarily to contract

"It is well understood in this case that passports must be submitted personally to the examination of the captains of the ports.

"These requirements are adopted in awaiting a law regulating emigration.

"Please accept, etc.

"P. S.—The office of the secretary of state for the interior not having had occasion to deliver to Mr. Urbina, agent of the United Fruit Co., the letter which it had written on January 12 and of which it sent you a copy, request you to be good enough to consider it as null and void."

So far as concerns paragraph (b), in response to the request of your division, I replied that your letter formed part of my records; that I thank him to make this communication officially to me in writing, that it was done by your letter No. 330 R 11 C. S. of January 20, above reproduced.

And so far as concerns paragraph (c), the "P. S." of your letter No. 330 R 11 C. S., above mentioned, if it did not recall formally the said letter, informed me that it must be considered as null and void, which to me is sufficient to recall, the letter having become without purpose by the fact that the conditions of engagement proposed by Mr. Urbina, accepted at first by the department of the interior under certain conditions, had just been revoked by the said department.

Before this new situation, which brought about a return to the situation mentioned in the first paragraph of my letter No. 534 of January 16, above reproduced, I wrote you my letter No. 889 of January 24, 1922, which reads as follows:

"I acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 330 R 11 C. S., dated January 20, 1922, by which you inform me that the secretary of state for the interior had occasion to deliver to Mr. Urbina, agent of the United Fruit Co., the letter which it had written to him on January 12 and of which it had sent you a copy, and you request me to be good enough to consider this letter as null and void.

"Following therefore your request contained in the third paragraph of your letter of January 12, No. 33, I would thank you to send me the lists and numbers of the passports from time to time as they are issued in favor of Haitians to Cuban destinations, for the purpose of giving to the collector at Port de Paix the necessary instructions to permit the embarkation of these men.

"Please accept, etc."

To that letter the department of the interior wrote me, under date of January 23, 1922, the following:

"I have the advantage to send you under this cover list No. 1 of passports issued in favor of free travelers who are to go to Cuba by the steamer Las Damas, of the Preston Co. (Cuba).

"It commences from No. 260 to 1259 (Port de Paix).

"Please accept, etc."

In accordance with its letter, by the mail of January 27, 1922, I wrote the collector of customs at Port de Paix my letter No. 893, as follows:

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT PORT DE PAIX:

Subject: Departure of Haitians with Cuban destinations.

Reference: Telegram of this office to your office, dated January 25, 1922.

1. I transmit to you under this cover list No. 1 of 999 passports sent to the secretary of state for the interior to the court of Port de Paix for Haitians with Cuban destinations.

2. This list has the names and surnames of the passengers and the numbers of their passports. (Nos. 260 to 1259.)

3. This office confirms its telegram of January 25, 1922, requesting you to inform it by virtue of what authority you permitted the embarkation of these men according to your telegram of January 22, 1922.

A. J. A.

You will please note that the telegram mentioned in the reference letter reads as follows:

COLLECTOR CUSTOMS,

Port de Paix:

Emigration being prohibited, you will rigorously apply the law to all those who desire to travel abroad. You must assure yourself that the passport has been delivered directly to the interested party by the department of the interior and require that he present himself personally at the search in the books and office registers, and relating to the periods demanded by your letter of last month.

"I send you herewith the statement, in order of date and number. Consul St. Aude has just sent to me, relative to the immatriculations, that the department will find there something useful. Consul St. Aude's letter dated July 9, of which a copy will be sent to the department, he has not found the account book of the consulate, adding that it is his registration which has opened a book of receipts.

"So far as concerns the other consular services I have just addressed to their different chiefs; I will not fail to inform the department of the results when they shall be made.

"I must not fail to say to the chief of the department that I remain at the orders of the Government to leave my post if necessary and to go to very sites of the different posts, to proceed to an investigation more and more conclusive.

"If the department judges it necessary, I permit myself to say to it to forget the indispensable expenses of traveling.

"It is only yesterday, July 13, that I have been able to collect my salary for the month of June, $305, order of the bank at Port au Prince, from which have even been deducted $3.80 for expenses of cabling, the bank here had on my insistence to request orders."

The statement in question was sent to you under the cover of my letter September 15, 1921. I remit to you herewith a new copy of this document. With my distinguished sentiments.

article 5 of the treaty, a sufficient amount from the customs revenues for the service of certain debts, including all of the external debts. All since September 30, 1920, have been met on the due date. Briefly, the service of the external debt was due to insufficient revenues for the debt service and the current running expenses of the Haitian Government. In order that those current expenses might be paid the debt service was suspended.

You ask "Why under the contemplated loan provision was made foreign but not Haitian claims against the Haitian Government." The of October 3, 1919, authorizes a $40,000,000 30-year 6 per cent loan. It could have been floated at that time, would have been sufficient to a cash all indebtedness, foreign and Haitian, including claims. From the the intervention a loan for that purpose had been a part of the program economic rehabilitation of Haiti. It was considered and discussed during administration of Admiral Caperton; my predecessor, Mr. Ruan, made unsuccessful efforts to float it in the United States; and I spent some in the United States immediately following the conclusion of the program effort which was likewise unsuccessful, in that no proposal for a loan could be obtained on terms which I considered advantageous. The bankers with whom I conferred at that time were unanimously of opinion that it would be impossible to sell a 30-year 6 per cent Haitian loan but stated that they thought it possible to float a loan in the form of 5-year bearing interest of 7½ per cent. I therefore returned to Haiti in 1919, and discussed the matter with the Council of Secretaries of State decided in January, 1920, to abandon for the time being the idea of a loan and endeavor to float a short-term loan which would enable Haiti to fund its foreign debt and thus avail itself of the enormous depreciation in franc, profiting to the extent of approximately 66⅔ per cent of the nominal value of the external loans, and similarly reducing the future interest on this portion of its public debt by converting that portion of it from franc to dollars. It was also the desire of the Haitian Government not to extend its internal funded and floating debt, which would be the result if the were paid in cash from the proceeds of a bond issue floated abroad.

For these reasons it was decided to endeavor to float a short-term loan secured by bonds of the long-term loan authorized by the protocol, in an amount sufficient to freund the foreign debt, to pay a short-term note to the E. Nationale due December 31, 1921, which there was no prospect of paying from current revenues, to pay the arrears of interest guaranty due on the railroad bonds floated in France, and to leave a small amount for payment of cash of claims and for urgently needed public improvements, and to do so by an issue of $5,000,000 in internal 30-year bonds the internal funded floating debts and the majority of the claims which might be adjudicated being in accord with the policy of not exteriorizing the internal debt if it be avoided. Efforts in the early part of 1920 to float such a loan were wise unsuccessful and were suspended pending an improvement in the market, whereupon I returned to Haiti in May. In September, 1920, the Department of State having expressed the opinion that the time was now ripe for resuming loan negotiations, and the desire that I come to Washington that purpose, the matter of the terms of the loan and its size were taken up with the Haitian Government, which indicated its willingness to authorize the flotation of a short-term loan similarly secured, for the purposes, and for a similar amount, upon conditions. In compliance with instructions of the Department of State I came to the United States in 1920, for conference regarding the loan and the conditions mentioned, and since remained here. It will be seen from the above that it has always contemplated to pay the internal debts and claims of Haiti at the same time the foreign debts, the only change from the original program being that the bonds are to be issued in payment of these internal debts and claims, a change having been made in order to conform to the repeatedly expressed desire of the Haitian Government that its internal debt be not exteriorized during the presidential campaign and until the new administration took office. determined upon its Haitian policy, no banking group could be induced to submit a proposal on a Haitian loan. Proposals were recently obtained for term bonds secured as above indicated, and later for long-term bonds in the same amount as the projected short-term bonds, on terms deemed acceptable by the Haitian Government, which has indicated its preference for the acceptance of one of the proposals upon conditions which are still the subject of action.

been made in the customs duties, and no change can be made in them which would reduce the product of the revenues from any of the important sources, because these revenues have nearly all (about 75 per cent) been pledged specifically to the service of various debts. So long as the debts secured by the product of these specific pledges of revenue are not paid or refunded, creating that revenue can not be changed. This applies primarily to the customs revenues, the former pledges of the principal sources of internal revenue, the retirement of the paper money having been released by the retirement of that money. Nor has there been any change in the internal revenue laws, either as to their supervisory or taxation features, with one exception. This exception was the placing in effect in August, 1921, under the pressure of an imminent deficit in amounts available to meet current expenses, of certain laws which had been on the statute books for, I think, more than 10 years but had not therefore been enforced. So far as I can ascertain from the statements of collections received from Haiti, the immediate result of forcing these laws was the collection of about $50,000 which would not have been collected otherwise. I am of the opinion that with an efficient administration of the existing internal-revenue laws, without amendment or change in their texts, at least $1,000,000 annually could be collected instead of the $360,000 collected last year. The financial adviser has no function in the matter of collection, assessment, or the administration of the revenues; it is his duty under the treaty to "recommend improved methods of collecting and applying the revenues," but he has no power to effect such improvements. A project of an internal-revenue law, approved by the Department of State, which would, it was believed, have produced about $2,000,000 annually, was presented to the Haitian Government by my predecessor and rejected. After I became financial adviser I took up the matter of the enactment of an internal-revenue law proposed by my predecessor with the Minister of Finance and was advised by him that the Haitian Government was definitely opposed to the enactment of the law. While these conferences were going forward, he drafted and presented for my consideration an internal-revenue law which maintained the administration of the internal revenues under Haitian control, and further provided for the establishment of a bureau of accounts in his office solely under Haitian control. After careful consideration I found it impossible to approve this law, and so notified him.

Later both these projects were submitted to the foreign trade adviser of the Department of State by me and subjected to a critical study; a memorandum was prepared suggesting modifications of both projects on the basis of a proposed internal-revenue law for the Haitian Government. This memorandum was presented informally to the Haitian minister to the United States, with the request that he lay it before his government for its consideration and criticism. No action having been taken, and the internal revenues having fallen off last year to an alarming degree, due to the economic depression, the Haitian Government was informed by me of the approval of the Department of State, that if the administrative provisions of the financial adviser's project were adopted (providing for American supervision of assessment and collection), the taxation schedules of the Haitian Government (generally lower and producing less revenue) would be approved. No action has been taken by the Haitian Government. The export customs duties are intolerably burdensome and should be reduced or wholly eliminated. Import duties are likewise burdensome, and the burden is inequitably distributed, luxuries being lightly taxed and necessities heavily taxed. The revenues, however, constitute 90 per cent of the total revenue of Haiti. In the absence of internal-revenue legislation, adequate as to administrative provisions and taxation schedules to insure the collection of sufficient internal revenue to offset the loss in customs revenue, which would result from a proper administration of the customs-revenue laws, it is impossible to make such a revision apart from the further obstacle to revision resulting from the existing specific pledges of revenue previously mentioned.

Answering your final query, I was appointed financial adviser on March 27, 1919, and have actually resided in Port au Prince during the following periods: March 27, 1919, to October 15, 1919; December 27, 1919, to January 15, 1920; May 31, 1920, to October 18, 1920.

The first two trips to the United States were for the purpose of securing a loan, as indicated above, and at the specific request and with the authorization of the Haitian Government; the present stay in the United States is for bonds; and (3) an income tax of 4 per cent per annum on interest and dividends on bonds and stock distributed by corporations; of 4 per cent on profits of foreign merchants or business men; and of 2 per cent on profits of Haitian merchants or business men, this income tax being based upon the annual profits shown in their annual balance sheets, or in the absence of a balance sheet upon an amount five times the annual rental or rent value of the premises used in the business.

I am unable to answer the question as to the estimated product of these taxes. The laws were on the statute books 18 years before they produced revenue to the State. There are certainly no data here and so far as I am aware none in Haiti upon which to base an estimate. The product under the application of the laws should have been large.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, I understand that you have a statement in indication of a part of your testimony given last week?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Will you make that statement to the committee now?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; I was asked if the private loans to which I referred in my testimony of last Thursday were floated at a discount. Possibly they may have been construed as meaning that they were floated at par. Treasury notes issued as evidence of debts so incurred do not show on their face that the loans were contracted at a discount, but it is unreasonable to suppose that private loans effected without authority of law could be floated when the Government a few months before had been compelled to float its public loans formally authorized by law at great discounts. In practice, in such cases there is little to show what the Government received or that it received anything for these treasury notes. The last commission of verification of the floating debt had a few of these notes before it; where it was shown that all or a part of the amount was actually received by the Government the notes were accepted as to the part received by the Government and rejected as to the remainder; if it could not be shown that anything was received the notes were rejected in toto. It is assumed that the claims commission to be appointed under the protocol of October 3, 1919, will follow a similar procedure, and the holder of any such note will have to show that value was received by the Government and the holder will be awarded that value and no more.

I have here the report of the verification commission, which I do not wish to file with the committee; but on these bons du Trésor there is a schedule in this book [indicating] of the amount accepted and the amount rejected by the commission; and it bears out the statement which I have just made.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. McIlhenny, yesterday one of the members of the committee asked you to prepare a memorandum in elaboration of your statement of yesterday, that the burden of the taxation is on the poor peasant in Haiti. I understand that you have such a memorandum. Will you please read it?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Yesterday the committee requested an elaboration of my statement that the burden of taxation in Haiti bears most heavily upon the peasant. At present 70 per cent of the revenue of Haiti is from customs import and export duties. The total customs revenue for the fiscal year 1919-20, the latest year for which detailed statistics are available here, was $6,414,605.82, of which about 40 per cent was on exports, the specific duties on exports being the following: coffee, $3 per 100 pounds; coffee culls, $2.50 per 100 pounds; coffee roasted, $3 per 100 pounds, less 20 per cent; cacao, $1.75 per 100 pounds, plus 30 per cent; beans, $1.50 per 1,000 pounds; lignum vitae, $1 per 1,000 pounds; skins of cattle, $2 per 100 pounds; skins of goats, $2 per 100 pounds; cedar, $1 per 1,000 pounds; yellow wood, $1.50 per 1,000 pounds; mahogany, $3 per 100 feet, plus 30 per cent; lignum vitae gum, 50 cents per 100 pounds, plus 30 per cent; old cowrie shells, $2 per 100 pounds, plus 30 per cent; pitre, $1 per 100 pounds, plus 30 per cent; shells, 10 cents per pound, plus 30 per cent.

I think no one will question the economic principle that the burden of the export tax in the case of raw agricultural products rests upon the producer, the peasant. Even in the case of roasted coffee the reduction of 20 per cent (intended to encourage an industry in Haiti, but having had no apparent effect) does not accrue to the peasant in that he does not receive any price for the raw coffee bought for roasting, but the reduction accrues to the roaster. The price of raw coffee paid to the peasant, like all other agricultural products, is determined by the price which it will bring in foreign markets.

fixed in the decree to 21,705,900 francs and authorized an additional of 4,254,380 francs in settlement of unpaid interest on the bonds pursuant to the decree, which interest was also scaled down, making a total of 25,960,380 francs as the capital of the loan of 1875, as finally fixed in 1875.

The loan of 1896 for 50,000,000 francs, interest 6 per cent, term 37 years, was sold to the contracting bank at 80, a cost to the Haitian Government of 7.6 per cent. It was sold by the bank to the public at 90 a profit of 10 points.

The loan of 1910 for 65,000,000 francs, interest 5 per cent, term 50 years, sold to the contracting bank at 73.20, a cost to Haiti of 7.1 per cent. It was sold to the public at 88.50 a profit to the bank of 15.3 points.

The proposed loan of 1922 is for $16,000,000, interest 6 per cent, term 50 years, for which I have an offer of 85, a cost to Haiti of 7.25 per cent. As stated before, this was a firm offer for a limited period, and is now under a basis of negotiation. I assume that the final offer, depending on market conditions when the Haitian Government shall finally decide to float a loan, will be about five points less than the price at which it is decided that the loan will be sold to the public, instead of the difference of 10 or 15.3 points of 1910 to the contracting bank in the case of the French loans, and if the improved condition of the bond market continues, I have no doubt that the consent of the Haitian Government is given, a better offer from American bankers will be forthcoming. At any rate, considering conditions and Haiti's credit when the existing loans were floated, and comparing with those conditions and Haiti's credit now, I believe the present offer is much more advantageous to Haiti than it would obtain from the French bank which, by a contract antedating American intervention was given a monopoly of all foreign loans. I desire to note that the obtaining from this bank of a relinquishment of this monopoly so far as concerns loans floated in the United States only, is an achievement of the American intervention.

Professor Kelsey's report touches upon the cost of foreign government financing done in this country, and shows that Haiti is getting as good terms as it could reasonably expect, in view of its financial condition. As I recall the terms originally offered Haiti compared very favorably with the terms at which other foreign government financing was being done in this country at the time the offers were made.

The prices paid to other governments or by other bankers at about the same time as the Lee, Higginson & Co. proposal for the Haitian loan was made by me are not a matter of public information, but the prices at which the loans were offered to the public affords a sufficient basis for comparison as follows:

Date.	Name of issue.	Selling price to public
Aug. 30, 1921	$25,000,000 United States of Brazil noncallable 8 per cent external gold bonds, 1941.....	90 1/2
Oct. 7, 1921	$12,000,000 State of Queensland sinking fund external 7 per cent gold loan, 1941.....	90
Oct. 7, 1921	$12,000,000 City of Rio de Janeiro sinking fund 8 per cent gold bonds, 1946.....	90 1/2

Nov. 15, 1921	$10,000,000 State of Rio Grande do Sul 8 per cent external sinking fund gold bonds, 1946.....	90 1/2

The offer of Lee, Higginson & Co., made November 8, 1921, was for $16,000,000 Republic of Haiti 6 per cent external sinking fund gold bonds, maturing in 1951, at 85, or a presumed selling price to the public of about 90, and a cost to the investor of 6.80.

I should also like to submit, Mr. Chairman, a comparative statement of the years 1913 and 1914 with 1919, 1920, and 1921, as follows:

Comparative 10-year table of foreign trade—Continued.

1. Excess of imports.

Mr. HOWE. That is all the questions I have to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Angell, have you any questions?

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. McIlhenny, you have been financial adviser of the Haitian Government for about three years now?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you tell us what proportion of your time you have spent in Haiti? I do not care about the exact dates of your trips back and forth.

Mr. McILHENNY. Well, I can answer it, it seems to me, more definitely giving you the dates.

Mr. ANGELL. All right.

Mr. McILHENNY. I went down to Haiti first on March 27, 1919, and remained there until October 15, 1919. I then came to the United States, and returned to Haiti on the 27th of December, 1919, and remained there until January 1, 1920, returning again to the United States, and returning to Haiti on May 1, 1920, where I remained until October 18, 1920; since October 18, 1920, I have been in the United States.

Mr. ANGELL. So you have not been to Haiti since October, 1920?

Mr. McILHENNY. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. How has the work of the office of the financial adviser with the Haitian Government been carried down in that period of one year and six months that you have been up here?

Mr. McILHENNY. When I left Haiti, I left my chief of office, Mr. Ochs, my office, and my chief Haitian assistant, Mr. Pressoir, who is a brother of the present Minister of Finance, and one Haitian clerk; and I requested Mr. Maumus to assume the position of acting financial adviser in my absence.

Since I have left Haiti the routine work of the office has been carried on under the supervision of Mr. Maumus, and all matters of serious moment, such as the allotment of revenues and all questions of policy, have been referred to him in Washington.

Mr. ANGELL. How about the preparation of the budget?

Mr. McILHENNY. The preparation of the budget was suspended by me when I left Haiti and has never been taken up since.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there no budget adopted for the year 1920-21; or was that adopted in the spring of 1920, before you left Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. No. I suspended the consideration of the budget for 1920-21 when the consideration of the budget for 1920-21 was a little more than completed.

Mr. ANGELL. When you left?

Mr. McILHENNY. Before I left.

Mr. ANGELL. That budget has never been formally completed?

Mr. McILHENNY. That budget has never been completed. And the budget for the previous year was prorogued to provide for the necessary expenses of the Government.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, there never has been any budget formally adopted for the year 1920-21 nor for the year 1921-22?

Mr. McILHENNY. Well, they were prorogued again for the year 1922-23. It was the formal adoption of the budget of 1920, to serve the needs of the Government for the next two years.

Mr. ANGELL. And several such laws which have purported to change the provisions have been rejected by the American Legation, have they not?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And this same Blue Book, to which you have just referred, the Haitian Government, 1921, contains correspondence, does it not, remember, regarding such instances of approval and rejection?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not remember, because I have not gone over carefully. I think it does.

Mr. ANGELL. What is the degree of control, Mr. McIlhenny, exercised by financial adviser over the actual expenditures, in addition to this approval of the budget to which you have just referred?

Mr. McILHENNY. During the régime of my predecessor, Mr. Romaine, agreement was reached with the Haitian Government that all warrants of payment, as they term them, "justifying pieces," or receipted bills, should be forwarded to the office of the financial adviser for his consideration and then to be presented to the bank for payment. A copy of this agreement was found on page 36 of the Blue Book published by the Haitian Government in 1921.

Mr. ANGELL. And is that agreement to which you have just referred followed in practice?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. All expenditures of the Government are first approved by financial adviser before they are paid from the funds of the Government deposited at the bank?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Has the Haitian Government made any demand or request, as financial adviser, for a formal preparation of a budget for the two fiscal years?

Mr. McILHENNY. It raised serious objection to my suspension of consideration of the budget at the time I did so—I think in July.

Mr. ANGELL. That is, the budget of 19—

Mr. McILHENNY. 1920-21.

Mr. ANGELL. 1920-21. What was the ground and the nature of the objection?

Mr. McILHENNY. The ground or nature of their objection?

Mr. ANGELL. Of their objection.

Mr. McILHENNY. I will put it in this way: They found objection to my suspension of the budget because they considered that it was necessary that the budget should be written for each year to meet the necessary expenses of the Government, and from the consideration of that portion of the budget that had already gone forward it appeared that, if the previous budget was rejected, a number of items which I was willing to include in a new budget would be left out.

Mr. ANGELL. Because not provided for in the previous budget?

Mr. McILHENNY. Because not provided for in the previous budget.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt? Will you give us a synonym for "previous budget"? What does that mean?

Mr. McILHENNY. Validating a budget which already exists.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not complete. You mean to carry into effect the second year an appropriation voted for the year preceding?

Mr. McILHENNY. To carry into effect for a second year a budget which has been voted in a previous year.

The CHAIRMAN. For a previous year?

Mr. McILHENNY. For a previous year.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it provided for by law, or has it been a practice established merely by custom, that a budget shall be considered and adopted by a certain date in each year?

Mr. McILHENNY. The council of state—the legislature—meets the first day in April, and I think it is in session three months. That session is extended for a period of 30 days by executive action, and if the budget is enacted at the regular session of the council of state, it should be completed within the period I have just named.

Mr. ANGELL. Prior to the termination of the session?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. In writing my first budget so much time was taken up in the consideration of its many items as to extend its consideration beyond the 90 days set by law.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, the period for the consideration of the budget is set by law?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; I had no power to prorogue it. The President of the Republic was the only one who had authority to do that.

Mr. ANGELL. And he did carry it over?

Mr. McILHENNY. He did carry over the previous budget, with the approval and consent. It was not my purpose at any time to put at the administration of the Government of Haiti, or attempt to do more, bring before them very forcibly the necessity of enacting certain legislation withdrawing certain legislation, the first of which was greatly to the detriment of Haiti, and the second to the detriment of Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. And to bring about that result you refused to proceed with the consideration of the budget for that year?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, what was the purpose, Mr. McIlhenny, of your coming to the United States in October, 1920, and why have you been in this country a year and five or six months, rather than in Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. My coming to the United States in 1920 was at the request of the State Department that I return to the United States with it, and to begin negotiations for a loan for the Republic of Haiti. I considered the bond market at that time in such a favorable condition as to make possible the beginning again of those negotiations which I had left off in the May preceding.

Mr. ANGELL. When you returned to Haiti from the United States?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. So you came upon orders from the State Department?

Mr. McILHENNY. I came upon orders from the State Department. It was my judgment at that time that it would be better for me to return to Haiti for a short time, until I persuaded the Haitian Government to give me authority to float the loan without the restrictions which they had around the proposal which they had made to grant me authority.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, what restriction, in this connection, had the Haitian Government placed upon your authority to negotiate a loan in its behalf?

Mr. McILHENNY. The modifications, or the restrictions, which the Haitian Government placed on giving me authority for the flotation of a loan at that time were that I should agree to certain changes in the protocol.

Mr. ANGELL. The instrument of October, 1919?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; the instrument of October, 1919. And I would agree that the internal bond issues should not be subject to a claims commission, and that I would further agree that the service on the internal bond issue should be immediately resumed.

Mr. ANGELL. Within those limitations of authority did you have power to negotiate a loan in its behalf?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; they said they would give me authority if I agreed to those restrictions.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you agree?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; I could not.

Mr. ANGELL. So you never received from the Haitian Government power to negotiate a loan in its behalf?

Mr. McILHENNY. I did not at that time. I had received prior to that authority to float a loan for the Haitian Government. That prior authority was granted in October, 1919, when I came to the United States at the request of the Haitian Government to float a loan. And while that formal authority was granted by the council of the secretaries of state was received, I considered that, by reason of letters which I had received from the minister of finance, in which he stated that it was the desire of the Haitian Government that the protocol should be abrogated, and that it was the desire of the Haitian Government that it was no longer necessary to float a loan—in view of the two statements I thought it was wise that I should receive from the Haitian Government renewed powers to float a loan.

Mr. ANGELL. You are now referring to the period in the fall of 1920?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; just before I came to the States. I had had correspondence with the minister of finance on the subject, and the result of that correspondence, as I told you before, was that he gave me authority to float a loan in a smaller amount than the prior authority had authorized. I provided that I would agree to certain changes in the protocol.

Senator POMERENE. Agree to what? I did not understand that.

Mr. McILHENNY. To certain changes in the protocol and that the bond issue should not be required to go before the claims commission.

Mr. McILHENNY. An impasse follows, unless it is possible for the financial adviser to persuade the Haitian Government to agree to the policies established.

Mr. ANGELL. Have there been any impasses reached actually since 1920?

Mr. McILHENNY. October, 1920?

Mr. ANGELL. During the period that you have been continuously in the States?

Mr. McILHENNY. Well, not since that time especially. The impasse established before I came here.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you a question there: During your long residence in the United States how have you been able to take counsel with the President of Haiti, or the minister of finance in Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. Through the acting financial adviser.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, then, de facto, and not de jure, he is the financial adviser of the Haitian Government, and you are the fiscal agent of the Haitian Government in the United States?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not think that that is quite correct, Mr. Chairman: I refer questions to me, with his correspondence on that question with the Haitian Government, so that I may be cognizant of his attitude and desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, do you believe that the financial adviser to the Haitian Government normally should choose Washington as his post of duty?

Mr. McILHENNY. Certainly not. And my remaining here has been a concession entirely to my own wishes.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not reflecting upon your conduct.

Mr. McILHENNY. No; I am answering in this way so that you might understand, sir, that I am fully in accord with the suggestion which has arisen from your question. The financial adviser should be resident in Haiti; but there has been a very unusual combination of circumstances which has it seems wise to have him remain here for the months that he has been here.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that I may ask a second question in connection with the period of your service under the Haitian Government, when were you appointed financial adviser, or when were you nominated as financial adviser to the President of the United States?

Mr. McILHENNY. I think it was on the 27th. I gave that date in my report to you.

The CHAIRMAN. I know.

Mr. McILHENNY. The 27th of January.

The CHAIRMAN. Of what year.

Mr. McILHENNY. 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. Since then, how many chiefs, or acting chiefs of the Latin American Bureau of the State Department have there been?

Mr. McILHENNY. Mr. Stabler was the chief when I was first appointed; he was succeeded by Dr. Rowe. Dr. Rowe was succeeded by Mr. Welles. Mr. Welles was absent for a number of months, and in his absence Dr. Munro acted. Mr. Welles bade me good-bye yesterday, telling me that his service to the Government of the United States had ended yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Welles.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is acting now?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not know that anyone has been formally assigned, but Dr. Munro, I think, is acting.

The CHAIRMAN. We change chiefs of the Latin American bureau and the gendarmerie of the Marine Corps as rapidly as the Haitians change Presidents, do we not?

Mr. McILHENNY. It is, Mr. Chairman, the most disastrous thing for the continuity of administration.

The CHAIRMAN. We have as many responsible officers as we have Presidents.

Mr. McILHENNY. This simple question of finances which I am supposed to be in charge of in Haiti is not simple, but very complex; it can only be understood by most careful and painstaking study. And it is not possible for the administration in Washington to have a sound knowledge of Haiti's financial needs, and her desires as well, with the continual change that is going on in that division.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not mean to interrupt you. You may proceed.

shall, pursuant to the provisions of Article V of said treaty, receive compensations as follows:

"Financial adviser: $6,000 United States currency, per annum, for said $4,000 United States currency, per annum, for personal expenses."

The allowance for personal expenses is stipulated as a part of the contract and has never been construed by my predecessor, the Haitian Government or myself as in any respect intended to cover the traveling or other expenses of the financial adviser or of his office.

Mr. ANGELL. How much longer do you think it is going to be necessary proper for you as financial adviser to remain in this country, rather than returning to Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. It is impossible for me to give you an answer there, Mr. Angell. I have been hoping—the Government and the financial adviser have been in constant communication with the Haitian Government, trying to persuade them to agree to send the final authority to the financial adviser to a conclusion as to this loan. That correspondence and negotiation has been going on steadily, and particularly since last November, when we received an offer from a group of bankers in New York which seemed to be acceptable major provisions, and which would have enabled us to put out the bonds for the loan and retire the French loans at a very advantageous discount.

Mr. ANGELL. Until that loan question is settled, then you think the presence is required in Washington?

Mr. McILHENNY. Much more required here than there.

Mr. ANGELL. One more question on that matter of allowance: How was the $15 per day determined? Was that agreed upon in the contract with the Haitian Government?

Mr. McILHENNY. No. I found that that was an allowance which has been established by my predecessor, Mr. Ruan, and no question had been raised by the Haitian Government as to that amount, and I used that as a precedent in establishing it for myself.

Mr. ANGELL. It was just carried over into your term of office?

Mr. McILHENNY. The same procedure; yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Before we began the formal session this morning, Mr. McIlhenny, you will remember that we were discussing a matter which I said I was going to bring up in the hearing. Will you tell us in that connection some of the particular problems which were involved in the several offers of the Haitian Government?

Senator POMERENE (Interposing). Particular what? You said particular thing.

Mr. ANGELL. Particular problems involved in the several offers of loans to the Haitian Government, or to you as its financial adviser, last fall at the early part of the winter, particularly the question of the security for the short-term notes?

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Angell, just for clarity, you mean offers made by banks and financial groups?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, I do.

Mr. McILHENNY. In answering that, Mr. Angell, I think I ought to refer to my negotiations in 1920, when I came here at the direct request of the Haitian Government to float a loan.

I found then that the financial condition of the country, the bond market, was such as to make it impossible for me to float a loan of $30,000,000 in 6 per cent 30-year bonds.

Mr. ANGELL. As provided for in the protocol?

Mr. McILHENNY. As was contemplated by the protocol. I discussed the matter of the loan with all of the leading groups of bankers in New York, and they confirmed the opinion that was given to me by the National City Bank, whom I was chiefly advising at that time, which was that while it was possible to put out a 30-year 6 per cent bond, it might be quite possible to put out short-term notes to the amount necessary to retire the external loans, what were then the prevailing rates of interest, 7½ to 8 per cent. I then returned to Haiti and laid the matter before the Haitian Government. They asked them to authorize me to put out short-term notes, at 7 or 7½ per cent. They did so, and I returned to the United States and began negotiating on that basis.

Mr. ANGELL. In October, 1920, you are now referring to?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; I am talking about January, 1920.

The last clause of article 10 of the protocol provides—

"That the Government of Haiti further agrees to enact such legislation as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions of this protocol."

Mr. ANGELL. Before you made that correction you were speaking of the National City Bank's offer and the question of security for the short-term bonds.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. The National City Bank's first offer provided $21,000,000 of the 6 per cent 30-year bonds as collateral. Therefore the offer to the Government of Haiti at that time appeared to be for, I think, $14,000,000 of 7½ per cent notes of five years' duration, behind which there would be collateral, $21,000,000 of 6 per cent 30-year bonds. If I have made an error in stating what this offer was I should like to correct it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. McILHENNY. Because I have not thought on the subject of this offer some time. I have stated already, Mr. Angell, the purpose of the issuance of 30-year 6 per cent bonds which were to be used as collateral. It was understood that those bonds were to remain the property of the State.

Mr. ANGELL. The Haitian State?

Mr. McILHENNY. The Haitian State; that the interest which accrued on these bonds would be paid, and be used in such amount as necessary to pay interest on the 7½ per cent short-term notes.

Mr. ANGELL. So that there would not be an actual double payment of interest both on the 6 per cent bonds and on the 7½ per cent notes by the Haitian State?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; it would be purely a book transaction; the collateral bonds belong to the Haitian State; the interest accruing belongs to the Haitian State.

Mr. ANGELL. And to whom would the interest be paid in the first instance on those 30-year collateral bonds?

Mr. McILHENNY. The interest would be paid to the fiscal agent holding bonds as collateral, or the trust company that might hold the bonds as collateral.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt you to ask if the proposal or the bill of Mr. McIlhenny and Mr. Angell are discussing is before the financial advisory day for acceptance?

Mr. McILHENNY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then why take the time of the committee to discuss a no longer being considered?

Mr. ANGELL. That point has been raised and there has been considerable discussion about the terms of these offers and how far they would tie up the Haitian finances, and I thought that should be cleared up one way or another.

The CHAIRMAN. I think if you consider the offers which are now before the financial adviser, if there be offers before him, that will satisfy any inquiry which Mr. Angell may seek to make.

Mr. ANGELL. What offers, if any, are actually pending for consideration at the present time, and have the terms of those offers been made public?

Mr. McILHENNY. I received three offers. One from the National City Bank which was an amendment of their first offer; one from Speyer & Co., and one from Lee, Higginson & Co. The offer of Speyer & Co. was also an amendment of their first offer. All three of these offers were communicated to the Haitian Government and the Haitian Government, after considering them, has expressed a preference for the offer of Lee, Higginson & Co. And I am in agreement with the preference as expressed.

I understand, therefore, that the other offers are rejected, and that other offers are not to be expected at this time.

Mr. ANGELL. Is the offer of Lee, Higginson & Co. to be considered as having been accepted?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; not accepted. The Lee, Higginson & Co. offer was made, I think, in the first part of November. In making it they stated that they did not make a firm commitment for an indefinite period of time, but could do so for a very short period of time; but that they understood that, if their offer was acceptable in its general specifications and in its general terms, it would be a basis for negotiation at such time as the Haitian Government determined to finally authorize the financial adviser to go forward with the definite negotiation of the loan.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt just a second? Has the change in the financial conditions since the time the offer was first submitted made it probable that the modifications in detail would be to the advantage or to the disadvantage of the Haitian Government?

and I may not be quite accurate. If you will permit me, I would like to revise these statements when I go over my notes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. ANGELL. Then I will not pursue this further at this time; and you will revise your statement so as to make the amounts, the rates and the terms of the various offers accurate.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; or I will bring those papers here to the committee to answer definitely any further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I do not want to continue these hearings long enough to permit you to bring the papers here, or have them sent here.

Mr. HOWE. But I assume Mr. McIlhenny has the privilege of elaborating his answer, when he sends up his revised statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; that is what I would like to have the privilege of doing. Then I will make all of this definite and clear, Mr. Angell.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you at the present time final authority from the Haitian Government to negotiate a loan in its behalf?

Mr. McILHENNY. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Or how far does your authority go?

Mr. McILHENNY. I have no definite authority to negotiate a loan. As far as my authority is of a somewhat anomalous character. I had authority granted me in the fall of 1919, which has never been formally withdrawn.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you consider that still in effect?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not consider that it is of such a character as to authorize me to bring a loan to a conclusion. It has been so questioned in my correspondence with the Haitian Government as to lead me to believe that do not consider that that authority is definite, but still it has never been withdrawn, as I said. I have requested, and the State Department has also requested, the Haitian Government to give me definite authority at this time to come to a conclusion in the matter of the loan, and I am waiting for that. I am hoping for it daily.

Mr. ANGELL. Upon receipt of such authority you would then proceed to negotiate with—

Mr. McILHENNY. With Lee, Higginson & Co., and try to bring my negotiations to such a satisfactory conclusion as would be approved by the Haitian Government.

Mr. ANGELL. In any event, however—

Mr. McILHENNY (interposing). In any event, however, all negotiations of final action must be referred to the Haitian Government for its approval.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you requested Brigadier General Russell, the high commissioner to Haiti, to take up this matter of the loan with the Haitian Government?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; I have.

Mr. ANGELL. Has there been regularly under your administration, as far as you know under the administration of your predecessor, Mr. Russell, regular accounting of receipts and of expenditures made to the Haitian Government, or made public, or has the Haitian Government all such figures in its own possession?

Mr. McILHENNY. I do not quite apprehend what you mean.

Mr. ANGELL. So far as your office is concerned, have there been made figures of receipts and expenditures?

Mr. McILHENNY. Of my office?

Mr. ANGELL. Of the Haitian Government.

Mr. McILHENNY. Of the Haitian Government? No; not as far as my office is concerned. The receiver general of customs makes a report.

Mr. ANGELL. To the Haitian Government?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And has he made that report each year, so far as you know?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir; each month he makes a report, and that is consolidated into—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Does he make a report of expenditures as well as of receipts?

Mr. McILHENNY. Of disbursements.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean of disbursements.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Are there any disbursements made direct from your office?

cific thing, and became a part of the contract, which had been ratified between the Government and the bank. Therefore, as the Government of the United States and the financial adviser had been parties to this contract drafting and in its consideration, I felt, and the Government of the United States felt, that an obligation lay definitely upon the Haitian Government that provision in the article should be put in operation.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the date of this contract to which you have referred? Was that the contract of 1916, signed here in Washington?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; it was sanctioned by the law of May 2, 1919.

Mr. HOWE. What was article 15?

Mr. McILHENNY. Article 15 reads:

"To avoid the possibility of any monetary crisis during the period of retirement of paper money, and so long as such retirement shall be in progress the Government obligates itself to prohibit importations or exportations of the Haitian currency, except such as may be necessary for the needs of commerce in the opinion of the financial adviser."

Mr. ANGELL. That is article 15, is it?

Mr. McILHENNY. That is article 15.

Mr. HOWE. Of what?

Mr. McILHENNY. Of the monetary reform agreement, the so-called contract of retrait.

Mr. HOWE. Excuse me, Mr. Angell, that is the answer to the question I wanted at that point.

Mr. ANGELL. All right; I am waiting for you to go on, Mr. McIlhenny.

Mr. McILHENNY. As I said, I told the President that if it was understood that article 15 of the contract of retrait was to be incorporated in that law, and in its language, I would draft a law embodying the points which I raised with him.

The President agreed to this, and promised that a law having this article 15 incorporated in it would meet with his approval. I told him of the other provisions that I thought I would incorporate in the law—provisions against speculation in gourdes, and the hoarding of gourdes for speculative purposes. He said, "As to that I will not obligate myself, but I do article 15."

I therefore drafted a law and submitted it to him.

Sometime after that I received a communication from the minister of finance in which he told me that the President had referred the draft of law which he had proposed to him, and that after careful consideration by the council of ministers, it had been decided that the law was not acceptable and could not be passed.

Mr. ANGELL. By this time you were alone in July, perhaps?

Mr. McILHENNY. I should say so. Another matter, which I considered of very great importance to the Haitian Government, was the enactment of a law providing for long-term leases of public lands. This law had been drafted by me for the purpose of retaining in fee simple to the Haitian Government the title to all of its lands, instead of permitting them to be sold, and of the chief assets of the country going out of its possession for all time provided for leases for 30 years, with the right of renewal for 30 years. It was, from the standpoint of finances, a sound measure which would add materially to the income of the country. The objections advanced to the law were the control that it was proposed that the financial adviser should exercise in the drawing of the leases and in the general administration of the law. Another very important matter, which was under consideration at the time, was the approval by the Haitian Government of the modification of the bank charter, and the transfer of the bank under the modified charter to a new corporation to be organized under the Haitian law.

Mr. ANGELL. By this time the National City Bank of New York had acquired all the assets of the National Bank of Haiti, had it not?

Mr. McILHENNY. Not yet. They had approached me in New York and asked me if I would offer any objection to their purchase of the French stock of the Banque Nationale? I told them that I would not; but that before they could purchase the stock, I deemed it very necessary that the bank charter should be very materially modified, as it, in my judgment, bore too heavily upon the Haitian Government. Conferences were had in Washington with the State Department between the representatives of the National City Bank, New York, the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve Board, the

The CHAIRMAN. Had you any reason to believe that the diplomatic representative of the Government under which this bank was chartered had made representations to the Haitian Government in the same matter?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir. I think a formal letter was written by the Haitian Government.

The CHAIRMAN. By the Haitian Government?

Mr. McILHENNY. By the Haitian Government to the minister of the United States; and I think a copy was sent to me, in which it was stated that the test had been received by the Haitian Government from the British Legation and from the French Legation.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean, then, that the diplomatic representatives of the Governments—both of them debtors to the Government of the United States—interfered, in the financial interest of banks controlled by their own nations, to obstruct the granting of the new charter to the Banque Nationale d'Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me say for the record that the letter of the French chargé d'affaires, under date of July 19, 1920, seems to me not very far from unfriendly to the Government of the United States as well as inimical to the interests of the Government of Haiti.

You may proceed, Mr. Angell.

Mr. Howe. If I may interrupt. I want to ask just one question on the subject which you were asking about.

The purpose of the article in the bank charter to which special objection was made was to prevent, in the future, speculation in exchange, was it not?

Mr. McILHENNY. Do you mean article 15?

Mr. Howe. Of the bank charter; yes.

Mr. McILHENNY. Article 15—

Mr. Howe (interposing). Of the new bank charter?

Mr. McILHENNY. Oh, the additional article was for the purpose of stabilizing the enactment of such legislation as would appear to be necessary to stabilize the gourde, which was the national money of Haiti.

Mr. Howe. And to put an end to that extent to the speculation in the fluctuations of the gourde?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. Howe. Which fluctuations generally were to the disadvantage of the peasant agriculturists?

Mr. McILHENNY. If you will note the language of that—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Now, do not get into a long discussion after 1 o'clock, and we will have to recess in a moment.

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. It is perfectly innocuous. Whether or not this legislation is necessary, or whether its discussion is necessary, lies entirely in the judgment of the Haitian Government; it is one of the most innocuous of the things I have ever known to be drafted, and we accepted it in toto for that reason.

Mr. Howe. Is it not true that in times past speculations in fluctuations of the gourde have been one source of revenue to a number of banking interests in Haiti?

Mr. McILHENNY. I have been told so. It is a common practice, not only of the banks but of the merchants in Haiti, and has been so from time immemorial.

(Thereupon, at 1.10 o'clock p. m., the committee took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The hearing was resumed at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the previous recess.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN A. McILHENNY—Resumed

Mr. McILHENNY. Mr. Chairman, I just spoke informally to Mr. Angell at the hearing opened and told him that I was going to ask that in the course of the testimony I be allowed to amplify and correct my statements and show clearly the answers to the questions which have been asked me. I am away with some confusion in my mind as to the manner in which I had answered several of your questions. There was so much in the way of explanation that I was in doubt as to whether or not the question had been fully and correctly answered. I should like, when the testimony is sent to me to be corrected, to have the privilege, if you will allow me, of amplifying or modifying correctly answering the questions as stated by Mr. Angell.

to the coinage of subsidiary currency which was to be put into circulation at a future date. The Government could not issue any paper money, or nickel coin during the life of the concession.

These provisions were modified by an agreement concerning the reform of the Republic of Haiti signed at Port au Prince on April 12.

Briefly the provisions of this agreement are as follows:

The issue of bank notes is limited at present to 20,000,000 gourdes ($4,000,000) and is not at any time to exceed three times the amount of the bank's capital. The notes are to be guaranteed not only by the cash reserve, one-third of their value but also by an additional reserve of commercial assets to cover the remainder of their value. The bank is required to increase its circulation, if necessary, to meet the demands of commerce, and is to replace any notes which become unfit for circulation through physical deterioration. The notes are to be redeemable, not only at the central office, but provided by the concession, but at the banks in provinces. A tax of 1 per cent is to be imposed on any note circulation in excess of 10,000,000 gourdes ($2,000,000). The financial adviser is to have supervision over the issue of the Government's paper money and over the maintenance of the bank against the bank's circulation.

2. Undesirable provisions governing compensation for treasury service. By articles 14, 15, and 17 of the original concession the bank was made the depository of the Government funds and, further, made all payments for the Government, both at home and abroad, including payments on the public debt. For this service the concession permitted the bank to collect a commission of 1 per cent on each sum deposited and one-half of 1 per cent on each amount paid out, with an additional commission of one-half of 1 per cent on payments to foreign countries. These privileges had been revoked by the Haitian Government prior to the American intervention, but by the agreement of July 10 the treasury service was restored to the bank after the American intervention with the elimination, however, of the commission on payments abroad and the further provision that the bank should receive no commission on loans and only one-fourth of 1 per cent on payments of sums derived from loans. In normal times the commissions thus collected amounted to more than $100,000 a year. The department considered this sum an excessive amount for such services, especially in view of the fact that the bank benefited greatly by reason of large deposits of Government funds. In addition, the department considered that after Haiti's existing debts were refunded the treasury service would be greatly simplified, once the present system of "affectations" were abolished. The system of "affectations" a portion of each revenue is pledged to the payment of two or three debts. As each payment is received by the bank a certain percentage has to be applied to one account, another portion to another, and so on. The Government's accounts thus require a tremendous amount of bookkeeping. Once this cumbersome system is abolished and the new loan floated the work of the bank in connection with the treasury service will be exceedingly reduced. Accordingly the bank accepted the department's modification of the concession in regard to the compensation for treasury service as follows:

1. The commissions collected by the national bank for the treasury service as provided in article 17 of the concession and article 5 of the agreement of July 10, 1916, shall be abolished.

2. In lieu of these commissions the bank shall receive payment on account of the treasury service at the following rate: When the total receipts of the Government in a given fiscal year amount to $6,000,000 the bank shall receive a commission of $68,000 dollars. For each additional $1,000,000 of the Government's income the bank shall receive an additional $10,000 dollars, and if the income of the Government is less than $6,000,000 the commission received by the bank shall be decreased at the rate of $10,000 for each million dollars which the Government's income is less than $6,000,000. In no fiscal year, however, shall the payment to the bank on account of the treasury service be less than the sum of $100,000.

3. Modification covering interest on Government credit balances.—In terms of the original concession the bank allowed the Government an interest on its credit balances. This feature of the concession was so obviously a source of modification that the following article was agreed to by the bank without discussion:

3. The National Bank of Haiti agrees to allow the Government interest on its credit balances, whether in gold or in gourdes, at the current rate of

7. The financial adviser shall at all times have the right to inspect operations of the bank and to call for such reports from the bank as he may deem necessary.

8. If the stock of the National Bank of Haiti should at any time be sold by the National City Bank, the National City Bank agrees that the Government of Haiti shall have a preferential right to purchase the stock of the National Bank of Haiti at the same price which may be offered by any other bona fide purchaser.

9. The above provisions supersede all contrary provisions in the contract. It is understood that the prohibitions of article 13 of the contract as to the issue by the Government of fiduciary and nickel money shall be subject to fractional currency issued in accordance with the provisions herein.

In addition to the nine modifications agreed upon by the bank and the officials of the department, an additional amendment was submitted to the bank which has been the subject of considerable controversy, and has been an important factor in holding up the negotiation for the transfer of the bank charter. The bank claimed that one of the greatest privileges of the original bank concession is the clause vesting the sole right of issue in the National Bank of Haiti. Having yielded to the department's modification of the original concession in the interest of the Haitian people, the National City Bank officials stood firmly for the protection of this valuable right in order to protect this privilege the following amendment (article 10 of the bank modifications) was insisted upon by the bank and agreed to by the Government of State. The amendment reads as follows:

"After the expiration of the period set by the currency reform agreement for the retirement of the Government paper money, the Government will adopt such regulations affecting the importation of foreign currency as may be necessary to safeguard the currency system of the Republic of Haiti. The financial adviser will consult with the bank upon such measures as may be deemed necessary."

It will be noted that this amendment is similar to article 15 of the Haiti currency agreement (also called the retrait), which has become a law of Haiti. This exception is to be noted: That the provisions of article 10 of the bank modifications are far less reaching in their scope than the provisions of article 15 of the retrait, which is in fact a law. Article 15 of the retrait reads as follows:

"To avoid the possibility of any currency crisis during the period of retirement of Government paper money, and as long as such retirement shall be in process, the Government obligates itself to prohibit importation and exportation of non-Haitian currency, except such as may be necessary to meet the requirements of commerce in the judgment of the financial adviser."

Article 15 of the contract of the retrait obligates the Haitian Government to prohibit importation and exportation of non-Haitian currency except such as may be necessary to meet the requirements of commerce, in the judgment of the financial adviser. Article 10 of the bank modifications merely places the obligation on the Government to adopt such regulations affecting the importation of foreign currency as may appear necessary to safeguard the currency system of the Republic of Haiti.

As a matter of fact, the basic idea underlying both articles was to prevent speculation in gourdes, which has been the curse of Haitian prosperity. The speculation was carried on by high Government officials and by the bank, so that the value of the Haitian gourde was at all times in a state of constant fluctuation. Secondly, it has been fairly well established that the state of unskilled labor in Haiti and the living conditions of the laborer would justify the placing of Haiti upon a dollar basis instead of having the gourde as the unit. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that article 15 of the retrait has become an enactment of law, the Haitian Government absolutely refused to put it into force, and further, made the American dollar legal tender throughout the island. This is in violation of the bank's contract, giving the bank the privilege, the sole bank of issue, and further ignores the fact that the gourde has been established by repeated laws as the legal tender money of the Republic. Finally, it is in contravention to the terms of the contract of the retrait that was enacted into law, which made the definite bills of the bank legal tender money of the Republic.

On the one hand, those opposed to any restriction of entry of American currency claim that free entry would serve as a check upon the bank and enable the bank to keep its notes in plentiful supply for the convenience of the financial adviser. This contention is supported by protests from the American and French legations in Haiti, from the Royal Bank of Canada, the American Foreign Banking Corporation (which later withdrew from Haiti and turned over its business to the Royal Bank of Canada), and from business houses.

The protests referred to above were made prior to any consultation with the Governments and institutions protesting with the financial adviser, and entirely under a misapprehension as to the method of application of the restraint upon the importation and exportation of foreign moneys, it being erroneously held that the restraint to be established would be a monopoly in favor of the National Bank of Haiti in the handling of foreign moneys. It appears from consideration of article 15 of the retraits that it would be impossible to establish such a monopoly, proper application of that article, as the article applies to all importations and exportations of foreign moneys and places the control of such imports and exportations entirely within the hands of the financial adviser, only to the requirement that such importations and exportations of foreign moneys shall be allowed only as may be necessary to meet the requirements of commerce, and makes no exception in favor of the National Bank of Haiti.

The currency in Haiti has been in a notoriously bad condition for many years. To remedy this the currency reform agreement entered into between the United States Government and the National Bank of Haiti and approved by the President of the United States became an enactment of Haitian law. The basic idea of the reform agreement contemplates an issue by the National Bank of Haiti of twenty million gourdes to replace the Government paper money, and to make the gourde the sole legal tender at a fixed rate of 5 gourdes to $1. This about, article 15 of the contract of the retraits was adopted, but put into effect by the Haitian Government, which agreed to it. It was formulated in favor of or against any bank, but as a safeguard to the people, primarily to prevent the speculation in exchange, formerly preeminently profitable to banks and Government officials, as it was open to commerce, except to merchants conducting banking operations. The retention of the Royal Bank of Canada, and of other banks and commercial houses in Haiti, that this article was detrimental to their interests is primarily to the fact that its terms would prevent speculation in gourdes. The terms of article 10 of the modifications of the bank charter coincide in extent with article 15 of the retraits, the terms are made purposefully reaching.

Mr. McILHENNY. I think I covered the law relative to the leasing of land.

Mr. HOWE. Was the law which you mentioned relative to the seizure of German property one which you desired to have repealed or one which you desired enacted?

Mr. McILHENNY. I desired to have it repealed. The Haitian Government sequestered the property of all alien enemies. The sequestered property has been in the custody of two sequestrators appointed by the President, one of whom was the receiver general of customs, and the other the manager of the Banque Nationale de Republique d'Haiti. The law authorizing the sequestration and administration of sequestered property provided that the sequestrators should be subject to the approval of the minister of justice. The sequestrators found that they were unable to carry out the plain purpose of the law, which was the sale of the property, because of the attitude assumed by the minister of justice.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was he?

Mr. McILHENNY. Monsieur Benoit. I have no proof of what actual attitude the minister of justice took in his attitude, but it was openly stated that he was approached by the Germans whose property had been sequestered, and that he had been granted a heavy fee for restraining the action of the sequestrators. I took the matter up with the President, and he assured me that he was in full accord with my proposal that the sequestrators be authorized to sell the property, to liquidate the property immediately. But we never got any action. It was impossible to do so.

About this time they fought off all action, first by one device and then by another, until this time was reached when to my great astonishment I passed ordering the sequestrators to return all of the sequestered property to the Germans.

Mr. HOWE. Did that law have the approval of the American minister?

Mr. McILHENNY. It did not.

Mr. McILHENNY. I was working up to the point of showing why they were so important as to warrant my action. That is the only thing I can amplify that in a memorandum and go right on to a plain statement.

The CHAIRMAN. No; if it will not take you too long.

Mr. McILHENNY. I will, however, amplify my statements as to the Minister of Finance.

These measures which are deemed necessary of enactment by the Government and those laws which it seemed to me necessary they should have already been referred by me to the State Department and had been discussed by me with the responsible officers of that department, and then with me that certain of them should be repealed and certain others should be enacted for the welfare of the Haitian people. Therefore, when I came to Haiti I came with a mind well established as to what I as the Government of Haiti to do, and I proceeded to open negotiations with them to bring about the result.

As I stated some time ago, in my first interview with the President he was entirely agreeable to doing all that I asked. At the interview with him was the minister to Haiti, Mr. Bailly-Blanchard. When I left I was assured as to the attitude of the President that I sent a cable at once to the State Department advising them that those things which they thought should have been done were acceptable to the President, and that there would be no delay in putting them through.

I had no sooner got the cable off than the Minister of Foreign Affairs came to the minister, he said, to notify him officially that in the interview which had been granted by the President to the minister and to me, and in the conversation made by the President to us that these things would be accomplished. The President had spoken not as the President of the Republic, but solely in his capacity, and that, therefore, he wished us to understand there was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Who said this?

Mr. McILHENNY. This was the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ANGELL. He said this to Mr. Bailly-Blanchard?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you present?

Mr. McILHENNY. No; I was not; but he handed me a note. There was passed at the same time.

Mr. ANGELL. To this same effect?

Mr. McILHENNY. I think virtually to that effect. I can not give the words.

The minister called to see the President then and sought to persuade him to stand by his former promise, but he was not successful. He promised to do what I had asked him to do with reservations, but declined to do it in part. We were in constant communication with him and constant contact with him, and I sought to persuade him by every means in my power.

Then we came to the point where I found I was getting nowhere, that I could accomplish nothing, that I was simply pleading to an opposition which would not yield, and then denied the yield, and then yielded again and denied that I was taking no action at all. I suspended the consideration of the Budget and turned their attention in a perfectly definite and final way that these matters had been put to them were not trivial matters but matters of great importance to their country, and that it was the settled opinion of myself and the State Department advising me, that they should be enacted.

These negotiations continued through into August when I found in spite of my best efforts, I was getting nowhere. I then determined to rest and to take further action. The treaty between the Government of the United States and the Government of Haiti provided in our Article 10 as follows:

"All sums collected and received by the receiver general shall be applied, first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the receiver general, his assistants and employees, and expenses of the receivership, including the salary and expenses of the financial adviser, which salaries will be determined by previous agreement; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the debt of the Republic of Haiti; and, third, to the maintenance of the treasury, referred to in Article X; and, then, the remainder to the Haitian Government for the purposes of current expenses."

Shortly after the American occupation in Haiti the war was on and it was demonstrated that the income of the country could not support the service of the public debt and support the Government at the same time. Just at the time of the American intervention the Haitian Government had very comp-

I recommended not that it be done in such a way as to be a serious detriment to the people of Haiti. There were certain services upon the welfare of the people seriously depended—the public utilities, the water service of the cities of Port au Prince, Cape Haitien, and Aux Cayes, maintenance of the electric-light system, the maintenance of sanitation, maintenance of the general public works, which employed a great mass of Haitians and were civilizing the country more rapidly than the function of the Government. There are several thousands of men running up to bureau chiefs, spread out all through the machinery of the Government of Haiti. These people receive small salaries and are entirely dependent on those salaries. I did not want to stop the whole machinery of the Government, but I wanted to call to the attention of the Government the fact that there was an entire cessation of cooperation with those who were appointed under the treaty and had a right to advise.

The CHAIRMAN. This was about what date?

Mr. McILHENNY. This was in August, 1920. Under this interpretation of the treaty I recommended that the salaries of the President, his cabinet, the council and the principal executive officers of the State be suspended when this was done.

The CHAIRMAN. You did that upon the theory that it was within the provision of this Government to determine what provisions of the treaty were binding and in what measure they were binding upon both Governments?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes, sir. If I understand your question, I am answering it, sir. Here is a direct admonition—I mean to the General Revenue Commissioners—

The CHAIRMAN. No. Our Government exercised a discretion, not vested by the terms of the treaty, to determine what clauses of the treaty were enforced at any given time and the degree in which they should be enforced. Our Government, let us say, suspended, or assented to the suspension of Article V of the treaty?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It has no right under the treaty to do that?

Mr. McILHENNY. As a party it has a right to do it, has it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Not without the consent of the Haitian Government.

Mr. McILHENNY. I should think so, as the obligation lies with the Haitian Government to do this, that, or the other. Moreover, this suspension of Article V was certainly with the full consent of the Haitian Government and with hearty approval. Had the treaty been literally applied, there would have been no funds with which to maintain the Haitian Government and it would have simply disappeared, leaving the American military forces the only authority in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. I am interested to have your view. Let me ask you a question. Has our Government by its failure to carry out any of the provisions of the treaty, implicit and explicit, provoked the Haitian Government to a like recalcitrancy or failure?

Mr. McILHENNY. Not that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Haitians had no reason to be disappointed in which the United States had played in Haiti under the treaty?

Mr. McILHENNY. Not that I know of. The obligations of the United States under the treaty to the best of my knowledge and belief have been carried to the ultimate ability of this Government with the means which were in its hand.

I desire in this connection to call attention to a letter of the Secretary of State of the United States, dated October 10, 1919, published in full in Nos. 175-177 of the Haitian "Documents Diplomatiques," answering various complaints by the Haitian Government of nonfulfillment of the purposes of the treaty, in which this is attributed to the constantly obstructive attitude of the Haitian Government and their frequent failure to cooperate with the measures proposed by the representatives of the United States in Haiti.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you this in that connection. I have not read the treaty, but I do not have all its provisions in my mind. There are certain stipulations to be performed by Haiti, and there are certain stipulations to be performed by the United States. As I recall, there is no penalty either against Haiti for nonperformance or against the United States for nonperformance.

Mr. McILHENNY. None that I can construe as a penalty clause, sir.

what my thought is. Of course you would have had to pay them out of public or Haitian funds, and if they had been paid would she have been further short on her other obligations?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. When I say "Yes," what I mean is this: That certain indebtednesses of the Haitian Government whose service I had not taken at all. There was a note to the Banque Nationale for virtually $200,000 on which I was paying interest, but I had set aside no funds for same. There was a debt of $1,400,000 due for back interest on the French bonds of the National Railroad of Haiti. There was the entire service of the exterior debt, for which no provision had been made. A strict interpretation of the treaty provides that these debts shall be served, and shall be served, and then what moneys are left after the service of the debts of Haiti, the moneys remaining shall be used for the budgetary needs of the Republic. There would not have been a sou marquee for the budgetary needs of the country if I had served properly and fully the debts of the Republic.

Senator POMERENE. Put it still another way. If you had served the debt as the laws of Haiti required, then you would not have been able to pay such portions of the salaries of the President and his cabinet as you did pay?

Mr. McILHENNY. No.

Senator POMERENE. Nor others either?

Mr. McILHENNY. Nor others either.

Senator POMERENE. And even the subordinate employees of the Government would not have been paid?

Mr. McILHENNY. None of them.

Senator POMERENE. None?

The CHAIRMAN. How long a period did this suspension of salaries of the President and cabinet last?

Mr. McILHENNY. About three months.

The CHAIRMAN. Why was the payment of the salaries resumed?

Mr. McILHENNY. Because the Government of the United States took the matter with the President of the Republic, and told him that if a settlement could be reached with him by which he would undertake to carry out what I had laid before him they would then waive the carrying out of the strict provision of the treaty and the salaries of himself and his cabinet be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he agree to carry out the program?

Mr. McILHENNY. He did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he carry out the program?

Mr. McILHENNY. He did not in any particular. The matter stands to-day as it was then.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with these measures, did the financial adviser or the American minister, have cognizance of the enactment or the revocation of any of them at the time that the legislative council of state acted?

Mr. McILHENNY. Upon these measures? Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Was objection made at the time?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. There is a law here [indicating in book] which we have objected to seriously—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Well, I am speaking in general terms.

Mr. McILHENNY. Well, I am giving you an instance.

The CHAIRMAN. In which Mr. Bailly-Blanchard filed his protest at the time?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes. There is a provision of the treaty that no law could be passed reducing the customs revenues of the Republic of Haiti without the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. ANGELL. That is article 9.

Mr. McILHENNY. That is perfectly plain and perfectly simple. This is the law which I speak here as the "Customs duties on automobiles" was submitted to the Receiver General of Customs. The suggestion was a certain resolution which is not pertinent, but which he did not agree to, but which he read and then gave his approval to the law as it stood. They never submitted it to the minister. They enacted it, not with the amendment of the receiver general of customs, but as they had first submitted it to him, and the minister at once protested, before its promulgation, I think, to the President, urging him not to promulgate it.

Nevertheless, it was promulgated, and then he served notice on the financial adviser and the receiver general of customs that this law was to be considered as nonoperative, having been enacted in violation of the treaty.

of the Haitian "Documents Diplomatiques," from which also emanate the following:

"The Third Assistant Secretary of State also said that the Department of State, basing its opinion only upon information now at its disposal, and that the financial adviser was acting for the best interests of the Haitian public."

(2) A note verbale of the American minister to Haiti to the President of Haiti, by instruction of the Secretary of State of the United States, August 19, 1920, and published in full on pages 79-81 of the document mentioned, from which I quote the following:

"The Government of the United States deeply regrets the course which impelled the American minister to take this grave step. The President of Haiti will recall that the treaty of September 16, 1915, between the United States and Haiti, was concluded with the purpose of confirming the existing relations between the two Governments by the most cordial cooperation in the management of the condition of the revenues and the finances of Haiti, in order to secure the tranquillity of the Republic, and in carrying out plans for the development and prosperity of Haiti and its people.

"The objects desired can only be obtained, the President of Haiti will readily appreciate, by the close cooperation between the two countries. Cooperation, which, for a considerable period happily existed heretofore, recently unfortunately been lacking and the American officials whose duties are provided for in the treaty have encountered in the fulfillment of their duty, not only opposition on the part of the Haitian Government, but also a deliberate disregard of the provisions of an agreement growing out of the treaty which was solemnly entered into by both Governments.

"During the period when cooperation between the two Governments in carrying out of purposes of the treaty fortunately continued, the President of Haiti will recall that the Government of the United States, which terms of the treaty, has undertaken the reorganization of Haitian finances in order to enable Haiti to liquidate fully her debts, did not insist upon a compliance with the requirement of article 5 of the said treaty, but gave priority to the payment of the current expenses of the Government of Haiti over the payment of the amortization and interest of the Haitian debt. In action the President of Haiti will realize can only be undertaken with the Government of the United States and the Government of Haiti are in full accord as to render it possible carrying into effect the objects of the treaty.

"The Government of the United States has regretfully been forced to the conclusion that these purposes are at present impossible of attainment on account of the recent and marked change in the attitude of the Haitian Government. The Government of the United States had therefore been obliged to take steps to provide for a strict observance of the terms of article 5 of the treaty of September 16, 1915, until such time as the Haitian Government shall evidence its desire once more to cooperate with the American officials in the carrying out of the allies and objects of the treaty."

(3) A memorandum handed to the President of Haiti on January 6, 1921, by the American minister, by direction of the Secretary of State of the United States, published on pages 166-167 of the same document, from which I quote the following:

"In this connection the American minister is directed to inform His Excellency the President that it is evident to the Department of State that misunderstandings have arisen as the result of which friction has developed, but the Department of State is by no means certain that the fault for these affairs is due to any unjustifiable action on the part of Mr. McIlhenny. The Department of State is confident that the sole interest of Mr. McIlhenny during the period of his services as financial adviser has been to secure by all means within his power to the welfare of the people of Haiti and the honest functioning of the Government of Haiti, and that the Department of State believes that it should be a cause for gratification to the people of Haiti that Mr. McIlhenny has been able to accomplish as much as he has accomplished in the face of the determined and bitter opposition which he has unfortunately encountered on the part of certain members of the Government of Haiti.

"The American minister is directed to state further that the Department of State has every confidence in the judgment and integrity of Mr. McIlhenny.

Senator POMERENE. Is it your claim, Mr. Angell, that there is any part of that debt which is not a valid, bona fide debt?

Mr. ANGELL. Oh, I make no claim at all; no, sir. I have no perspective as to any of the details of the validity or otherwise of the interest. I know nothing about it, and have no suggestion of any such nature regarding the foreign debt, certainly.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I take it that whatever debt there is, whether bona fide or spurious, is the debt of the Haitian Government and its officers.

Mr. ANGELL. Certainly. What I had in mind as much as anything else, was prompted by what Mr. McIlhenny was saying this morning. I believe it was, as to the allowance of certain of these bons du tresor—not the sums represented by their face value had actually reached the treasury in the days preceding the occupation, and I took it from you in that connection that you took it that there was some doubt as to the validity of some of those claims against the Government—claims which may be for nominal purposes, at least, under the heading of "internal debts."

Mr. MCILHENNY. There is no doubt but what the treaty looks to the adviser there. In the first place, for an investigation of the indebtedness of the country. But such an undertaking is entirely too much for any one man to undertake. And when it came to the writing of the protocol it was there that all of these claims should go before a properly constituted tribunal, men, who would be authorized by law to adjudicate the claims and to determine how much should be paid in bonds and how much should be paid in cash, those recognized as valid against the State.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Mr. McIlhenny, can you give us an idea of the number of those claims?

Mr. MCILHENNY. Yes, sir; I have that, Senator; that has all been done and already put in the record.

Senator POMERENE. Well, if it is in the record, that is all right. I have forgotten about that fact. But I think it would illuminate the statement I have just made.

Mr. MCILHENNY. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. You would have just as many lawsuits there, just as many as you have claims?

Mr. MCILHENNY. You mean the value of them, do you not?

Senator POMERENE. No; I mean the number of them, as well, because the matter of lawsuits, if you had one claim of $1,000,000, you would have one lawsuit; but if you have a thousand claims of $1,000 each, you would have a thousand lawsuits. I am trying to point out the enormity of the task we were asked about.

Mr. MCILHENNY. Yes, sir; I should like to refer to the schedule of claims. Here, Senator [indicating], are 230 pages.

Senator POMERENE. Of claims?

Mr. MCILHENNY. Of claims.

Senator ODDIE. And about how many to a page?

Mr. HOWE. Between 45 and 50 to a page.

Senator ODDIE. That would be over 10,000 claims.

Senator POMERENE. You would have to live to be as old as Methuselah to live to adjudicate all of those claims.

Mr. MCILHENNY. That is only a part. That is a report of one of the Fequiere commission. Now, the Sambour commission, which has done a much more interesting and difficult job to perform, I think, completed about eight years ago, about 1914; and it had twice that number of claims.

Mr. ANGELL. I do not find, in looking over my notes of your direct testimony, Mr. McIlhenny, that you said anything specific, one way or the other, about the interest payments on the three foreign loans, of 1875, 1886, and 1896, immediately prior to the occupation of July, 1915. Had those interest payments been met?

Mr. MCILHENNY. I have a memorandum there covering those payments already in my testimony. The Haitian Government was indebted to the de l'Union Parisienne in a small sum, advanced by that bank to meet interest coupons maturing May 8, 1915, on the loan of 1910.

Mr. ANGELL. Am I correct in understanding, then, that the interest had not been met up to the time of the occupation?

Mr. MCILHENNY. You are.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt there to ask if, back in the years around there—Professor Kelsey, in his report, mentions delayed pay-

Mr. HOWE. You mean practically decomposed?

Mr. McILHENNY. Absolutely. The Banque Nationale had 3,000,000 in a vault, and they insisted that, as I was financial adviser, I should go to the vault and review those notes. I escaped with my life, and that was all.

Mr. ANGELL. I have no further questions, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOWE. I have two or three questions that I would like to ask.

Mr. McIlhenny, Mr. Angel questioned you as to the amount of your per diem allowance for each day of your presence in the United States. I think you said you received $15 a day for each day you were in the States?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And you also said, in reply to Mr. Angel's questions, that you have not been in Haiti since October, 1920, and that you can not at the present time fix the date of your return with any accuracy?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. I want to ask you how your actual expenses here compare with this allowance of $15; I want to ask you whether you are financially better off here with your expenses, in the United States, receiving $15 a day or in Haiti without that $15 a day?

And when I ask you that question, I want to apologize for its personal nature, as I have no curiosity about your financial status. But I do want to have you supplement your answer that you gave to Mr. Angel in commenting on it, because an inference might be drawn by one reading part of the record that it was to your financial interest to prolong your stay here. I do not know whether or not that is the case, but I would like you to answer that.

Mr. McILHENNY. I would like to answer that question with a little explanation, Mr. Howe: When I was called to the United States by the State Department I had no idea that I should be in the United States more than two or three weeks. I brought my family, principally to do Christmas shopping, and I made all of the arrangements and invited my guests for a Thanksgiving dinner in Haiti. I left Admiral Knapp in my house, to occupy it in my absence, because I left everything—servants, silver, and everything else. I have been out of Haiti I have maintained my corps of servants and maintained my household ready to step into the house to-morrow at considerable expense. I have a stable of horses; I have a corps of servants—there are four servants; one of them died from smallpox. And I have been ready at any moment to go back to Haiti and live my comfortable life there.

Mr. HOWE. Your stay here has been so indeterminate in its length that you have been unable to close your house or dispose of your stable?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes; it has been impossible for me to say when I would go back to Haiti at any time. It has been quite possible that I would go from month to month. The cost of my living in the United States, in Washington, has been several times what it would be in Haiti—certainly. By reason of my not knowing when I would return to Haiti it has been impossible for me to have a house of my own. I have been obliged to live in a hotel. That has added greatly to my cost of living. My salary, with my allowance, is scarcely adequate to maintain me here in Washington. It has been a serious hardship, rather than a boon, for me to be here.

Mr. HOWE. When the minister from the United States to Haiti and Admiral Knapp took up their negotiations with the President of Haiti they did so under the administration of a successor to the Secretary of State in Washington who gave you your instructions?

Mr. McILHENNY. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. It was a different Secretary of State?

Mr. McILHENNY. Entirely so. Mr. Lansing had gone out of office and Mr. Colby had come into office. Doctor Rowe, who was the Chief of the American Division of the State Department, and who had knowledge of the possibility of my holding up the salaries of the President and his cabinet, had left the Latin American Division of the State Department, and Mr. Welles had succeeded him, and he had no such knowledge. All of the work in the State Department who had been connected with the Haitian affairs had gone out of the State Department and there was an entirely new personnel in the Division of Latin American Affairs connected with Haitian affairs at that time.

Mr. HOWE. And that change in personnel had taken place during the time of your absence in Haiti?

To realize this desire, expenses having to be made conformably to and within the limits of credits regularly voted, I have the honor to assure you that to your excellency that it is understood that all payments for the services of the Haitian Government shall be made with the advice of the financial adviser and that, to this end, every warrant of payment addressed to the receiver or to the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti will be first submitted to the financial adviser and will not be paid without his visa.

Please accept, Mr. Minister, the assurances of my high consideration
(C. H.)

H. E. A. BAILLY-BLANCHARD,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America. Port au Prince.

Mr. HOWE. Both of those notes have been referred to to-day.

There is just one other question: In mentioning the note of August 20, I gathered from the questions and your answers that that note stated a requirement by which new Haitian laws were to be submitted to the American minister in advance of being submitted to the council for the American minister's approval. As I read the French version, it would appear that projects of law were to be presented to our minister for his consideration, if necessary, for discussion. But I do not see anything about approval. Matter of fact, how did that work out?

Mr. McILHENNY. It has always been held by the minister and by the department that it was approval prior to legislative action.

Mr. HOWE. Yes. I think if there is an English version of that in the Department it is very desirable to have both that and the French version. The Blue Book included in the record.

Has that provision, outlined in the note of August 24, 1918, since then been a part of Haitian law?

Mr. McILHENNY. No.

Mr. HOWE. No more than by the note itself?

Mr. McILHENNY. By the note itself. I understand that before this series of notes was effected the American minister, by direction of the Secretary of State of the United States, informed the Haitian Government that the requirement of the United States considered that the execution of the understanding on legislation entails that no action should be taken by the Haitian Government on the proposed legislation communicated to the legation until the United States has informed the Haitian Government that the Government of the United States perceives no objection to the proposed legislation.

I should add that the note itself was supplemented by later less formal agreements, none the less binding agreements upon the part of the President of the United States which have been repeatedly disregarded, and that the position of the United States with respect to this agreement on the enactment of legislation was set forth in the following extract from a note of the Acting Secretary of State dated of September 27, 1920, to the Haitian minister to the United States published on pages 20-22 of the Haitian "Documents Diplomatiques":

"The department is, however, surprised to find no mention made in the communication under acknowledgment of further negotiations between the American Legation in Haiti and the Haitian Government regarding the treaty in which the original agreement of August 24, 1918, should be carried out. The Haitian Government will doubtless recall that difficulties arose as to the interpretation of this agreement, and that the American Legation found that the Haitian Government did not coincide in the opinion of the legation in order to attain the aims of the treaty and in order to make close cooperation between the two Governments practicable it was paramount that all proposed legislation of whatever character be communicated to the legation before its submission to the legislative body. The American minister moreover informed the Haitian Minister of Foreign Affairs that, in his opinion, the agreement of August 24, 1918, covered all proposed legislation, and that a project of law communicated to the legation in accordance with this agreement did not bear upon any of the objects of the treaty it would immediately be returned by the American Legation to the Haitian Minister of Foreign Affairs with a statement that the legation saw no objection to it, while if the project were not contrary to the terms of the treaty, but contained some objectionable features, in the opinion of the American Legation, the American minister would inform the Haitian Minister of Foreign Affairs could doubtless come to an understanding for their removal.

IV INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMIN

5. We strongly urge in regard to Haiti:

(a) That effective steps be taken at once by our Government to insure the relation between Haiti and this country be based upon the free action of a properly constituted Government of the smaller nation, and upon an agreement which defines what the stronger nation may and may not do, giving needed help in stabilizing their Government.

(b) That our American Government in cooperation with the properly constituted Government of Haiti enter upon such administrative measures which will lead to the strengthening of finances, the improvement of sanitation, public health and public works, the promotion of education and the improvement of the people and their Government.

(c) That complete administrative independence be reestablished as just as soon as possible.

(d) And that this general policy, be immediately avowed.

Mr. ANGELL. You have been a member of the council of state of Haiti.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes; I have been.

Mr. ANGELL. You are not a member now?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No; I am not.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you ever held any elective office in Haiti?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Never.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you ever been a candidate for any elective office?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Never.

Mr. ANGELL. You are not now a candidate for any elective office?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No, sir; I am not.

Mr. ANGELL. Are you a member of the Union Patriotique?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you ever been a member?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Never.

Mr. ANGELL. You have come to this country voluntarily and at your own expense to testify before this committee?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I have come up to this country voluntarily and at my own expense to testify before the committee.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you sent here, officially or unofficially, by the Union Patriotique?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No, sir. When in Port au Prince some members of the Union Patriotique learned that I had planned to come to the United States. I was offered money. I refused because I intended to be completely free of any kind of tie.

Mr. ANGELL. Now I suggest, Mr. Hudicourt, that you give in very brief lines the subjects on which you would like to testify or to be interrogated before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask, before Mr. Hudicourt proceeds to give his testimony, when did counsel, Mr. Angell, first communicate to Mr. Hudicourt when did Mr. Hudicourt first communicate to Mr. Angell relative to this journey?

Mr. ANGELL. I can answer that, if I may. I can not give the exact date, but approximately, I sent a letter to Mr. Hudicourt toward the end of 1915 after the committee and ourselves had left Haiti, from Santo Domingo. I called Mr. Hudicourt if he, as an independent Haitian, would care to come to the United States and testify, and to that letter Mr. Hudicourt replied later, I think by mail, that he would come in New York, that he would come. Now, returning to my question, I suggest that Mr. Hudicourt give the committee just the outline on the subjects on which he would like to make comment.

Mr. HUDICOURT. But I would be glad to testify under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee does not make that request, but it is a suggestion to your doing so if you prefer.

(Oath was thereupon administered.)

Mr. HUDICOURT. I want to testify first upon the subject of the political situation in Haiti in relation to the treaty of 1915. I have to say that these matters are one of the things concerning Haiti and the matters submitted to the committee, and especially I have to protest on behalf of Haiti against the ways and means used by this committee in regard to the testimony received. I read all the testimony published in the official report. I never saw that any witness had testified under oath, although in the testimony received in Port au Prince—I speak of Port au Prince because that was what took place—all the Haitian witnesses testified under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt, for the information of the committee, to say that it was at the suggestion of Mr. Pilkington, called by Mr. Angell, to testify, that the committee administered the oath in Haiti. Mr. Pilkington, presumably coming as a witness called by Mr. Angell, and familiar with the practice or the customs in Haiti, it was upon his suggestion that the witnesses in Port au Prince were asked to testify under oath. I may add that Mr. Pilkington and others were insistent that pains, and especial pains, should be taken to inform the witnesses that they would be under no duress as regards their testimony, and that, conversely, their responsibility as witnesses should be to be stressed. Here, that question was not raised at all.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes; but before Mr. Pilkington, the committee received testimony from a great many American citizens, but they were not sworn under oath. That makes a difference, because as I am testifying under oath it seems to me that I am in a privileged situation, a privilege not from law, because I think that the special committee of the Senate

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. You mean, Mr. Hudicourt, that McDonald was first, not independently, but as the agent of the bank?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I do not know of any contract between McDonald's and the National City Bank, but it was a common rumor in Haiti.

Senator POMERENE. Current information, you mean?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes; current information in Haiti, throughout all the steps would be taken by the City National Bank or by the City National Bank's associates.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. HUDICOURT. In 1909, when there was a question of revising the convention between Haiti and the parent National Bank of Haiti, the Banque Nationale d'Haïti, we knew that the American representative, Doctor Furniss, sent to the Government a memorandum against the new convention between Haiti and that bank.

Senator POMERENE. What was Mr. McDonald's first name, his first name? Can you give it?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No. Everybody knows McDonald in Haiti, but I do not know you that.

The CHAIRMAN. He was a New York contractor, was he not?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, sir. His first name was James. I will find the initial for you.

Senator POMERENE. Was he the same McDonald who was connected with the subways in New York?

Mr. ANGELL. I do not know.

Senator POMERENE. There was a man by the name of McDonald who was connected with some of those tunnels.

Mr. ANGELL. That was before my time in New York.

Senator POMERENE. Well, you can get that for me later.

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, sir; I know his first name is James.

Senator POMERENE. But let the witness proceed. We will not stop now.

Mr. HUDICOURT. The memorandum of the American Minister to Port-au-Prince pretended to oppose the new treaty between Haiti and the bank, on the ground that the Haitian interests were not respected, and some time later it was told, a part of the loan projected for the renewing of that convention was contributed to some bankers of New York.

Senator POMERENE. Some bankers?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Some bankers.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt you for just a second, please?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. When you speak of the treaty between Haiti and the bank?

Mr. HUDICOURT. The convention; yes.

Mr. HOWE. Which bank do you mean?

Mr. HUDICOURT. The National Bank of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. Yes.

Mr. HUDICOURT. And that contract was to be canceled and a new one made.

Mr. HOWE. You refer to the Haitian bank, which was at that time the agent of the Haitian Government, and not to the National City Bank of New York?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No; the Bank of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. Yes. Do you know where the capital was owned at that time? capital of the Haitian Bank?

Mr. HUDICOURT. It was the French bankers.

Mr. HOWE. It was the French bankers?

Mr. HUDICOURT. The French bankers.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUDICOURT. And when the new bank, under the name of the Banque Nationale d'Haïti, was established, all of the Haitians knew that it was taken by the American minister had been done only after having a ; interests attributed to the American bankers, and since that time it was that the American Legation in Port au Prince became very active in Haitian matters, and, as during that time, there were some political disturbances, this attention became more and more active.

The CHAIRMAN. Under Furniss, the legation became more active?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Doctor Furniss and his successors.

Mr. ANGELL. May I point out in this connection that there is already the text of the original convention proposed by Mr. Fuller of the United States to the Haitian Government, in May, 1915, and the project proposed by the Haitian Government to Mr. Fuller in the month of June, just prior to Mr. Fuller's departure? The text of those two is in the record, part 1, immediately following the Haitian memoir.

Mr. HUDICOURT. What were the negotiations between Admiral Caperton, his representative, Captain Beach, and the new government established in Haiti by the American marines, I can not say; I know that when the legislative body—I mean the Chamber of Deputies—voted this convention, the customhouses of my country had been already seized by the marines. I am as a lawyer, that this convention voted by the Chamber of Deputies, afterwards by the Senate was due to pressure, and so that convention does not legally exist, because at its origin it is infected by vices that we call vices of coercion, vices of consent. This treaty is due to violence, because it was signed by the Haitian representative under material pressure.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt you a minute there? At that time, did you know whether any other governments than the United States, any foreign governments, contemplated seizing the Haitian customhouses?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No, sir; it is not true; it is not true. I mean that by that time, that is to say, the time when this treaty was forced upon the will of the Haitian people, all the great foreign countries were engaged in the Great War, more than one year before.

Senator POMERENE. What was the date of that treaty, do you recall?

Mr. HUDICOURT. What is that?

Senator POMERENE. Do you recall the date of that treaty?

Mr. HUDICOURT. The date of the treaty?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; when was it ratified by you?

Mr. HUDICOURT. It was signed the 18th of September, 1915.

Senator POMERENE. 1915?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. You do not object to my answering the question?

Senator POMERENE. No, no.

Mr. ANGELL. And ratified by the chamber in October, and by the Senate on the 9th or 10th of November, 1915. That is already in the record of Admiral Caperton's testimony.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I did not recall it.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Proceeding, I add that independently of any violent vitiations that treaty there is fraud, because Admiral Caperton, who was the representative of the Government of the United States, used to say that his diplomatic representative, Captain Beach, that he was in Haiti for the good of the Haitians, for the purpose of establishing a stable and a national government for the Haitians.

Consequently, this treaty can not be considered as a legal document, its vinculum juris has not been performed under the legal circumstances provided by law, under the special legislation of Haiti for having a contract.

I have to state, furthermore, that this treaty is contrary to all the principles laid down in the Constitution of the United States. This treaty is contrary to all the treaties signed by the United States and Haiti, on the 22nd of October, 1907, at the Hague Peace Conference, as just now similar to the one taking place in Washington at the Disarmament Conference. The treaty of 1915, imposed upon Haiti is contrary to a special treaty of 1900 between the United States and Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. That is the treaty of January 7, 1900; to identify it with the treaty of arbitration between Haiti and the United States.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I must add that when that treaty took place the Haitian people were in peace and confidence with the United States Government, the United States people, and, during all the local disturbances, never the life of an American citizen had been put at stake, never any American interest was injured. Therefore, it was without any judicial or moral motive that the occupation of the Territory of Haiti took place.

Senator POMERENE. What was the date of the revolution which resulted in the death of President Sam?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I could not say exactly, but I remember that the newspaper published by Bobo said that he was trying to overthrow the Government of Sam, because the Government of Sam had received some proposals from

Upon those provisions, the chief of the executive is responsible to the people for the acts of his administration. The Secretaries of State are responsible to the Haitian people for the acts of their administration. The finances of the country are controlled by an institution named the des Comptes; so that at the end of a budgetary period all the accounts can be examined and approved. Under the provision of the present constitution of 1918, provided for Haiti by the American Government, the democratic institutions can not be found; the Chambre des Comptes is abolished. The Haitian people are unable to know what has been done for its services. The Haitian people have no longer the right to impeach the President of Haiti, or the Secretaries of State for acts of their administration. Now the President and Ministers of State under the existing constitution are free to do what their caprice may direct them to do. I jeopardize Haitian freedom, Haitian liberties and Haitian finances. I am always relying on the good will of the American officials in Haiti. This situation has caused a feeling of unrest and uncertainty, which can be remedied by the restoration of the old Haitian democratic institutions. For the new constitution provides that the election of the new President shall take place—

The CHAIRMAN. May I interrupt you at this moment, and if it is convenient, I will postpone my question until later? In view of the statement by the witness, and considering the status quo in Haiti to-day, would you recommend that the treaty be forthwith abrogated and the American flag withdrawn, say, in 90 days?

Mr. HUDICOURT. You ask if I recommend that?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir; emphatically.

For instance, the new constitution, in article 43, provides that the new President shall take place on the second Monday of April. Under the same constitution the President of Haiti shall be elected by the meeting of the house and senate, forming the national assembly. It is certainly, in other possible way, that the election of the President of Haiti is to take place.

Mr. ANGELL. This is provided for by articles 40 and 42.

The CHAIRMAN. Of the present constitution?

Mr. ANGELL. Of the present constitution.

Mr. HUDICOURT. For the present, there is in Haiti no chamber of deputies, no senate, and under the provision of this constitution, the President should have issued a decree by at least the 10th of October last ordering the election of the deputies and the senators. He did not. Why did he not? Nobody can say.

We are now in Haiti in a state of anxiety for the future of this country while the question of the presidential election is one of paramount importance for us, because the sentiment of the future of Haiti depends on the new representatives of that country. It is those representatives who are qualified to discuss and accept the new status of the country. So the Haitian people can say what the future will be, what will be the situation when, on the 15th of May next, the term of Mr. Dartiguenave expires.

Mr. ANGELL. Let me at this point, if I may, read in article A of the title or section of the present constitution, entitled "Temporary Provisions." Article A:

"The duration of the term of office of the President of the Republic shall terminate at the moment of the adoption of the present constitution shall terminate on the 15th of May, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. Has this constitution as a whole been published in the record?

Mr. ANGELL. No, sir; it has not.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we had better put that whole constitution in the record.

Mr. HOWE. What is that publication, Mr. Angell? Who gets out the publication?

Mr. ANGELL. I think it is an official Haitian government publication.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOWE. Do you want that to go into the record in French, or do you want it translated, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I think, if you have it translated, we can have it put in both languages.

no chamber and senate elected in the meantime, the term of the President automatically come to an end, and then there will be either a vacancy in the council of State exercising, under the temporary provisions of this constitution, the powers of the legislative body will be called upon to choose a President to the present incumbent.

The CHAIRMAN. I gathered that that was the sense of Mr. Hudicourt's argument, but I thought if it was presented in the form of a brief that would be better.

Mr. HUDICOURT. My argument is that the council of state is without power to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I quite understand.

Mr. HUDICOURT. And I want to prove to you for what reasons it is invalid.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you file a brief on that?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. On the question of the powers of the council of state.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would, because our time is very short.

Mr. HUDICOURT. As to how the duties of the legislative power are distributed from a constitutional point of view, what we call a legislative act, with the formal attribution of the legislative power, means the enacting of the law, the voting of the budget of the ways and means, and the sanctioning of the acts of the executive officers, and the approving of the expenses made following the appropriation of the budget, all of these attributions are exercised under the provision of chapter 1, section 1, of the constitution of 1918. First, by the Chamber of Deputies; and, second, by the Senate of the Republic, so that it is necessary for the fulfillment of such duties to have the concurrence of both chambers, while the duties imposed on the National Assembly are different, although the National Assembly is formed by the deputies and senators united together. That forms only one chamber, with special attributions.

The CHAIRMAN. I want only to renew the suggestion that on this legal point if you wish the committee really to follow the argument, you file a brief rather than make a verbal argument here.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But Mr. Hudicourt is at liberty to use his time as he sees fit.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I am just finishing.

Under the provisions of article 42 of the constitution, the attributions of the National Assembly, are: First, to elect the President of the Republic; second, to receive from him the constitutional oath; second, to declare war and peace; third, on the executive power; third, to approve or to reject treaties of peace, other treaties and international conventions; so that the National Assembly composed of the meeting of senators and deputies united in one chamber is invested only with those three functions.

Article D of the constitution vesting the legislative power in the council of state did not intend at all to vest in the council of state the powers and attributions of the National Assembly.

In résumé, I state before the committee that, on behalf of all Haitian people, I am making in advance a protest against the right which may be attributed to the present council of state of Haiti to elect a new President.

It is my duty to point out in that connection that if the Haitian people have been left free to mind their own business, without interference by the American military occupation of the territory, such difficulty would not have taken place.

I have to state that, on behalf of the Haitian people, I emphatically protest against the conclusions which the special committee of the Senate have arrived at in its preliminary statement.

I protest against the status quo recommended by that committee in the affairs of Haiti, as if this committee did not have at its disposition all the facts and important testimony recorded by it.

The recommendation of this special committee did not take into account the special revelations of the different witnesses who appeared before it.

In recommending, on the pretext of coordinating the powers of all the representatives representing the American Government in Haiti, the appointment of a commissioner, it seems to any thinking man that the special committee of the Senate has recommended the annexation of Haiti. It is contrary to the principles of the Senate and of the American Congress. These high missions can be found in the relations between France and Algeria and between Great Britain and Egypt. If it is possible to compare these relations it seems to me that the recommendation of this special committee is remain the same. The régime that you recommended for Haiti is the same as exists now in Egypt or in Tunis or in Algeria. It is quite impossible. It is contrary to even the treaty between Haiti and the United States. The first article of that treaty recognizes the independence of Haiti. If you propose that a high commissioner be appointed, because you have perceived that the functioning of the régime instituted for Haiti by the treaty of 1915 has proved a failure. And I am sure that when this high commissioner begins to function himself you will have the same result.

The CHAIRMAN. But after all, the policy which has actuated our Government in analogous circumstances has been rather different from the policy which has been pursued by the French or the British Governments?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Why?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, take Cuba for example.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Do you think that Cuba is satisfied with the régime?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, Cuba may not be wholly satisfied, but her situation is not to be compared with that of Tunis, for example.

Mr. HUDICOURT. We do not need to have the same situation as Cuba. We are not doing for Haiti what you did for Cuba. You delivered Cuba from Spain; you did not do that for us. The situation you impose upon us can not impose upon us. It is not the same analogy. We have a right to be free in the Caribbean Sea. It is our birthright, a right which was gained for us by our forefathers.

Now, gentlemen, you have proposed to civilize Haiti, to take Haiti a step toward civilization. It seemed to me that your purpose was to do as you did for yourselves. You can not teach others what you do for yourself. You learned liberty and freedom. You founded your Constitution upon the principles of liberty and freedom. If you had it for your country to take Haiti along those lines it would be very beneficial for all, but that is what you propose now.

You have destroyed the independence of Haiti. You have destroyed the aspirations of her people. You have not taught the Haitians liberty and freedom. On the contrary, the régime imposed upon Haiti is a régime of despotism and terror.

The last thing you have proposed for the good of the Haitians is a loan. The Haitians do not want that loan, the Haitians do not need that loan. At the present time the Haitians know that that loan is not proper economic measure for the Haitians; it is only proposed as a political measure. This loan must last more than 40 years, more than the period contemplated in the running of the convention of 1915. That is the principal reason why the Haitians protest against that proposed loan.

Senator POMERENE. You speak of that as if Haiti as a whole were protesting against that loan. There is not any doubt that you need financing. Can Haiti finance that proposition?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Haiti needs financing, certainly; I recognize it. As long as Haiti will be under your pressure Haiti refuses that loan. Haiti is to be financed, but first Haiti wants to be liberated.

Senator POMERENE. How does she want to be financed? Whom does she want to do the financing?

Mr. HUDICOURT. That is a question we are not contemplating now. We would say that as long as we will be under pressure we will not be able to give a free consent.

I have just received from Haiti a paper, the Novelliste, from which I quote (N. B.—The original quotation or translation is not at hand. The witness read stated in substance that it was reported from the United States that in connection with the proposed loan to Haiti, Article V of the treaty of 1915 might again be enforced according to its terms.)

That means that as long as the Haitian Government does not free itself from the proposed loan the pay of the President and the secretaries of the State and the council of the state will be stopped. We do not need a loan upon those conditions.

Senator POMERENE. You will pardon this suggestion. Of course we have newspapers printed in this country, too, and very often it happens that editorials are printed they represent the view of the editor rather than the view of the public as a whole. I say, we have papers of that kind.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I beg your pardon; this is an announcement. This is not an opinion; it is not an editorial of the newspaper men.

Senator POMERENE. An announcement by whom?

who will go either to the State Department or to the financial adviser, who is now in Washington.

Second, the loan will permit the payment of the debt held in France at present advantageous rates of exchange. Third, it will permit the payment of the so-called internal claims against the Haitian Government. Fourth, there was a sharp competition between the banks. And finally, in the present condition of the money market, if the loan is not presently consummated, the bids are likely, all of them, to be withdrawn; because, after all, banks subscribe to loans only to sell them. No one of these banks, as you know, holds such a loan, whether it be Belgian or Uruguayan, or what not, in its vaults.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes; I completely understand you. But it seems to me that the necessity for this loan is a question which rests only with the Haitian people above all.

You say that this loan will be very beneficial for the Haitian people. It will permit the refunding of the French debt. I do not know what authority the question of the refunding of the French debt rests upon. France is not calling for this debt. This debt is not due.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you can pay 12 francs with $1 instead of 100 francs with $1 you certainly are not losing anything.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Do you think that the conditions of the bid realize the advantages asserted by you now? I say not, because if the Haitian people have anything to gain from the exchange in France the Haitian will lose on the conditions of the loan. We owe a debt to France, but we are very free from it now. We do not intend to owe you a large debt, because we are not under your pressure. Our country is occupied by your military troops. We are living now under martial law. We do not care to owe you so large a debt. We have a long term for paying that debt to France. We have always been the debtors of France. Since the declaration of our independence we have been the debtors of France. We have never had any hard dealings with France regarding that debt. We have never been subjected to any threat by France about that debt, because we always paid the interest on the amortization. It was only when our country was occupied by the United States, when our customs duties for the payment of such amortization interest were seized by the military authorities on shore in Haiti that the payment did not take place.

Mr. ANGELL. Let me point out in this connection that I have been told it seems to be an appropriate time to produce it—a copy of the letter of Lee Higginson & Co., one of the three firms concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. A letter addressed to whom, Captain?

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. McIlhenny.

Senator POMERENE. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. ANGELL. The date of the letter is November 7, 1921. In that letter the terms of the offer are made conditional upon the carrying out of the treaty between the United States and Haiti providing for the establishment of a claims commission, dated October 3, 1919. I offer that for the record at this time. I have here a copy of it.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

NOVEMBER 7, 1921.

E. A. McILHENNY, Esq.,
Financial Adviser, Republic of Haiti,
Care of Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Subject to the approval of our counsel as to the legal validity of the bonds and their conformity with the provisions of treaty and other diplomatic agreements between the Republic of Haiti and the United States of America, we offer 85 and interest for $16,000,000 30-year sinking fund gold bonds of the Republic of Haiti to be dated November 1, 1921, and to be payable November 1, 1951. These bonds are to be issued in pursuance of the treaty of September 18, 1915, the additional act of October 25, 1917, and the protocol of October 3, 1919, all between the Republic of Haiti and the United States of America, and any interpretations of the provisions supplementary thereto hereinafter specified. The bonds shall be issued in denominations of $500 and $1,000, and shall be registered principal only. Interest and principal of said bonds to be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness. The bonds shall not be callable for 15 years except for the sinking fund, the coupon a first charge upon all the internal revenues of Haiti and a second charge upon the customs revenues of Haiti next in order after the payment of the expenses of any officer or officers who may be appointed by the President of Haiti upon nomination by the President of the United States, while the officers shall collect and control the allocation of the hypothecated revenues aforesaid so as to make certain that adequate provision shall be made for the amortization and interest on the loan, all as contemplated by Article 8 of the protocol of October 8, 1918.

Mr. HUDICOURT. The offer is for 30-year bonds.

Senator POMERENE. At what rate?

Mr. ANGELL. Six per cent. The offer was at $85.

Senator POMERENE. What would that figure out?

Mr. ANGELL. The interest rate?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. I have not figured it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is 85 for so much of the loan as shall be repaid at this time?

Mr. ANGELL. $14,000,000 of the loan at present.

The CHAIRMAN. If I remember, that bid differed from the others in that it permitted subsequent issues to be made at the subsequent market rate, which should be better to the Haitian Government, whereas the other bids were predicated upon the assumption that all future issues should be at the market and not the future market.

Mr. ANGELL. Article 8 of this protocol of October 3, 1919, provides for control by an officer or officers, duly appointed by the president of Haiti, of the collection of the hypothecated revenues will be provided for during the term of the loan at the expiration of the aforesaid treaty of 1915, so as to make certain that adequate provision shall be made for the amortization and interest on the loan.

In other words, any such loan would mean that the revenues of Haiti would of course be tied up in that way during the life of the loan. That, as I understand it, is what Mr. Hudicourt is objecting to at this time.

Senator POMERENE. Has any accountant figured that out to see what it would be? I ask that question for this reason: I happen to know that the bonds which were made to our vast railroad companies here within the last few years drew interest at the rate of, I think, something like 7.40 per cent. The Pennsylvania Co. had a loan at that rate, and there were certain other companies which had about the same rate. I think the New York Central was one of them. This loan is at 6 per cent, but it is offered at 85. They are 30-year bonds, but I do not know what that would figure out.

Mr. ANGELL. I have not figured it, and so far as I know no accountant has figured it.

Mr. HUDICOURT. May I be permitted to proceed? Mr. Chairman, I think that that loan would permit the payment of the interest due on the existing debt. That would be of very great advantage for the Haitians. If you are right; in fact you are wrong. We certainly have an institution in Haiti which we have always considered as a savings bank for the Haitians.

Mr. ANGELL. There are no savings banks in Haiti, are there?

Mr. HUDICOURT. No, sir; there are not. But since the day when Caperton seized all the customs revenues of Haiti no interest at all has been paid to the buyers of that debt. Consequently, the miseries and sufferings of the Haitian population have increased more and more. So all the buyers of that debt found themselves under the urgent necessity to sell their bonds. To whom did they sell their bonds? To the Bank Nationale d'Haiti, which is a subsidiary of the National City Bank. So that the most part the bonds of the so-called Haitian internal debt belong to the present time to the National City Bank. If this loan is contracted with the National City Bank to betterment of the financial situation of the Haitians it is a wrong cause in fact the loan is proposed by the National City Bank to repay the National City Bank.

Senator POMERENE. That is, it is refunding from debt? Is that what you mean by your statement?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I mean that the National City Bank, through its branch in Port au Prince, the Bank Nationale d'Haiti, has bought the greater part of the bonds of the Haitian internal debt, and if this loan is contracted with the National City Bank for the payment of the interest and the amortization of the internal Haitian debt, it is made to the National City Bank.

If there is any reason why you do not care to answer that kind of question I withdraw that part of the question.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Thank you very much, because I am not in the position as you.

Senator POMERENE. Well, that answers it.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I do not wish to express any judgment about what Mr. Dartiguenave would do. You know what I mean.

Senator POMERENE. I understand you, and I have withdrawn that question.

Mr. HUDICOURT. The National City Bank, it is understood, proposes a face value of $14,000,000, at 7½ per cent, issued at 92, and payable in years. Of the $14,000,000 face value, therefore, Haiti will actually receive $12,880,000. Now, this loan is urged and specifically recommended by McCormick as essential to progress in Haiti; that it is needed to put public works, road building, etc. But from this sum the following may be immediately subtracted:

First, the debt to France of $6,668,980. This debt consists of two parts: the debt of 1896 at 6 per cent, the debt of 1910 at 5 per cent. At the time of writing France has made no demand for the repayment of the capital of the debt. The interest on it was paid regularly by the Haitians until the American occupation, and, although the occupation did not at first pay the interest, it has subsequently paid the interest up to date. But the claim of Haiti's financial adviser, Mr. John McIlhenny, and the bankers is that now would be a good time to pay this debt. The fact is, however, that it is first of all obvious that French exchange will be depreciated for many years. Second, that under the terms of this new loan, issued at 92 and bearing interest at 14 per cent, the Haitians will have to pay 10 per cent more, respectively, than the two French loans, the Haitians are to pay by this arrangement $9.50 per thousand more on the first loan and $10.50 per thousand more on the second loan than they would otherwise have to pay.

Senator POMERENE. Did I understand you to give the rate at which the French loans were floated?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. And what was that? I want to fix it in my mind.

Mr. HUDICOURT. In 1896 at 6 per cent, and the second one in 1910 at 5 per cent.

Senator POMERENE. Are those loans due?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir; they are due to France now.

Senator POMERENE. At what rate were they floated, or at what were they discounted, if at all? Or did you get the face of the loan at this rate?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Oh, no; we did not.

Senator POMERENE. Do you remember what you got?

Mr. HUDICOURT. For the 1910 loan we received about 47,000,000 francs out of the 65,000,000 francs.

Senator POMERENE. That is, for the par value of the loan, which was 65,000,000 francs, you received 47,000,000 francs?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir.

Senator ODDIE. That is a little over 70 per cent—71 or 72.

Senator POMERENE. What was the other loan, the loan of 1896? What was there on that?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I do not remember about that.

Mr. ANGELL. I am not sure that the witness understood your first question. A moment ago, as to whether the loans were now due. May I ask him if the 1896 loan was French?

Mr. HUDICOURT (after conferring with Mr. Angell). Oh, no; not yet.

Senator POMERENE. Then you misunderstood me. When are they due?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I believe in 30 years.

Senator POMERENE. They run 30 years yet?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Thirty years from now—that is, more or less; I am not accurate.

Senator POMERENE. I am glad you corrected that, because it left me with a wrong impression.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Another charge subtracted from the actual sum of $12,880,000 which Haiti would receive is the claim against the Haitian Government by the National City Bank controlled railway. The railway was begun in 1904 by a contractor named MacDonald. The former president and present manager of the road is Roger L. Farnham, of the National City Bank. Under the arrangement with the Haitian Government the latter was to pay 10 per cent of the cost of the railway.

The CHAIRMAN. I can only say this now, that the committee will try to call to the attention of the State Department the matter of the payment of these claims by the bank and those affiliated with it.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the bank would not be tempted to buy those bonds if they did not know that the matter was completely safe. Probably they know that through the channel of the State Department, or Mr. McIlhenny, the financial adviser.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, Mr. McIlhenny may be translated to another question.

Mr. HUDICOURT. The Haitians do not care. It is just the same to them whether they want for the future and that is that they shall not have any financial adviser at all. That is their present aspiration.

Mr. ANGELL. This statement that has been made by Mr. Hudicourt with reference to the matter of the loan is based upon the announcement made by the President at Port au Prince, to which he has referred, of the terms of the various offers of the three banking houses. He has got it upon that assumed basis of the memorandum takes up only the offer of the National City Bank, as one of the three offers. It does not consider the other two.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Now, I have to state that all the previous witnesses who appeared before the special committee have had great care to describe the Haitian people, the Haitian population, and the Haitian character. It is a patriotic duty and my personal duty to protest against such attempts by the American officers who have for a long time lived in Haiti and who are supposed to know best the Haitian population and the Haitian character. I have shown an obvious feeling against Haiti. I protest against that tendency.

Brig. Gen. Smedley Butler, who appeared before the Senate special committee who testified without oath—please remember that circumstance—who testified in regard to the destruction of the legislative bodies in Port au Prince, that when he signified to the president of the National Assembly, Mr. Vincent, that all the senators and deputies had to go away, Mr. Vincent said to him, "I am hungry," and General Butler considered that this from Mr. Vincent was an invitation to go to lunch with him. One thing General Butler did not say, and that is in what language he expressed to Mr. Vincent the notion of going away, and in what language Mr. Vincent expressed himself, to say, "I am hungry." Surely Mr. Vincent did not say, "I am hungry." He said in French. What did he say in French?

I must state that Mr. Vincent is one of the most remarkable characters in Port au Prince. He is one of the most cultured Haitians. He has studied in Port au Prince. He has a diploma of doctor of laws from the Faculty of Law of the University of Paris. Mr. Vincent is one of our most important writers. He is a man of character. He has been my classmate. I have been friendly with him for 40 years. I must say Mr. Vincent never said, "I am hungry" ("J'ai faim"). Mr. Vincent told General Butler, "Je m'en fous" ("I don't give a damn"). That is what he really said. Of course, "J'ai faim" and "J'en m'en fous" is the same to a man that does not know French or Creole.

I say this to make clear to the special committee what kind of misunderstandings have been prevalent in Haiti between the Haitians and the Americans. While they think they understand French and that they understand the Haitians, they do not, and the interpreter will often change for the worse the message conveyed by the Haitians.

Almost every witness, called for a solemn purpose, represented the Haitian people as being completely illiterate. At page 570 of the record General Butler stated:

"The Haitian people are divided into two classes: one class wears shoes and the other does not. The class that wears shoes is about 1 per cent. I should say that not more than one-fifth of 1 per cent of the population can read and write."

Mr. Farnham says about the same thing. Col. Alexander Williams says the same thing. General Cole said the same.

Moreover, when he was asked what instrumentality he had used to have all the country patrolled by the gendarmes, General Butler said (520):

"They would be ordered to a certain man's plantation, and the man would be asked to indorse on the card that the patrol had been there."

If only one-fifth of 1 per cent of the whole population of Haiti, or 250,000 people, can hardly read or write, that means 2,500 people, in all the population of the towns, how was it possible for General Butler to have all the plantations in the interior people who could indorse the list?

Mr. HOWE. I recall, Mr. Chairman, that members of the committee saw a number of typical schools in Haiti during their visit and were very much interested in that question.

Mr. HUDICOURT. General Barnett, on page 442 of the record, answered the question by Senator Pomerene whether these priests there have charge of the education of the children, said:

"I think probably they were parochial schools, because all that we saw were Catholic priests."

On page 673, General Cole stated:

"The school system was entirely a political affair; and with the exception of the schools maintained by the church, there were practically no educational facilities for the poorer classes, and these in a few localities only. Probably 75 per cent were illiterate."

I have proof that there were in Haiti no schools established or maintained by the priests. There were never any schools established and maintained by priests—I mean the Catholic priests. Maybe you have visited some schools maintained by the Brothers of Christian Education, but all of them are national schools. The priests—I mean the members of the clergy—do not establish or maintain any schools in Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. When you say "national school," you mean a school supported in whole or in part by government funds?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I mean a school maintained and supported wholly by national funds.

Before leaving Haiti I wrote M. Conan, the chief of the clergy in Haiti, asking him if there was in Haiti one school established or maintained by the Catholic Church. He replied to me by this card [translating]:

"T. Conan, archbishop of Port au Prince, hands to Mr. Pierre Hudicourt the following clippings from a manuscript of the collective report of the bishops of Haiti, 1922."

(The witness exhibited to the committee the four clippings of type-matter referred to, read the same in French, and translated them, as follows.)

"It is not, perhaps, useless to remind the foreign readers that the schools established by the clergy under the religious congregations, although by general the most largely attended, form, moreover, only a small part of the existing schools in Haiti."

"Except the boarding school of La Lue, the day school of Ste. Rose at Port au Prince and the day schools at Cape Haitien, Aux Cayes, and Jacmel, the primary classes at the Little Seminary, the schools conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph are all national schools."

"Except for the boarding school of Notre Dame of the Sacred Heart at Port au Prince, some classes at Jeremie, Port-de-Paix and Trugau, and certain primary classes at St. Louis of Gonzague, the schools directed by the Sisters of Wisdom are national schools."

"For foreign readers we think it proper to remark that except for the boarding school of St. Louis of Gonzague, all the schools directed by the Sisters of Wisdom are national schools, founded upon the request of the Government, and their supervisors and teachers receive their salaries from the state."

Senator ODDIE. What proportion of the school children in Haiti are educated in those church schools that you have mentioned?

Mr. HUDICOURT. There is no church school at all in Haiti.

Senator ODDIE. But you said "except for" those particular schools.

Mr. HUDICOURT. There are no church schools. They are private schools, but they are not maintained by the church. The church has nothing to do with those schools.

Mr. HOWE. I think the Senator wants to know the relative number of pupils in the schools supported by the Government and in the schools not supported by the Government.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I can not say. I know only that there are many national schools supported by the Government that are managed by the Brothers of Christian Instruction, by the Sisters of Wisdom, and by the Sisters of St. Joseph. I know there are many of them, but I am not in a position to tell you what the proportion is.

Senator ODDIE. Do you not think there should be a greater work done in the primary school system in Haiti, that it should be extended?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Certainly; that is a necessity for all countries to develop the primary school system. The more educated citizens you have the better be cured, because he was sick. "Who is your physician?" said Mr. E. "Doctor Armand," he replied. Mr. Blehot said, "No; I will not give you a furlough until you call on Doctor Decker." Doctor Decker is an American physician. He refused, saying that it was his intention to go to see Mr. Armand and he would be cured by Doctor Armand.

Mr. Blehot granted him the furlough, and he went away, and he was cured by Doctor Armand. Some time passed, and Mr. Blehot was again called upon Doctor Decker; he was attended by Doctor Decker for a number of weeks. He did not have any relief in his state of health, and he was necessary to call upon Doctor Armand himself. Within three or four weeks he was completely cured by Doctor Armand.

We have a hospital in Port au Prince, the Hospital of St. Francis, which is attended only by Haitian physicians. They have a monthly report which is published in Port au Prince and which shows how many operations take place in their hospital every month. They give more than 4,000 operations to poor people. They attend to all the poor people in Haiti. It is the deed of the American occupation to attend to the poor people in Haiti.

In résumé, my contention is this: That as far as the American Government does not adopt in regard to Haiti another policy, the complete restoration of the independence of Haiti and the abrogation of the treaty, can not be ameliorated in Haiti. There will always be anxiety, uneasiness, even hatred, between each other.

It is an open secret that race prejudice has played in Haiti a great part in the irritation which exists among those people, the Haitians and the Americans. The Haitian people, in their own country, on their own soil, on their own territory, conquered by their forefathers and which they have been obliged to consider their own for the future, are considered with much contempt by the newcomers. Those difficulties will be prevalent, predominant as long as the black man has been restored to his privileges in Haiti.

The Haitians consider now that although they have been subject to a white tyranny, to a black tyranny from their own people they are now subject to a white tyranny. They believe that the principles which have been established by those who founded the American democracy must be a heritage for the people of all the world who have the same political aspirations that we have. Never mind the color of the skin; it is sufficient that the moral qualities, the interior qualities are the same. The Haitian people demand but one thing, to be treated as human beings, as members of the association of peoples and nations. They are entitled to all of the rights which all the peoples of the world are entitled to, and they rely upon the good sense and the good faith of the American people and the American Government to be restored to their privileges.

There is an important point that I had forgotten to submit to the committee. It relates to the Haitian tribunals. The Haitian courts have been subjected to severe criticism from those who have preceded me before this committee.

All the Haitian courts, with the exception of the Supreme Court, have been severely criticized. The Haitian judges have been represented to the committee as venal. I protest on behalf of the Haitian judges against such an accusation.

Mr. ANGELL. You have been president of the Bar Association of Port au Prince, have you not?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir; president of the Bar Association of Port au Prince for two years.

There is no question that among the Haitian judges you can find some who do not have all the necessary qualities for a good judge. Such things can be found not only in Haiti but in the United States itself. Moreover, the average judge in the United States, in France, and in Japan, as in Haiti, are standing.

Based upon some testimony, the chairman of this committee put the question to Gen. Smedley Butler:

"Do you not think it might be interesting, in this connection, to compare the capitulations between the foreign bureau of Turkey on the one hand and the capitulations on the other, and the system of the administration of justice in Egypt? Does the administration commit itself to a policy?"

General Butler answered:

"I think that might be well. I am not familiar with the Egyptian situation."

"The CHAIRMAN. Its a long time since I have studied it, but I am under the impression that in Egypt an assessor sits on the bench with the judge, and advises him in the formulation of his decisions."

By this means the local officers of the gendarmerie have been set against the supreme courts.

Mr. HOWE. You base that statement on General Catlin's letter, do you?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Certainly, sir. The decisions of the Haitian courts are submitted to any officers, because the officers, the representatives of the power, the police force, the gendarmerie, are executors of laws and decisions rendered by the representative of the law. It is not their business to examine if those decisions have been rendered conformably with the law. If a bad decision contrary to law, carrying any miscarriage of justice is rendered, that decision must be executed by all officers—save the rare persons who have been subjected to such judgments to appeal against decisions before the highest courts.

I have to state that the chief of the military occupation in Haiti is communicating this vade mecum for the officers in command in Haiti:—

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand what the witness means by that. I have to say that the commandant of the marine brigade, in communicating this vade mecum—

Mr. HUDICOURT (continuing). This modus operandi for the American gendarme officers has destroyed the true principle upon which are based all right.

The CHAIRMAN. That holds not only for the American gendarme officers but for the Haitian gendarme officers, does it not?

Mr. HUDICOURT. But the Haitian gendarme officers—there are none.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg your pardon; I have seen them myself.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I have the testimony of General Butler.

The CHAIRMAN. Never mind; General Butler has not been in Haiti for a long time. I with my own eyes in the city of Port au Prince first saw in 1899 some of the gendarmerie Haitian officers.

Mr. HUDICOURT. The city of Port au Prince?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HOWE. We have a picture of them.

The CHAIRMAN. I submit it to Mr. Angell if I am not right.

Mr. HUDICOURT. No. There is some confusion, because some days before I arrived in Port au Prince the chief of the gendarmerie made public that he had established a training school for Haitian gendarme officers—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you will excuse me if I say that I know that from the officers in the training school, they were in command of troops; that I saw them not only in Port au Prince but in the interior—Haitian commissioned officers of the gendarmerie.

Mr. HUDICOURT. There are not a great many.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, there are about 40 or 50.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Forty or fifty? I am very glad to know it, because I have been a member of the commission sent by Haiti to have an accord established with the gendarmerie. We established that a Haitian could be made an officer of the gendarmerie up to the grade of lieutenant, but the Secretary of War refused to sign that accord, on the pretense that there was another accord which was being negotiated in Haiti. When the second one came up for consideration they had provided nothing about the Haitian officers; they struck out the provision concerning the Haitian officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact is that there are between 40 and 50 commissioned officers.

Mr. HUDICOURT. That is not the question. The question is that the decision issued by General Catlin concerned both Haitian and American gendarme officers, but there is no reason for even a Haitian officer of the gendarmerie to revise a decision of the supreme court of Port au Prince.

You told me, Mr. Chairman, that you were a journalist. I do not know whether you are a jurist?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. HUDICOURT. I judge that although you are not a jurist you are of sufficient knowledge to know that being a judge necessitates some knowledge of law. To be a good judge you must have studied law about 20 or 25 years. It is not possible to vest the power of revising the decisions of the Haitian gendarme officers of the gendarmerie, either Haitian or American. That is anarchy, lawlessness.

Take notice of this circumstance, that General Catlin said that knowledge of Haitian law was necessary. Do you know what is being done at the present

Now, I am at your disposal if you have any questions to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we will postpone that examination until later.

(Whereupon, at 12.50 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2 p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee resumed its session at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the recess.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are ready, gentlemen, we will proceed.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Mr. Chairman, I must return to some consideration laid down before you. You remember that I read the order of the Government relative to the administration of justice and the right given to the gendarmerie to revise the decision of the courts. I have to point out a contradiction in a report made by Admiral Knapp. At a certain time, Charles McKinley, of Portland, Oreg., sent to the Secretary of the Navy a questionnaire. When Admiral Knapp came to Haiti from Washington, designated by the Secretary of the Navy to answer those questions, those questions there is this one:

"27. Is it true that the military authorities have overturned the decisions of the civil court where persons accused of crime have been acquitted?"

The answer is:

"I know personally of no such case, and from inquiries made of the military authorities have been longer in Haiti and who know more intimately the conditions of the country, not find that there is any such case. On the contrary orders have been repeatedly given to uphold the Haitian civil courts and not to interfere where injustice was manifest."

Mr. HOWE. What is the date of that document from which you just read?

Mr. HUDICOURT. There is no date. It is on page 317 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920.

Some time ago the Haitian Government received a communication through the channel of the American legation in Port au Prince, concerning the education of the marines. The American Government insisted upon the Haitian Government having marines handle questions of education in Haiti. It seems to me that is very bad, because in this same report from which I have read:

Mr. HOWE. Let us have the page, Doctor.

Mr. HUDICOURT. Page 384. When General Lejeune appeared before the committee of the House on Naval Affairs on the 28th of February, 1920, testified about the question of the Quantico vocational schools:

"General LEJEUNE. You may call it vocational, but we have a course. We have a course in English. We have men down there who can scarcely read and write, and we are giving them instruction in the English language and then in advanced English and mathematics and higher mathematics."

The CHAIRMAN. What is the bearing of this testimony?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I am going to tell you [continuing reading]:

"We are going to try to have a grammar school, a high school, and a technical institute."

That means that it is impossible to confide to the hands of the Haitian people the education of the Haitian people.

The CHAIRMAN. Who proposed to confine the education of the Haitian people to the marines?

Mr. HUDICOURT. It was a suggestion made by the American Government through the American legation to the Government of Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. Under what date? Do you know?

Mr. HUDICOURT. December 21, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Navy at that time?

Mr. HUDICOURT. I can not say. I know that this memorandum was sent to the Government of Haiti by the American minister—

The CHAIRMAN. It must have been Mr. Daniels or Mr. Colby. I think that the opinions and suggestions are of less moment to-day than they were at that time they were made.

Mr. HUDICOURT. At the same time there was a report sent by General Lejeune to the Secretary of the Navy relating to this question. This report was published at the time by the Haitian newspapers in Port au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say that in my judgment no member of this committee would believe in confiding to the Marine Corps the control of Haiti.

such that afterwards the President called the minister of justice and dismissed him. That means that the President of Haiti has no power even to dismiss a minister of his own choice.

If you have read the testimony of General Cole, you have remarked that General Cole testified he had stood by Doctor Herreaux, that he had supported him. He had protested against all endeavors to have Doctor Herreaux as minister of finance. What kind of a man is a president, a chief executive, who can not discharge a minister who has ceased to have his confidence?

The situation in Haiti is such that there is nothing but the creation of a military occupation of Haiti to have things running well. It is impossible to have the people of Haiti taught the principles of democracy, to establish, in other words, a constitutional and stable government in Haiti, unless the people of Haiti are free to have a government of their own choice. As long as we impose upon the people of Haiti a decision you will have to face many difficulties.

Take, for instance, the proposed loan. If this loan is consummated, the people of Haiti will never accept it. I am very happy for my presence before your special committee to give this warning to the people of Haiti that this loan will be repudiated by the people of Haiti. If the people of Haiti have any liberty or freedom, they will repudiate that loan, because it is forced upon us.

If the President of Haiti is, like he is now, a puppet, a rubber stamp, chief of the American occupation in Haiti, has he the power to bear the responsibility of the Haitian people? All the officers of the government know that if the American troops are withdrawn to-night at 5 o'clock, Dartiguenave will withdraw before that hour; he will withdraw before 5 o'clock himself. He has been forced upon the will of the citizens of Haiti. He is not supported by his people. He has not the confidence of his people. He has not the true expression of the popular manifestation.

Some time ago the American Government proposed some reform that would mean for us some good things—the transformation of the present state bank into the Bank Nationale of Haiti. There was an ultimatum, like the ultimatum shown you this morning, published by the paper in Port au Prince. The ultimatum was refused. I do not know why. Do you know what happened?

Mr. ANGELL. You refer now to the events of July and August, 1920?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. They are already in the record of these hearings?

Mr. HUDICOURT. Yes. The salaries of the President and the secretaries of State and of the council of State were held up until they should accept the demands of the American Legation. Some time ago the President of Haiti decided to bestow upon some American officers a medal, which he called a medal of honor. This medal was bestowed upon Col. John H. Russell, Col. McCarty Little, Gen. F. M. Wise, Gen. R. S. Hooker, Maj. Thomas Turner, Maj. Ralph L. Shepard, Col. Walter N. Hill, and Maj. A. A. Van Grift.

This is the report of Colonel Russell, as it appears in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920, at page 302:

"The brigade commander, on April 28, 1920, reported as follows:

"A reception was held at the palace this afternoon and the President awarded the medaille militaire to Colonel Russell, Lieut. Cola Little, and Hooker, and Maj. Turner, Hill, and Shepard.

"The President before the reading of the citations made a little speech and seemed very much in earnest in his remarks, at one time his eyes were up with tears and he had to turn away. He stated that we had brought order and had given to his country the semblance of a nation."

You are gentlemen, you are men of honor, men of pride and dignity, and I challenge now your own conscience. If you were citizens of the Republic of Haiti, how would you feel at the reading of such a thing—the President of Haiti saying to Colonel Russell, "You have given to this country the semblance of a nation"? It is a shame. So I feel I am justified in saying that the President can not enjoy the confidence of his compatriots.

One of the principal motives of the proposed loan is to have a survey made of the land in Haiti and some public works concerning irrigation, etc. It is a great mistake from the standpoint of the possible investors in Haiti to think they can not go to Haiti to invest their money unless they draw a return of more than 10 per cent. This thing has been testified by Mr.

stances that that protocol can not bind us. It has no kind of legal force. A legislative body is constituted in Haiti it will be possible for that body to reject the provisions of that treaty. So all things which are upon the provisions of that treaty will fall as a house of cards. I am now in an opportunity which is offered me to-day to give this warning to the Haitians to intend now to make the loan based upon the extension of the treaty and the protocol, that the Haitian people are not bound now.

Referring to my previous statement concerning the constitution I want to point out that the people of Haiti do not regard that constitution as a valid act, because that act was forced upon them against their will. The thing which should be done now is to call the people of Haiti to vote a new constitution of its own, through the intermediary of the representatives duly elected and selected by the people of Haiti. That is the best way to have peace in Haiti.

On the date of the 18th of October, 1907, the second Hague peace conference adopted a convention relating to the opening of hostilities. This convention is based upon the principle that neither belligerent should be taken by surprise. That convention has been signed by the Republic of Haiti, through your representative here, and by the duly appointed delegates of the Republic of the United States. We are consequently bound together not to take each other by surprise.

The United States Government did not observe the provision of that convention in regard to Haiti. Without warning, without any break in our relations, the territory of Haiti was invaded by American troops. The houses of the country, the sole means of revenue of that country, were put under the direction of your military forces. Martial law was declared and the rights of the Haitians were destroyed and the independence of the country was destroyed.

Although I have not the great honor to be an American citizen—and I say that it would be a very great honor for me to belong to your country—if I was not a Haitian I would be glad to be an American. I know as a citizen of your Constitution provides that the United States can not break relations with a friendly nation without the approval of Congress. I have before you the original circumstances which preceded the invasion of Haiti by the American military troops. It is clear that before Admiral Caperton took that step something had been arranged between the Department of the Department of the Navy, because in the records I have read that there was a perfect accord between those two departments relative to Haitian affairs. It seems to me that the things that happened followed a straight way. My impression is that those things took place upon a program drawn up in advance.

On behalf of the Haitian people I beg the committee to inquire into the original circumstances of the landing of troops on the soil of Haiti to know under what authority, bound as we were by official and formal treaties, those treaties were broken in order to make war against Haiti, for when American troops landed in Haiti they were there as an act of war. We want to know under what authority, under what authorization Mr. R. B. Daniels, and Mr. Lansing decided to make war against the nation.

This question is not only of historical significance. There is a necessity for the world at large to know how much the treaties between the United States and other nations can bind the United States. Because at the present time you are at the top of the world. Every nation is kneeling before you. You have the might. You have the wealth. You have in your hands all possible power. I hope that all that power will not be used for mere mockery, because, in the first days of your history, liberty and justice were your aim. The blood of your country was poured everywhere upon the soil of the United States for liberty and freedom. Your social and political life is based upon the principle which constitutes the most precious inheritance from your forefathers. It is a necessity for us to know under what authority these representatives of your Republic have decided to make war against a friendly and weak nation.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything to say, Mr. Angell?

Mr. ANGELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Oddie?

Senator ODDIE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Howe?

Mr. HOWE. I think not, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that will conclude the hearings for the day.

doubt whatever, tends naturally to support what his Government, his country has done. As your chairman expressed it in his remarks in public: "you are acting as impartial and loyal friends of Haiti. That quality of your functions necessarily raises the work of the committee above mere partisanship or ordinary patriotic reactions."

In other words, I ask you gentlemen, in your final consideration of the question not to flinch where the issue is squarely presented on the point which I believe have been brought to your attention and on which I stand today, showing that in some respects our Government and our country have not done toward this little weaker neighbor of Haiti as we would have wished. That is, in a sense, if I may compare my own position to yours, my own position on reaction. I am both attorney for these groups of Haitian and American citizens, and I am also, myself, an American citizen, and as such a natural reaction is in favor, of course, of what my country has done rather than seizing upon any doubtful action as an excuse for shrill denunciations.

Before coming to the facts of the intervention and the history of the doctrine, I want to speak for a moment, briefly, of the development and history of the Monroe doctrine. I do not need, nor intend to go back through an exhaustive discussion of its development, other than to point out the original declaration of our solidarity with Latin America against encroachments, actual or threatened, from the Western Hemisphere, gave us a leadership, real or assumed, in this territory. And with out growth and that leadership has become, of course, very real and very great. The evolution of that position of leadership naturally gave rise through time and particularly in the past generation, to a situation in this country corresponding fear in Latin America to the south, that our declaration of "hands off" to Europe, somehow gave us some standing to inquire, exercise, at least, some supervision over the affairs of Latin America.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, when this expansion by implication of the Monroe doctrine began, in your judgment?

Mr. ANGELL. The first indications of it that I have seen in running through the history of the Monroe doctrine, were subsequent to 1900, when, I propose to show, by reading from certain official or semi-official statements of representative Americans of what the Monroe doctrine is, these Americans did point out that the Monroe doctrine did not imply any such thing as statements being in answer to the question, I believe, which was then being raised as to how far, if at all, the Monroe doctrine did give the United States any such standing to inquire into or exercise any supervision over the affairs of Latin America.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked the question precisely, because I thought you would fix the expansion by implication as beginning after 1900. I wish to read Olney's message in the Venezuelan controversy.

Mr. ANGELL. I may be mistaken, but I think, if I remember correctly, is a statement in one of Secretary Seward's messages, as far back as the Civil War, to this general effect that I am going to emphasize, that the Monroe doctrine does not imply any right on the part of the United States to exercise supervision over the internal affairs of Central America.

As a correct general statement, Secretary Blaine said, in his address which came, in 1889, to the first International American conference—

Senator POMERENE. What are you reading from there?

Mr. ANGELL. This particular volume, or the speech?

Senator POMERENE. This particular volume?

Mr. ANGELL. This is a volume called American Foreign Policy, being a publication of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Division of Foreign Course and Education, Publication No. 17, it being a collection of documents purporting to be quotations in full.

This is Secretary Blaine's address to the first International American conference, in 1889, in which he said:

"We believe that friendship and not force, the spirit of just law and not the violence of the mob, should be the recognized rule of administration by American nations and in American nations."

Mr. Root, ex-Secretary of State, delivered an address as president of the American Society of International Law, in Washington, April 22, 1914, which is entitled "The real Monroe doctrine," being a very full consideration of the doctrine and its implications. It is too long to read here, but I will leave I will quote certain passages.

Now, with those statements, authoritative, I believe, regarding that :
tion or that aspect of the Monroe doctrine, I want to consider, only for for a moment now, the essential facts of the intervention in 1915.

Haiti at that time—I am not ignoring the facts nor do I believe there is an to attempt to palliate them—had suffered greatly in the past years and was suffering from internal disturbances which resulted in there being no stable central government. There had been revolutions. There had been some blood now and then. So far as the United States is concerned, I would maintain those troubles and disorders were of no direct concern to our country. For in those disorders—in that breakdown of the strong central government, I choose to call it such—no foreigners had ever been harmed or molested in their persons or in their property. The testimony in the record is all to effect. There is no contradiction on that. Foreign lives, both American those of the nationals of other countries, were perfectly safe. You have a room here to-day before you two persons who lived in Haiti long before and traveled about freely in the country without fear of being molested where. Their experience is the common experience of all whites in that country.

Haiti's foreign debt was not in the position which I understand the Santo Domingo was in when we took over the administration of customs under the treaty of 1907. The interest had been regularly paid to the marines went in. There had been recent suspension of amortization payments due in part, I believe, to the European war, which had then been in full for a year. In the European countries there had been, since the outbreak of the war, a general moratorium. Nothing in the internal affairs of Haiti concerned the United States, I maintain, at least concerned the United States to the extent of justifying armed intervention into the affairs of that country.

Haiti was a weak, helpless country, the second oldest Republic in the Western Hemisphere; but however weak, however ignorant her people were, however efficient you may believe her Government was from the point of view of two century American ideals of efficiency in government, she had been independent and as all who testified here have agreed, the Haitians did love their independence.
They were exceedingly proud of what they had done in throwing out French a hundred years before, and rightly or wrongly, they valued what had done for themselves. And other things being equal, they were, I think, titled to keep and maintain that.

I am not now going over all of the detailed facts of the intervention. It was a new revolution which had broken out in the spring of 1914 as a result of or by mere coincidence—I know not which—with attempts of our Government, beginning in July, 1914, to obtain control Haitian customs and finances. You will note in the record that there were separate attempts by diplomatic means, between July, 1914, and July, 1915, the United States to obtain a foothold in Haiti in the control of customs other functions of Government there. All those attempts were rebuffed Haitians. Then came the new revolution, the murder of President G. J.
Sam, and the landing of the marines. I have never heard any criticism any American or Haitian of the mere landing of our marines in Port-au-Prince in July, 1915. There was no government in existence for the moment objection is not to the landing of the marines but to their continued presence what they did after they were there.

If you have read carefully and remember only the high spots in Caperton's testimony, you will remember that between the 24th or 25th when we landed our marines, and the 15th day of September, 1915, the treaty was ratified by the Haitian executives, we had landed more than marines. We had seized the 10 principal ports of the Republic. We had full control of such communications as there were up and down the coast from town to town. We had seized the national funds. We had demanded to the order of our admiral, who disbursed them as he saw fit. We had martial law. We had elected a candidate for a president who would be favorable to the United States interests.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean "interests" or "policies"?

Mr. ANGELL. Well, I was using the term "interests" as interchangeable policy, in that sense; not so much from actual financial investments as poses and policies.

We had seen installed into office that candidate for the presidency advance of election, stated to our naval officers that if elected he would to do whatever the United States wished, including the customs control, cession of Mole St. Nicholas. We had put in office, substantially and Those are the two messages which constitute, so far as I can discover, Haitians our purposes of intervention.

Senator POMERENE. And that expressly destroys the inference which drew from the first, that we were interested in getting a landing done. No other interpretation can be placed on that.

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; but we did not always follow out the utterances and gestions of our public declarations.

Senator POMERENE. That may be a matter of difference of opinion.

Mr. ANGELL. If you think that those two statements express not an expression of intention, but our actual acts, how then are we to explain coercive methods that we took to jam the treaty down the throat of Haiti?

Senator POMERENE. That is a matter to be discussed a little later. Every first message you read there assures the Haitian people that we are to protect their integrity and political independence. We have got to take the whole message in order to determine what the purpose was.

Mr. ANGELL. There is no question what the announced purposes were. There is no difference between my understanding and what I believe to be of our announced purposes. I say that we did not always live up to our announced purposes.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to say that the Government here at Washington had some insidious purposes about it?

Mr. ANGELL. I believe that the Government at Washington was interested in cession or lease, in Mole St. Nicholas. I believe the facts show that it was. We went down there and sent a fleet down.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say, the construction and dimensions of war since 1891 have materially affected the usefulness of Mole St. Nicholas. I think naval authorities will hold that even larger harbors are no longer useful and Mole St. Nicholas, to my understanding, has no military value whatever for fleets comprising battleships of the first size.

Mr. ANGELL. There was undoubtedly a great change in construction between 1891 and 1915. There was a great change between that time and 1922. If the United States had no interest in that, why didn't they say so in answer to Dartiguenave's offer? Why didn't they say, "We have no interest in Mole St. Nicholas," instead of using language that is susceptible of two interpretations?

On August 19 Admiral Caperton cabled to the Navy Department the following message as secret and confidential (p. 335), where it was pointed out:

"The following message is secret and confidential" does not appear in the copy of the message which he gave for this record, but they do appear in the original message to the Navy Department which was brought here; in the original message it appears, "The following is secret and confidential." In the copy given by Admiral Caperton it is left out. The message goes on:

"United States has now actually accomplished a military intervention in the affairs of another nation. Hostility exists now in Haiti and has existed for a number of years against such action. Serious hostile contacts have only been avoided by prompt and rapid military action, which has given United States control before resistance has had time to organize. We now hold capital of the country and two other important seaports."

That was on the 19th.

Senator POMERENE. What are you reading from there?

Mr. ANGELL. This little document?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. I am reading from a copy of the report of the 24 lawyers which is on page 335 of the record.

Senator POMERENE. The report of 24 lawyers; what is that?

Mr. ANGELL. I will come to that later. This is correctly read from the report of the Senator.

Senator POMERENE. But you say it is in the other document. The report should show what you are reading from.

Mr. ANGELL. At the same time the admiral said:

"Present is most critical time in relations with Haiti, and our decision will, to a great extent, determine future course. If military government is established, we would be bound not to abandon Haitian situation until the interests of country are set upright and predominant interests of United States in America secured."

Then on September 3 the admiral declared martial law in Port-au-Prince by that extraordinary document in which he says—page 348 of the record:

"I further proclaim, in accordance with the law of nations and the customs, and functions of my own and other governments, that I am in a

Mr. ANGELL. There was no central Haitian government between the accession of President Sam and the inauguration of the new Dartiguenave Government on August 12th. There was a government—

Senator POMERENE (interposing). Who had control of those ports in the meantime; the collector of customs?

Mr. ANGELL. The natives, such as they were.

The CHAIRMAN. "Such as they were"; what were they doing with it?

Mr. ANGELL. I don't know. There was no excuse whatever for the taking all the funds and holding back the funds until the ratification of the treaty. I have heard it said that the purpose of seizing these funds was to prevent their being taken by the irresponsible groups or officers in the native Government. That is a plausible explanation on the face of it until you consider what leverage the control of those funds gave to Admiral Caperton the use to which that pressure was put, namely, to compel them to accept the treaty. That is what the record shows in the message of Secretary Daniels which I have just read, saying that the question of back salaries was settled with the Haitian Government when the Haitian Government accepted our treaty.

On November 3, according to a report of the admiral made to the Navy Department, appearing on page 391 of the record, the admiral had pointed out to President Dartiguenave that "The only objections are unimportant local points and abstract principles. These and other details can be arranged later."

After ratification, in other words.

Finally, Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, sent to the admiral a message on November 10th—that was following ratification of the treaty by the Senate, and the day before the ratification by the Senate—a message which appears at page 394 of the record, as follows:

"Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he call a cabinet meeting at the session of Senate which will pass upon the ratification of treaty and that you be permitted to appear before that meeting to make a statement to President and to members of cabinet. On your own authority state the following before these officers: 'I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that the sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong sentiment from all classes for immediate ratification and that treaty will be ratified on Thursday. I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment on this matter, and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquillity necessary to such development of the country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving population unemployed. Meanwhile the present Government will be supported in its effort to secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, whereas offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits. The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the present Senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the intention of employing as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible moment. Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife, but are not believed. If they should prove true, those who accept or give bribes will be vigorously prosecuted.' It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification. Acknowledge."

"DANIELS."

Why should the Secretary of the Navy notify our admiral operating in a friendly country that bribery to prevent ratification of a treaty would be prosecuted? Prosecuted by whom? By the military courts he had established in Haiti? That is the basis of our control of Haiti.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let us ask a little question; we ought to be aware of about this. If the United States Government has done any wrongs down there they should be rectified. But suppose—and I am assuming this for the sake of the question—but suppose the information was that there was likely to be bribery to bring about the defeat of that treaty; what should be done under the circumstances, if our military forces were there?

Mr. ANGELL. Make reference to it in public, if he wanted to, but not make it a threat to prosecute native officials.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Every material statement made in this document is derived from the report of the hearings before a select committee of the United States pursuant to Senate Resolution 112, authorizing an inquiry into the government and administration of the territories of the Republic of Haiti and the French Republic. These hearings took place from October 4 to November 12. The official record of the proceedings has been published by the Government Printing Office. The facts disclosed are not only a part of the history but most of them are established by testimony, by public documents, and communications and reports passing between the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels, Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, United States Navy, and other officials. It is intended that the facts recited shall support our own commentary. It is hoped that a recognition of the truth will lead to adoption of the logical remedy.

THE SEIZURE OF HAITI BY THE UNITED STATES.

From 1804 to 1915 Haiti was a sovereign State under a republican government. As a recognized sovereign nation she became a signatory of the Hague Convention of 1907. She won her independence from France. She was deprived of it in 1915 by the United States. Since then we have been in virtual control of her territory, our marines have been in military occupation of the country, and the former republic has been stripped by us of every vestige of her sovereignty. This startling condition has been brought about by a convention between the United States and the Republic of Haiti, bearing date September 18, 1915, but not ratified by Haiti until November 1915, under circumstances that will be presently detailed.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND HAITI.

The population of Haiti is somewhat less than 3,000,000. It is almost entirely illiterate, and except in the more important towns there is no middle class. There is an upper class, comparatively small numerically, but highly educated and cultured. As a colony Haiti suffered all the horrors of cruel slavery, the consequence that a century of independence has not effaced the memory of foreign encroachment and domination. As a measure of protection against alien control, the several constitutions of the republic have embodied provisions rigidly excluding foreigners from the ownership of land. From an economic standpoint conditions have been and are exceedingly primitive. From a political time there have been internal political dissensions resulting in disorder. It is noteworthy, however, that no American citizen has been injured in person or property by the people of Haiti; nor have any other foreigners been even when internal conflict occurred. Foreign investments have at all times been respected, the interest on Haiti's foreign debt has been scrupulously paid, and her relations with other governments have been free from adverse comment. She has never manifested hostility to the United States and has never been an occasion for our intervention in her affairs.

Haiti has, however, been long suspicious of possible attempts by the United States to gain a foothold in or complete control over her territory. From time to time, the United States has in fact made several attempts to obtain control of the harbors of Samana Bay, on the eastern coast of the Dominican Republic, of Mole St. Nicholas, on the northwest coast of Haiti, for avowed naval bases. Haiti consistently declined to consider either a cession or lease of any part of her territory to the United States. Nevertheless, in 1901, our Government sent Admiral Gherardi with a considerable fleet to Port au Prince, capital of Haiti, to treat for a cession or lease of Mole St. Nicholas. The Haitian Government objected even to a discussion of the proposal, and our fleet was withdrawn.

On six occasions during 1914 and 1915 the United States made direct attempts to Haiti to secure control of her customhouses and their administration. All of these efforts proved futile. In the meantime a number of revolutions were in progress in Haiti, similar in character to those that have frequently occurred in Mexico and in various Central American and South American countries, and frequent changes in governmental administration took place.

Vessels belonging to our Navy frequently entered Haitian waters. In the latter part of 1914 our Government offered assistance to the then President

The Haitian Legislature, consisting of a chamber of deputies and a Senate, was in session and was about to proceed to the election of a new President to fill the existing vacancy, but under orders from our State Department, Admiral Caperton twice induced the chambers to postpone the election. American officers at the capital canvassed the political situation carefully and found a prominent and universally respected Haitian citizen was asked to be a candidate for the presidency, but all refused. One of them, Mr. Léger, formerly at Washington, characterized by Lord Pauncefoot as "the ablest accomplished diplomat I have known,"<sup>1</sup> refused upon the ground that he was for Haiti, not for the United States, and that he would have to wait until what the United States would demand of Haiti in order to be in a position to defend Haitian interests. When Sudre Dartiguenave, the president of the Senate, proclaimed himself a candidate for election to the presidency of the Republic and offered if elected President to accede to any terms which the United States might name, including the surrender of customs control and cession of Mole St. Nicholas, Admiral Caperton notified Washington of this. He advised that the breaking up of the bands of revolutionaries by the United States was imperative if the United States desired at last "to negotiate a treaty for financial control of Haiti."<sup>2</sup> The State Department, "by the instruction of the President," requested the Navy Department to send a sufficient force of marines to control the situation absolutely, and the Navy was instructed that the United States favored the election of Dartiguenave.

The policy that had been formulated at Washington was expressed in a message wherein the Navy Department directed the Admiral by proclamation otherwise "to assure the Haitian people that the United States of America had no object in view except to insure, establish, and help maintain Haitian independence, and the establishment of a firm and stable government by the Haitian people. * * * It is the intention to retain United States troops in Haiti only so long as will be necessary for this purpose."<sup>3</sup>

In the meantime the State Department had advised the American Legation at Port au Prince of the procedure that he was to pursue to assist the Congress in electing a President, saying that the United States would not be intrusted with customs control and such financial control as might be necessary. The night before the election American naval officers informed senators, deputies, and candidates for President of the intentions and policy of the United States, as instructed.

On August 12, 1915, M. Dartiguenave was elected President, Admiral Caperton's chief-of-staff being on the floor of the voting hall and American troops guarding the approaches. The election was free in the sense that the Haitian people and senators who voted were not terrorized by revolutionary groups. On the other hand the situation, precipitated by the events of July 27 and 28, was such that the naval and marine forces under Admiral Caperton clearly exercised a strong influence in favor of Dartiguenave. American intervention was a fait accompli; American military control was growing from day to day. The State and Navy Departments were kept fully informed of all developments. The presence and activities of our naval forces were specifically directed from Washington.

On August 14, 1915, two days after the election of Dartiguenave, the Navy Department notified the American legation at Port au Prince to submit to the Haitian President at once the draft of a treaty providing for control of Haitian finances and military intervention by the United States. The legation was instructed to advise the Haitian President that "the Haitian Congress be pleased to pass forthwith a resolution authorizing the President to conclude, without modification, the treaty submitted by you."<sup>4</sup> The legation complied. A carefully formulated draft of a treaty, unquestionably prepared on the occasion with manifest deliberation, was accordingly submitted on August 17, 1915. Negotiations for its acceptance and ratification were undertaken and carried on by Admiral Caperton and his naval officers in conjunction with the legation.

THE TREATY.

This elaborate document begins with a preamble which, in the facts related and those about to be recounted, is the height of irony.

and temporary public works, and to support the new Haitian Government, funds were to be deposited in separate accounts in the name of Admiral Caperton, the United States Government holding these funds "in trust for the benefit of Haiti." Admiral Caperton carried out these instructions and on August 21 and September 2, 1915, seized the customhouses at the principal ports. For several months naval officers collected all customs duties and all disbursements. This deprived the Haitian Government of all its revenue, since the customhouses were practically the sole sources of its revenue.

In response to the order of August 19, 1915, Admiral Caperton sent a message to the Navy Department reading in part as follows:

"Following message is secret and confidential. United States has successfully accomplished a military intervention in affairs of another nation. Hostility exists now in Haiti and has existed for number of years and has caused action. Serious hostile contacts have only been avoided by prompt military action which has given United States control before resistance had time to organize. We now hold capital of country and two other important seaports."<sup>10</sup>

The seizure of the customhouse aroused the strongest opposition on the part of the people, and the Haitian Government, in a series of notes addressed to the American chargé d'affaires protested vigorously against the violation of its sovereignty. No explanation or apology was ever offered by the United States.

OBJECTIONS TO TREATY BY THE HAITIAN CHAMBERS.

In the meantime the Haitian Government was considering the draft treaty submitted to it on August 17, 1915. The President was favorable to the treaty, but opposition to it was growing in the cabinet and the public due to "fear of sentiment throughout the country against the American control, propagated constantly during the last few years by the factious elements."<sup>11</sup> The President and the cabinet thereupon threatened to resign for the same reason. Admiral Caperton recommended to the Navy Department that the event of the resignation of the new Haitian Government a military government should be established, with an American officer as military commander. He added significantly: "Present is most critical time in relations with Haiti and our decision now will to a great extent determine future course. If a military government is established, we would be bound not to abandon the situation until affairs of country are set at right and predominant interests of United States of America secured."<sup>12</sup>

THE PROCLAMATION OF MARTIAL LAW BY ADMIRAL CAPERTON.

By the early part of September, 1915, the augmented forces under the command of Admiral Caperton were in complete control of all the principal routes in Haiti, had seized all the sources of national revenue, had the custody of all the national funds, and were engaged in expending them directly, turning over any portion of them to the Haitian Government. Public order and the public purse were altogether in the mastery of the Navy Department. On September 3, 1915, Admiral Caperton declared martial law in the city of Port au Prince by proclamation, in which he announced:

"* * * In order to afford the inhabitants of Port au Prince and the territory hereinafter described the privileges of the Government, exercise the functions necessary for the establishment and maintenance of the mental rights of man, I hereby, under my authority as commanding the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters, declare that martial law exists in the city of Port au Prince and the immediate vicinity now occupied by the forces under my command.

"I further proclaim, in accordance with the law of nations and the customs, and functions of my own and other Governments, that I am invested with the power and responsibility of Government in all its functions and branches throughout the territory above described; and the proper ad-

In the meantime, the funds collected at the several custom houses were applied by the naval collectors to defray the expenses of the constabulary, public works and the like. No payment of the interest charges on the public debt was made, although the receipts of the customs service had previously been lawfully pledged by prior Haitian governments. In fact, the provisions for the use of customs funds for this purpose immediately paying the expenses of the receivership, were never complied with: American receiver general until 1920, notwithstanding the fact that the funds were realized from the customs to meet the demands of other classes of expenses which, according to the treaty, were subordinated to the loan service.

On November 8, 1915, Admiral Caperton, referring to the treaty and criticisms, pointed out to President Dartiguenave that "the only details are unimportant technical points and abstract principles. These also details can be arranged later."<sup>19</sup>

THE FINAL ACT OF COERCION.

On November 5, 1915, the Senate committee made a report on the treaty, accepting some of its provisions and suggesting modification of others. A few days later the Hector, one of the American naval vessels in Haitian waters, at the instance of Admiral Caperton, made a special trip to bring from Port-au-Prince "who will be elected to fill vacancy" from Cape Haitien to Port-au-Prince in order to secure his vote for the ratification of the treaty, because in the language of the admiral: "Absolutely essential all possible votes for ratification be secured."<sup>20</sup>

On November 10, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy gave the admiral the following explicit and unprecedented instructions as to what he was to say:

"Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he call a cabinet meeting at the session of Senate which will pass upon ratification of treaty and that you be permitted to appear before that meeting to make a statement to the president and to members of cabinet. On your own authority state the following before these officers: 'I have the honor to inform the president of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong demand on all classes for immediate ratification, and that treaty will be ratified. I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter. I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished; that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti to insure internal tranquillity necessary to such development of country as industry as will afford relief to the starving populace now unemployed; while the present government will be supported in the effort to secure favorable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, whereas, those offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits. The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the Senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the full intention of effecting as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions; suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date. Rumors of defeat defeat the treaty are rife, but are not believed. However, should they be true, those who accept or give bribery will be vigorously prosecuted. I expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification. Acknowledge. [in Italian] ours.]

The admiral complied with this command. In view of the express and threats thus conveyed, on the following day, November 11, 1915, the treaty was ratified by the Senate.

From the beginning of August, 1915, until long after the so-called ratification of the treaty, the situation in Haiti can best be described in the words of Admiral Caperton: "The status of our administration in Haiti was at that time purely one of military control."<sup>21</sup> During this period offensive operations were conducted by our forces against Haitian revolutionaries.

Dartiguenave at an early day. It is only with such a new Haitian Government that any negotiations for a realignment of Haitian-American relations for an adjustment of Haitian finances can fairly be carried on. To do this with the Government of President Dartiguenave would be in keeping with the methods employed in 1915 to force acceptance of the treaty. The continuation of this state of affairs is intolerable to those proud of American tradition and moved by the spirit of liberty and justice.

CONCLUSIONS.

From the foregoing summary of the salient facts as to our intervention in Haiti and descriptive of the present status of the Haitian Government, the following general and specific conclusions:

1. The presence of our military forces in Haiti after the disturbance of July 27-28, 1915, had quieted down was violative of well-recognized international principles.

2. The seizure and withholding by our forces in 1915 of Haitian national assets was a violation of international law and of the repeated professions by the United States Government officials of our position and attitude toward American Republics and weaker governments.

3. The imposition and enforcement of martial law without a declaration of war by our Congress and the conduct of offensive operations in Haiti by the United States prior to the acceptance of the treaty by Haiti were equally violations of international law and of our own Constitution.

4. The methods employed by the United States in Haiti to force acceptance and ratification of the treaty framed by the United States, namely, the use of military, financial, and political pressure, violate every canon of international law and equal dealing between independent sovereign nations and of American professions of international good faith.

5. The maintenance in Haiti of any United States military force or of control exercised by treaty officials under cover of the treaty of September 17, 1915, amounts to a conscious and intentional participation in the wrong of the aggression and coercion.

6. The present native Government of Haiti, chosen in 1915, unsupported by any elected representatives since 1917, being now at the end of its term, no negotiations should take place with such Government which in the future of Haiti or which can in any material respect affect its future.

7. The functions of a department of colonies and dependencies assigned to the Navy Department and conferred on it by mere executive action not authorized by Congress or by other sanction of law, and should be considered as essentially illegal and as a usurpation of power.

8. We declare, without qualification, that the honor and good name of the United States, the preservation of the sovereignty and the cherished independence of Haiti and her right to fair dealing on the part of the United States, as the possibility of assuring the continuance in the future of harmonious and amicable relations between our country and Latin America, based on mutual confidence, all require:

(a) The immediate abrogation by the United States of the treaty of September 17, 1915, unconditionally and without qualification.

(b) The holding of elections of representatives to the legislative body of Haiti and of a President by the free will of the people at an early day.

(c) The negotiation of a new treaty with a new Haitian administration, providing for friendly cooperation between the United States and Haiti upon such terms as shall be mutually satisfactory to both countries and by the methods that obtain between free and independent sovereign States.

maintain its sovereign rights against incalculable odds, is nothing but political immorality. The command of self-restraint leads one to refrain from drawing parallels, and a desire to avoid all sordid considerations permit a reference to the economic injury that our country would sustain were it to delay further undoing of this stupendous wrong."

Now, to come for a moment to a consideration of the letter of Lansing addressed to the chairman of this committee. That document is a number of pages. I have not time to consider every paragraph in it. He justifies the intervention in Haiti in 1915 upon two grounds as I read the document; one, the disturbed internal conditions of the country, to which I made reference in my opening remarks; second, the intentions of Germany toward Haiti, those intentions being, as the chairman has just stated, disclosed in a letter of the German chargé d'affaires early in 1914, to the effect that the German Government could not regard with complete acquiescence any entire control by the United States of Haitian customs. It was reports, and rumors, and intended acquisition of a coaling station at M. St. Nicholas, and refers to the landing of German troops in Port au Prince one year before our intervention. The implication is, as I read it—and I may be perfectly fair in the recital of such facts as are there—that the German intentions on Haiti. The assertion of those intentions was an actual or potential menace, and ergo, the United States went in there in pursuance of the Monroe doctrine. If the intentions of the Germans had gone further, it might raise an interesting question of how far, under the Monroe doctrine, we should step aside and allow the Germans to take hold in getting a foothold before we take some action, diplomatically, or direct. But Germany had been at war for one year in a world war before we landed our marines in Haiti.

To say that the German intentions in Haiti in 1913 and 1914, after Germany was all tied up in a war and her fleet bottled up, except for an occasional sortie, justified our going into Haiti, and justified our seizing and holding up her fleet, and saying to her, "Sign on the dotted line," is, I say, an exceedingly thin disguise of sophistry, and an exceedingly unjustifiable reason for any action of the United States. That was neither justification for the intervention in 1915 nor for the action we used to jam that treaty down the throat of Haiti. Prior to 1915 we had shown we had some intentions in Haiti. I started to cite briefly the fact concerning the sending of the fleet in 1891. The diplomatic correspondence in reference to that is now in the hands of Mr. Howe, in the documents which I have formally offered for the record. We sent a fleet down there and we showed the Haitians that the United States desires the acquisition of Mole St. Nicholas as a coaling station. The Haitians refused to consider it even, and our fleet withdrew. We had made six previous attempts between July, 1914, and July, 1915, to get control of the Haitian customs.

We had done the extraordinary thing of loaning a gunboat, and landed it at Port au Prince—the gunboat Machias—and the marines went to the National Bank of Haiti, a bank organized under the laws of the French Government, testified to by Roger L. Farnham—the marines were landed without notice to the Haitian Government, and the marines were marched up in front of the bank and were there given $500,000 in gold, belonging to the Haitian Government, which was deposited in this bank as security against its issues, so that being a part of the reserves in the bank under the treaty of 1910

Senator POMERENE. You say these were Government funds?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; not to be too technical about these actual pieces of gold.

Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to say that Government gold was sent to Haiti without the Government of Haiti knowing anything about it?

Mr. ANGELL. Certainly, sir; it is in the record. Mr. Farnham admitted here when he testified. Five hundred thousand dollars in gold on deposit in the bank to secure the note issue was delivered by the bank, in secret, to the marines from the gunboat Machias and carried on the gunboat to New York, where it was put on deposit in banks and remained there for several years later used in the payment of interest. That was done, Mr. Farnham testified before this committee, because the National Bank of Haiti, fearing raids by revolutionary bands, decided it was safer to send it to New York, may or may not have been the case; and since they could not get insurance on that time on ocean-going vessels, owing to the war, they got the United States to loan them a gunboat. An extraordinary proceeding, to say the least.

I am coming back, at the very end of my remarks, to the basis of our action and the methods used to obtain the ratification of that treaty. I have given you a brief and, I think, a fair recital of the facts.

to the minister of finance as may be deemed necessary for the well-being and prosperity of Haiti."

Subsequent articles provide the means by which these general and other purposes are to be carried into effect.

I want to consider now briefly the accomplishments of seven years of our rule in Haiti. We have restored, and at times, but not always maintained order in Haiti, so that travel in Haiti is to-day safe to the foreigner to the Haitian. It has not always been so since our occupation, notably at the time of the so-called rebellion of 1918 and 1919. That is certainly an achievement.

The CHAIRMAN. How much of the area of the country was involved in the outbreak in 1918? The testimony shows about one-quarter.

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; I think that would be fair. I was trying to estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. And something less than one-fifth of the population?

Mr. ANGELL. It was not the whole area. That, let me point out, that was achieved at the expense of some 2,500 Haitian lives lost, and in the "mopping up" process following that rebellion.

We have organized and put on foot a native constabulary which will be great while now, be able to take care of the internal policing. When the organization of that force is completed by providing more officers from the natives, particularly the higher officers, there will have been created a genuine piece of constructive work, which is only partly done at the time.

We have built some roads on the island, which members of the commission have seen on their visit down there. Those roads will be of some value for the development of the country and in maintaining order. That is probably a certain achievement. Of course, they were built primarily as military roads. In the building of them the abuses of the corvée occurred, which had a repercussion on the state of mind, which in part gave rise to the rebellion of 1918.

Those roads were built with Haitian Government money, which under the terms of the treaty drafted by the United States should have gone, in the first instance, to the payment of the interest on the debt. We assume, in other words, to exercise our own judgment as to how, when, and where the terms should be applied, and we chose to have the Haitian Government appropriate as much as $360,000 a year at one time for the building of military roads.

We have achieved some sanitation in the larger cities; to just what extent does not appear very clearly from the record. I do not think it is a material one way or the other, other than as a recognition of the fact that has undoubtedly been good work done in that line.

A notable achievement in finance is the reduction of the debt from $127,000,000 to $80,000,000—If my recollection of the figures is correct—127,000,000 francs in 1915, at the time of the occupation, to some eighty-odd million francs at the present time, a reduction of the foreign debt. That debt has then been reduced by 33 per cent. in those seven years.

That was not done, however, I submit, as it should have been, because the payment of interest was suspended almost completely during five years.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not justify, in other words, the suspension of interest payments in any degree by reason of the disturbance in Haiti arising out of conditions upon the high seas brought about by the great war?

Mr. ANGELL. That might be some partial excuse for it; oh, yes, a partial excuse, however, because during that period of five years when the payments were suspended you must remember we were seeing to it that the Haitian Government should appropriate, as I just pointed out, some $360,000 a year for the building of military roads, which under the treaty should have been last rather than second in the category of expenses provided for by the terms of the treaty.

And during those five years the financial adviser was from time to time setting aside a certain sum for the payment of interest on the foreign debt, notwithstanding the impairment of the gross receipts of the country. He was setting aside money from time to time, but not to actually use it to pay the interest on the debt. The result is that naturally there has been an impairment of the credit of the Haitian nation abroad. A nation, like an individual or corporation, cannot suspend payments on its debt for a period of five years without affairs in Cuba. Do you base the Platt amendment on the blowing up of the Maine?

Mr. ANGELL. No; but you can not overlook the blowing up of the Maine, the loss of American lives, the formal declaration of war with Spain, and the fact that Cuba was a part of the Spanish Empire.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you explain to me, then, how the Platt amendment is justified by the destruction of the Maine?

Mr. ANGELL. Well, we got into Cuba by declaration of war, sir, as we got into Haiti. We made war in Haiti without ever declaring war there. I believe you yourself referred to that once in the Senate, as the unauthorized wars which the preceding administration was wont to make. There is no difference, in my judgment, between the case of Haiti and the case of Cuba. We got into Cuba by an honest, straightforward declaration of war, the result of which was the blowing up of the Maine and the loss of American lives. We got into Haiti without any such pretext or justification. We got out of Haiti, how long was it? Three years, or something of that sort, and we retained general foreign control by the Platt amendment. We have not gotten out of Cuba, or shown any disposition to get out.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. What do you mean? Do you mean over Cuba's foreign policy, or do you mean the right to intervene in her domestic affairs?

Mr. ANGELL. The right to intervene, no cession to foreign powers, and the Platt amendment, as I recall it, was in the Army appropriation bill of 1901, three years after the war was over. We got out of Cuba in three years. We have been in Haiti now for seven years, and I see no prospect of our getting out.

The CHAIRMAN. We went back into Cuba?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; we went back into Cuba, for a short time.

The CHAIRMAN. And General Crowder is there to-day?

Mr. ANGELL. And General Crowder is there to-day. Conditions are the same, however, from the international point of view, certainly.

If the question arises, sir, as to the adoption of a similar amendment relating to Haiti, we can then consider what the analogy to Cuba is. But we have shown no disposition to get out of Haiti, and it is putting the cart before the horse, if I may so suggest, to talk about the analogy of the Platt amendment to Cuba until we have shown some disposition to get out of Haiti.

Now, let me consider what I might term some of the negative features of the occupation.

First, as to finances. I have already pointed out that for five years we have had no interest on the foreign debt, although the revenues were during that time sufficient, at least in part, to pay that interest. We have thus impaired the foreign credit of Haiti—

The CHAIRMAN. You hold that we have impaired the foreign credit of Haiti. You will want it to appear on the record, will you not, that all arrears of amortization are paid as of to-day?

Mr. ANGELL. That appears in the record; oh, yes. I am not disputing. I said a moment ago that when any individual, corporation, or nation does not pay the interest for five years on its debt its credit is naturally impaired. It does not need a formal demonstration in figures to prove that.

We used Haitian Government funds to build roads, as I say, for a purely military purpose—funds which should have been used, in the first instance, for the payment of its debt. The Haitian Government is still incurring a large and largely unnecessary expense to maintain a financial adviser in the United States, when he should be down in Port au Prince on the job there, instead of up here trying to put through a loan on a country which is unable to accept it.

We have not determined, as we agreed to take steps to do under the terms of the internal debt, and I can see no disposition, from the testimony of Mr. McIlhenny, to give serious attention to that very pressing problem.

We have likewise made no determination of the noncontractual claims against the Haitian Government. We have, furthermore, abolished the Haitian institution of the chamber of accounts to give it an English title, which was the institution designed, I assume and believe, to act as an accounting of the expenditure and receipt of public moneys. That has been abolished, and that function is in the hands of the financial adviser.

In the pacification process we killed 2,500 or more Haitians—

The CHAIRMAN. In your judgment 2,500 or more?

certain things had to be done to carry on the work it had set on in Haiti, and one of them was that a constitution, which was a variance with every expressed wish of the United States, should be brought into effect." There was a deadlock then. The Haitian assembly would not make the changes which General Cole, Mr. Myer, and Admiral Kinkaid were necessary, so that General Cole discussed with President Lorrain the advisability of dissolving the assembly because of the impasse. On June 15, 1917, he reported to Washington:

"Antagonism of national assembly to foreign ownership of land and American influence such that no endeavor I can make short of dissolution of assembly will prevent passage of constitution along the line reported. 13107. Have discussed matters fully with minister and General Buttler. Urgest minister notify Haitian Government that, in opinion of our Government, constitution, prepared by assembly, will make impossible to bring results contemplated under articles 1 and 14 of treaty; and, unless our Government can not accept such constitution. If national assembly heeds such warning it will be necessary to dissolve assembly to prevent passage. The number of marines in Haiti should be increased by at least full companies to prevent disorders that may follow dissolution of assembly."

On the following day General Cole notified Washington (record, p. 702): "Unless contrary instructions received, if necessary to prevent passage of proposed constitution, I intend to dissolve national assembly, through direct, if possible; otherwise direct."

Then, he goes on to tell of the difficulties he had in getting the president to agree actually to dissolve the assembly:

"I had in the meantime drawn up a proclamation of my own, intended to put into effect in case the President did not exercise his authority as President."

Cole had decided (p. 702) that dissolution was necessary and was done at once. He got the President to actually sign a decree of dissolution. He gave those two decrees, his own and the president's, to General Marc who took them both to the assembly and had read to the assembly the president's decree of dissolution. Whether it was the President's or Cole's decree is immaterial; each was the creation of American pressure.

By American military pressure then we dissolved the Haitian assembly, their representative form of government. They have never been called into session, since then. That is what we have done to set up stable government and democratic institutions in Haiti. We have lately proved false to our own solemn professions of good faith. That is what we can not blink it; we should not try to.

When the assembly had been dissolved in June, 1917, we went ahead and the new constitution prepared and submitted to a plebiscite vote.

No provision for a vote by a plebiscite on a proposed constitution was authorized in any way by the existing constitution of 1880, and this procedure was quite unknown in Haitian history. The plebiscite was held on June 1, 1918, resulting in a vote of some 98,000 in favor of the constitution and some 700 opposed.

Colonel Williams said very explicitly that that vote simply meant that Haitians who were opposed to the constitution stayed away from the polls because they regarded it as a farce—as Mr. Evans also testified in detail.

I want to call your attention particularly here and now to Mr. Evans' testimony (pp. 187-193 of the record) about what took place in the city of St. Marc on June 12, 1918, when that constitution was being voted on by the plebiscite. I want to point out particularly also that although Mr. Evans was the second witness before this committee, nobody has ever attempted to refute his testimony in this particular in the slightest respect. It is absolutely unchallenged, although marine officers have repeatedly contradicted and testified, and other persons who were there at the time. The testimony must be accepted, then, as true.

Mr. Evans stated that he was present in the polling place or voting place at St. Marc for several hours during that day; that the polling place was in charge of marine officers—Americans; that the voters were brought in by the gendarmes, and without any opportunity to exercise any choice in voting for or against the constitution they were handed ballot slips—been to assist the committee in securing all the facts. The archives, for records have been thrown wide open.

When I appeared before this committee for the first time I believe that it is clear that if at any time it appeared desirable or necessary to the committee that counsel would be directed to appear. In my judgment that necessity never rose. Certainly I have never received orders to act as counsel, and, as such, has never appeared before this committee. I have appeared at committee meetings merely for the purpose of assisting the committee with the information from the Navy Department and Marine Corps in military language, I acted as liaison between the committee and the President. The committee has heard many statements that could have been refuted at the time, but even had I been in a position to do so I would not have made it. To illustrate, it would be but to waste the committee's time to refute testimony, because such evidence is weightless and worthless, and I am sure that the committee will ignore it in arriving at its conclusions on the record. It was wasting time to introduce such evidence. The weight of a mass of official testimony can not be increased by the fact that no attempt has been made to refute it.

Mr. L. TON EVANS. May I say this? The statement which I made, as quoted by Captain Angell, was made in 1918, on oath, here in Washington, presented as an affidavit, signed under oath, to the President and to the Senate, with regard to this very statement that is now quoted.

Senator ODDIE. With regard to the voting in that particular place?

Mr. EVANS. Exactly so, sir.

Senator ODDIE. But does it mention any other polling place?

Mr. EVANS. With regard to the others, it is stated there—and I stand under oath—that I had information from other places, from persons who were preparing to come themselves, personally, and state that they had with them the same thing in other places. But they were not—I will not say they were not allowed to, but they were afraid to come, or they did not come, and it goes unchallenged, as stated here. It was accepted before, and an investigation was made. I stand for that; it is under oath.

Senator ODDIE. Well, has that been presented here before this committee?

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Evans's sworn statement is in the record.

Senator ODDIE. You mean, the evidence as to other election places, the evidence of what happened in other polling places.

Mr. EVANS. They were natives there, and they could not come here.

Senator ODDIE. You may proceed, Captain Angell.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Evans said (at p. 193 of the record), by way of assuaging the impression which this method of adoption made on the Haitian people:

"It was looked upon as a mere farce, and lowered the prestige of the United States among Haitians who seriously think, and even Europeans and Americans, who felt that the American occupation had gone the limit and made itself a laughing stock, and looked contemptible."

In short, as I say, the situation was that the American marine and officials in Haiti, acting under general instructions, at least, from Washington, had determined that fundamental changes had to be made in the constitution of Haiti and that since the elected representatives of the Haitian people would not support the proposed modifications the thing had to be put through in some other manner. The President was consequently persuaded to adopt the extra-constitutional method of a plebiscite, a procedure quite unknown in Haiti.

Perhaps the most important change thus made in the organic law of Haiti which Haiti is supposed to be governed is that which provides that foreigners may acquire title to land. I may point out here that under that provision American interests have taken up, in some places at least, large tracts of land. The number of Americans or of American concerns that have taken up land and the total acreage of the land, I do not know. It is a matter of common belief to be common knowledge, and I shall refer to it only as such. The concern in the St. Michel plain has over 50,000 acres of choice land. It is something not to be despised, of course. It is a very nice thing to have made possible by the changes put through by force in the way which has just called your attention to.

This new constitution of Haiti provides, in the last article, that the executive chamber and senate are elected legislative powers are to be exercised by the Council of State. The members of this body are appointed by the President and are subject to revocation and dismissal by the President without very explicitly, as a constitutional lawyer, that the constitution of 1901 gave the council of state no power whatever to choose the President. The committee asked Monsieur Hudicourt for a written exposé argument. He has furnished that, and it is now in the hands of Mr. Borno and is one of the documents to be incorporated in the record. I draw your attention to that document and suggest that you read it. It is very convincing that the council of state has no power to elect the President. However, the council of state has gone ahead and done so. It has a new dummy President in office, and even he was chosen at an irregular meeting of the council, attended by only 14 of the 21 members.

I am not here to cast aspersions upon the character of Monsieur Borno, whom I know little or nothing. I merely point out the fact that he was chosen by the creatures of President Dartiguenave, and it may be expected that the government of Monsieur Borno will continue to be the dummy government of the American occupation in all matters where it retains the shadow of power and authority.

The most amazing instance in the whole seven years of the occupation attitude toward the Haitian Government lies in the suspension of the powers of the President and the executive branch in 1920. The testimony was brought out on my cross-examination of Mr. McIlhenny, which appears in volume 4 of the record. I do not propose to go into that in detail now, but to recall to your recollection the fact that the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Lansing, suggested in the early winter of 1920 to Mr. McIlhenny, financial adviser, then in the United States, that in the event the Haitian Government should not or would not accept the eight or nine proposed financial reforms agreed upon between the financial adviser and the State Department the financial adviser should then suspend the powers of the President and the executive branch of the Haitian Government as a means of forcing their acceptance. That was simply applying again, in August 1920, the same means which we used in the fall of 1915 to enforce the original suspension.

We must give the Haitian people credit at least for being strong enough to stand out against it and refusing, notwithstanding the suspension of salaries for three months, to accede to these demands. The wisdom of the provisions is not in issue. They are matters of internal administration. Neither the Secretary of State of the United States nor the financial adviser to the Government of Haiti, reporting direct to the Chief of the Bureau of American Affairs of the State Department, had the slightest right or authority whatever to withhold salaries in the attempt to force the Haitian Government to agree to measures of internal administration which Washington considered desirable and necessary. They do it through the form of applying the law, giving the pious sanctity of law to a procedure which is about as illegal as unauthorized and lawless as anything any nation could ever do.

We, helping to build up democratic institutions and a stable government, declared the maintenance and enforcement of martial law. We know perfectly well that martial law, at least in recent years, has been enforced primarily against newspaper editors whose articles are not liked by the occupiers.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that it does not touch the life of the ordinary inhabitant?

Mr. ANGELL. In actual practice I do not believe it does very much. In so far as the freedom of the press touches the life of the ordinary inhabitant, I should say that in this country if our newspaper editors were suspended under martial law we would think it touched our lives very much indeed. It is actually applied principally against newspaper editors. It is a matter of sophistical speculation, I think, how far that affects the everyday life of the ordinary inhabitant, but it is there as a constant threat which may be applied against anyone for any cause.

The CHAIRMAN. In a country where 98 per cent of the people do not read?

Mr. ANGELL. Whatever the figure may be, that is immaterial. I maintain that this martial law has been in a number of cases in the last two or three years grossly abused. There was the case of Monsieur Chauvet, the editor of a paper who was arrested, tried, and sentenced by an American court-martial to the execution of the so-called censorship order. He was sentenced to pay a fine and his paper suspended for three months, merely for printing a newspaper stating that Mr. Ruan, the then financial adviser, had been recalled by the Borno government. That was a true statement; he had been recalled. He was recalled, and Mr. McIlhenny was appointed in his place. For that reason the wrong job in Haiti, to my mind. Waiving all questions for the purposes of argument only, of the necessity of martial law, the Marine Corps should have been confined to pacification, martial law, and military. The Marine Corps, Navy, and Army officers are not a government. That is not their job. I am a lawyer; I am not trained in medicine or other professions. So the military man is not trained for government. Yet there he was, the military man, the commander of the Marines in Haiti, practically as the governor of the Republic, doing much as he saw fit, and aided and abetted in large part by gentlemen like McIlhenny, who were quite willing to suspend the salaries of the executive branch of the government if the executive branch of the government would do Mr. McIlhenny's will.

That is the way we have gone about building up in Haiti a stable government and restoring democratic institutions. We have made a miserable failure. We have not done it at all. Conditions in Haiti in that respect are not better to-day than they were seven years ago. No people, however much they may see of efficiency in government, are going to adopt those methods which are jammed down their throats and when their independence is taken from them, as it was in 1915 by us.

I have not made any mention so far, except in passing, of the abuse of the corvée. This was, I think, admittedly great in spots and at certain times. What happened there was this: We found a convenient law, which had been applied, and we called it into being. After we had applied it for a time we extended the power it gave us far beyond anything that was contemplated by that law. I say "we." Whether it was the gendarmes or the Marine Corps is immaterial; it was the Marine Corps policy.

We went out and gathered in natives in large numbers. We brought them in some places roped, it is said. In some places it is admitted by the Marine Corps's testimony that they were kept in barbed-wire inclosures, that they were shot when they tried to escape, and that they were kept long during the period of three days for which they should have been called upon to work under the existing law. And those abuses, resulting not only in loss of life but, far worse, in damage to our reputation and good name as Americans, maintain resulted in part in the so-called cacao rebellion of 1918.

The Marine Corps officers—quite honestly, I believe—maintained that the abuse of the corvée had very little to do with that revolt. Personally I do not believe that is the case. I believe it did have a large part to do with it. The two were contemporaneous, or one followed very closely upon the other, and they were in the same locality. General Catlin's testimony is very strong on that point. We did an injury to the natives of Haiti, whom we should have killed in that way, and, far worse, we injured our own good name.

It has been agreed here by everybody who has testified, I think—certainly by all those who have been honest and fair students of the question—that there has never been any consistent policy during the seven years of our administration there. Each treaty official has been semi-independent of the others, and they have gone each one their own sweet way without any direction from Washington. The result is, I submit, that seven years of occupation, of complete control over the affairs, foreign and domestic, of this country, have been in the best sense barren of large results and achievements which we should have expected, and had a right to expect, from the mere fact of our presence in Haiti, for the purposes set out in the treaty and from the complete character of the control which we exercised there. The actual results and achievements to which I referred a short time ago, which I as an American citizen maintain we have achieved, are so negative in comparison with what we might have achieved, and particularly in comparison with the abuses which have taken place and the negative results of the occupation—our failure really to build up a stable government, to do a good job of colonization, if we started out to do that, however justified we were—

The CHAIRMAN. You do not hold the officers of the occupation responsible for that?

Mr. ANGELL. Oh, no. For the lack of policy the Government in Washington must be held responsible. For some of the particular abuses I have pointed out the men down in Haiti must be held responsible—the abuses of the individuals, for example. Those fall upon the shoulders of the individuals in charge and had to put that thing through and handle it.

The CHAIRMAN. One might omit the plain of St. Michel, because to the others it is without population.

Mr. ANGELL. But this is a description of the geography of the country and the population. He describes the several chains of mountains, the waters and the plains, and these are all mentioned with the exception of the central plain in Haiti.

As an apparent justification for our landing of the marines in J. he speaks, at page 1295, of the landing of the French marines at Cap-Haïtien on June 15, but he fails entirely to state that those marines were nine days before our own marines landed. If he undertakes to state a series of acts, let him state the whole of it, not simply half of it, not a true statement of fact, because he only goes half way.

At pages 1295 and 1296 he purports to give the history of the treaty and the submission of the treaty. He makes no mention of our refusal of it, no mention of our seizure of the funds or the seizure of the treasury, no mention of the withholding of funds to force acceptance of the treaty, no mention of the declaration of martial law on September 3.

I say it is a plain misstatement of fact (page 1302) to say that President L. proposed a new constitution, which was adopted by popular vote. That is a plain misstatement of fact. He should have discovered it, and he should have known it if he had chosen to be careful.

There is no mention in the whole report of the suspension of the President's salary in 1920; a fact which, if he were giving a history of the country, should certainly have been mentioned and commented upon, I think all agree.

There is no mention of the failure of the United States representative in Haiti to expend the funds in the order provided for by article 5 of the treaty. There is no direct mention or reference to the complete atrophy of the exercise of the functions of government by the natives.

He sets out, at page 1317, that at the present time, 1921, when the report is written, $3,500,000 is required to meet the obligations of the debt. That is a gross misstatement of fact, and should have been discovered.

Those are sufficient, I submit, to cause anyone honestly minded to question very seriously the validity of his conclusions, when his statements of facts are so grossly inaccurate. It is not a thoroughly fair, impartial statement of facts. That is the truth of it.

(Whereupon, at 12:45 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. tomorrow, Friday, June 16, 1922.)

We may say, I believe, that many of the killings alleged to have been committed on the part of the marine officers and enlisted personnel occurred in the course of this clean-up process instituted by the marines against the various bands. In the course of these operations there were undoubtedly a great number of indiscriminate killings of native Haitians—indiscriminate in the sense that the marines frequently attacked an encampment, village or cluster of huts in which the natives were gathered, or reported to be gathered, and that in the process which followed noncombatants as well as men composing the native bands were suffered as the result. The exact extent of the killings, abuses, and alleged atrocities seems relatively unimportant to me. The important existence of these instances lies in the fact that the country was pacified in a military sense, by soldiers of an alien race, language and customs. The killings and abuses are bound to occur in every such instance of partial and forcible intervention. The certainty that they will occur in greater degree is one of the strongest arguments against military intervention in the pacification of a country by another people.

I want to pass now to some consideration of the present situation; it is the question which has been raised, perhaps not directly before the committee, but at least in public discussion, of the high commissioner.

All students of the barren results of seven years of our administration in Haiti are agreed that a major reason for this has been the want of any constructive policy initiated and directed from Washington. The civilian and military representatives of the United States in Haiti have been largely independent one of the other. At times the commander of the American brigade, the American minister, and the financial representative have met heads together in a common purpose, such as the attempt in 1920 to induce Haitian executives to accept the various laws and proposals by withholding their salaries for that period of three months.

In 1917-18 our representatives again put their heads together to effect the dissolution of the Haitian Chambers, the last remaining effective obstacle to the complete absorption of the elements of self-government by the United States.

In general, however, we may—in fact, we must—admit that our purpose has been merely to put our representatives in control of the various functions of government in Haiti, to leave them to their own devices, to let each military or civil Haitian official go his own way without intelligent or even attempted coordination from Washington.

Several of the marine officers who have testified here have candidly admitted that they could never discover any indication of any definite policy in Haiti in the responsible departments in Washington. I need do no more than point out that we have had in Haiti a military chief of marines; a commander of the gendarmerie, theoretically responsible to the Haitian government; a receiver general collecting the national funds; a financial agent controlling the disbursement of funds; engineers, controlling the public works; a minister or chargé d'affaires exercising, in addition to diplomatic functions, a veto power over legislation; and from time to time an occasional agricultural or educational adviser. Each of these officers has been independent of the other in theory, and actually independent in practice more often than not.

I need not dwell further on this aspect of our failure in Haiti. We are interested far more in laying our fingers on the errors of the past and pointing to a wiser, juster policy for the future than in shrilling destructive criticisms.

Had a high commissioner been appointed to coordinate the duties of the several treaty officials before the underlying vice of our position in Haiti had been laid bare by the Carpenter disclosure, we might have been able to point with some pride to tangible results in the task we have assigned ourselves in Haiti.

You gentlemen may feel that such accomplishments in the near future are assured probabilities, now that there has been installed in office as high commissioner a man who, whatever his other defects, at least has the advantage of knowing intimately the external factors of his problem. I would not care to share such a feeling whole-heartedly.

I see no escape from the conclusion, however, that we are putting the cart before the horse. Our first solicitude should be that our position in Haiti, our very presence there, is above all reproach. What I have just said renders wholly subordinate the particular functions of the personal representatives of any given official who expresses and guides our control of Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask if there is any analogy between the one you suggest and those of the Bolivian loan, which is being floated?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; I am coming to that point—not with particular reference to the Bolivian loan, but with reference to that situation.

Haiti may or may not need a large loan to her Government. It is not be wisely used to pay off the debt held in France, to pay the interest and claims, to build roads, wharves, railroads, and the like. The citizen who has any knowledge of this situation may feel that the interests of this country and its future demand the present sacrifice of degree of its independence signified by continued alien control of its affairs. He may put his pride aside, if he and his fellows have a fair chance to consent to such a loan, involving such a mortgage of their financial independence and such a strong degree of foreign control. But you can never expect the Haitian to subordinate their feeling of hurt pride, to cooperate gladly with the foreigner, if the Haitian has the loan forced upon him by the bankers, on the one hand, and the State Department, on the other. Haitian Government not of his creation. It is not fair and not in keeping with American ideals of generous conduct—

Senator POMERENE. You mean by that that you are attacking the present President of Haiti?

Mr. ANGELL. I was going to come to that in another connection. My point was that question for a slightly different consideration?

Senator POMERENE. Surely.

Mr. ANGELL. I say it is not fair and not in keeping with American ideals of a generous conduct toward the weaker peoples either to sanction a loan upon Haiti when its Government and its people are not free to consent. And I say that the present Government of Haiti is not a free agent. All know it is not a free agent. It is subject to our complete control in a substantial sense, the creation of the American intervention.

If, on the other hand, an independent Haiti, of its own free choice, knowingly to contract a loan with American investors upon the security to the investors as necessarily surrenders control of national affairs to the American Government or its representatives and appointees, other terms are not too onerous, no one can reasonably object to the Bolivian loan is probably an example of such free consent. Yet we must emphasize, and upon the elementary American principle of self-determination which abhors the abuse of power by the strong, to the official agency projected loan to Haiti at the present time. Restore Haitian independence to the country a fair chance to decide whether it wants a loan and to forego a large measure of independence in order to obtain that new security.

Consider also the possible burden to America in connection with a loan upon the country at this time. The present Haitian Government, as suggested by Washington and its appointees, but a successor government in Haiti 5 years hence or 10 years hence may well resent the alien control, which Haiti had no clear choice to accept or reject, in connection with such a loan. Such a successor administration, emboldened by the withdrawal or a great weakening of our marine forces, might terminate or curtail our financial control, necessary to maintain the investment. Our investors would, not unnaturally, expect our force to return a larger force of marines to the islands to maintain intact the security of their indebtedness. This at once raises the question, easily put, of our people to be burdened with extra taxes in order to support a force in occupation of an unwilling country merely for the protection of investors in the foreign loan of that country? Once again I say, Haiti the chance to accept or reject the necessary financial control such a loan and then the ugly question will never arise.

Now, in connection with the proposed loan I want to refer to the high commissioner to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Haiti, April 15, 1922, appearing at page 210 of Le Moniteur, the official publication, of May 10 of this year. I am not going to read the whole of interest as showing that the high commissioner is apparently anxious to obtain the consent of the Haitian Government for the loan. At one point he says:

"With regard to the suggestion contained in your excellency's letter of May 31, 1922, which I had the honor to transmit by telegraph to the Haitian Government, to the effect that in its note of December 30 last the Haitian Government demonstrated that without new taxes the loan offer submitted

Finally, I am instructed to say that my Government considers the internal funded debts of Haiti, as represented in the bond issues of 1911 and 1914, A, B, and C, do not come within the provisions of the protocol, "pecuniary claims," but are liquidated debts, and that it would, therefore, be proper for the Haitian Government to redeem these bond issues, or to call them in, without submission to the Claims Commission.

As soon as the Government of Your Excellency will indicate to my Government that it is prepared to proceed with the obligations assumed by it under the protocol, and especially to fulfill its obligations as to a bond issue, in pursuance of the waiver by my Government, contained in this note, of the time mentioned in the protocol, which expires on October 3, 1921, for the issue of the stipulated bonds by the Haitian Government, my Government is gratified to receive a reply to my note stating that the Government of the United States, provided the loan is made within a reasonable time, waives the stipulation of the protocol establishing a period of two years within which the Republic of Haiti should have proceeded with the agreement made in Article VI of the protocol of October 3, 1919, for the issue of the national loan of $40,000,000; that the Government of Haiti takes occasion to confirm its agreement to issue a loan of that amount and that it is in accord with the suggestions of the Government of the United States made in the note under reply, namely, that the bonds of the loan shall be issued in series, the amount of each series, the terms on which they shall be sold, the rate of interest, the terms of the sinking fund applicable to the loan, and the provisions as to when and how said bonds shall be redeemed, shall be fixed by the Haitian Government in accord with the financial policy of the Government of Haiti, and that the Government of Haiti further states that the understanding between the Government of the United States as to the use of the bonds or proceeds therefrom is also in accordance with the understanding of the Government of Haiti.

I am instructed further to state that it would appear that the Secretary of State for Finance of Haiti should now nominate a member of the commission to be followed by nominations of two other members of the commission, one each by the Secretary of State of the United States and the Financial Adviser of Haiti, and the three members so nominated to be agreed by the Government of Haiti, as agreed upon in the protocol. In this connection, my Government desires to be informed as to the applicable laws of Haiti relating to the question of whether it is necessary for the Haitian Legislature to enact legislation providing for the constitution of the commission, the payment of salaries to its members, and other pertinent matters, or whether such matters can be dealt with by the executive alone.

With regard to the outline of your excellency's memorandum of January 30, 1921, of the suggested law authorizing the loan, I am instructed by my Government to state that it is unable to agree to this outline, in so far as it departs from the provisions already agreed upon between the two Governments as embodied in the protocol. My Government considers that, by virtue of the last sentence of Article X of the protocol, the Republic of Haiti has the right to enact a law strictly following the provisions of the protocol. I am instructed to say, however, that my Government avails itself with much satisfaction of the suggestion contained in your excellency's note of January 31, 1921, to make known the provisions that it considers it would be proper to carry out in a law authorizing the loan. I therefore have the honor to submit the draft of a loan law to take the place of the outlines of a law suggested in your Haitian memorandum of December 30, last:

"Whereas in order to carry out the purposes of the treaty between the United States and Haiti of September 16, 1915, as extended by the agreement between the United States and Haiti of March 28, 1917, a protocol concluded between the two Governments on October 3, 1919, and wherein certain modifications in this protocol were agreed to in an exchange of notes between the two Governments, dated, and whereas it is now necessary to authorize the executive power to contract the loan provided for in the protocol, as thus modified, be it enacted as follows:

"1. The provisions of said protocol, modified as above, are adopted as the law of the republic.

"2. The executive power is hereby authorized to contract a loan in the amount of forty million dollars ($40,000,000), payable in or within ten years from the dates of issue.

"3. Said loan may be issued in series, on such terms, in such amounts, at such rates of interest, and with such provisions for sinking funds and for the

To put into effect the proposition of your Government concerning a reduction of the delay provided for in the protocol of October 3, 1919, for the loan, the Government is ready to sign an agreement covering it.

I am instructed to communicate to your excellency the following:

1. It appears that the argument of the Haitian Government concerning French loans has not been understood; it consists in recalling these two: (a) The bonds of these loans can only be redeemed according to the terms of their issue—that is to say, in francs—after previous advice as to the contracts; (b) that the prescription against the bearers can only run after a lapse of five years.

2. By the protocol of October 3, 1919, the Haitian Government has agreed to a loan of 40 millions within two years, but since then it has been regretted by the two Governments that this loan exceeds the resources of the country. This is why, in 1920, the financial adviser, in accord with the American Government, proposed to reduce it to 25 millions, and after further consideration the American Government concluded that this proposal was still too onerous. The amount of the loan was finally settled at from 11 to 16 millions. It was hoped that with the assured development of the country loans could be subsequently contracted, not alone to liquidate the past debts but also to develop the country. The Haitian Government is therefore convinced that it can in the future, and determined that all the subsequent loans shall be made according to the protocol of October 3, 1919.

The loan of 16 millions must not be considered as a first series of loans, but as a definite loan.

3. It is clearly understood that the internal funded debt, as represented by bonds issues of 1912, 1913, and 1914, series A, B, C, do not come within the provisions of the protocol of October 3, 1919, as pecuniary claims, but are debts that the Haitian Government will have the right to redeem or to amortize at their service.

4. Concerning the members of the reclamation commission, the Government feels that it can not put into execution the protocol, which has not been ratified. The executive power can not of itself form the commission, nor give it the necessary authority and can not fix the salaries thereof without the assent of a law. Any pension, any gratuity, any subvention, any allowance can never be furnished by the public treasury can only be granted in pursuance of a special law proposed by the executive power. (Art. 112 of the constitution.)

5. The last paragraph of Article X of the protocol of October 3, 1919, follows: "In addition the Haitian Government pledges itself to take such legislative measures to put in force the provisions of the protocol." It has been misinterpreted, when you state that your Government understands that according to the last sentence of Article X of the protocol the Government of Haiti has pledged itself to pass a law in strict conformity to the provisions of the protocol. This paragraph is explicit enough to make comment unnecessary; that what our two Governments wanted to stipulate was that additional legislative measures would subsequently be taken to give full effect to the provisions of the protocol, the questions foreseen in this diplomatic agreement being so complex that all could not be regulated in this single document.

After the conversations which took place at the United States between the American High Commissioner, Ambassador Extraordinary, and the Haitian State Secretaries of Foreign Affairs and Finances, it had been agreed that a project of the loan by the Bank of Issue would be submitted to the Haitian Government. The same as for the French loans, all the conditions and stipulations of the loan, binding respectively on the Haitian State and the lenders, were to be incorporated in this project. The bill for this law, passed by the legislative body, would sanction this contract. As the project stands it robs the State of Haiti of all control of the loan, from now on forever, and by article 3 the executive power relinquishes all general authority whatsoever to the financial adviser's whim. A bill in this form, as a matter of principle, can not be submitted to the legislative body.

6. Concerning the internal revenue, the high commissioner had previously discussed with the Haitian representatives the measures to be taken that purpose he would ask the assistance of an expert, a resident of the Dominican Republic.

Hence it was with great surprise that the Government has been invited to the immediate consideration, and even to the "early enactment" of the internal revenue law, drafted with the assistance of American when I suggested that that was so, Dr. Hudicourt made some reflection upon the honor and integrity of President Dartiguenave, as if he feared that this loan, which in his judgment, was prejudicial to the Haitian people, would be approved. Now, you make a statement that he did not approve it. It seems to me these representations are quite consistent when it comes to a determination of the character of President Dartiguenave. I do not quite understand that.

Mr. ANGELL. I think possibly, Senator, that there is something of a prehension on your part of the position of either Monsieur Hudicourt or I merely state that the government of President Dartiguenave did not accept or ratify a loan. That is a fact.

Senator POMERENE. I know; that is it, exactly. From your own statement, then, he stood by the Haitian people?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. From the standpoint of Dr. Hudicourt he would have had no faith in him, and so forth.

Mr. ANGELL. I did not understand Monsieur Hudicourt's testimony to that effect. It is my recollection that you asked him, in effect, whether he thought of the integrity and patriotism of President Dartiguenave.

Senator POMERENE. I did, sir, and at first he refused to answer.

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, sir; he at first refused to answer.

Senator POMERENE. And later he did answer in his own way. That is a statement which was in effect an answer.

Mr. ANGELL. I did not see, sir, that there is a difference between Monsieur Hudicourt's statement and my own. And even if there were I do not see that it is of any material consequence. I am discussing the principle of the loan and the question of its acceptance or rejection by the Haitian Government, either the old Government or the new Government, as a free agent, and not the personality or integrity or patriotism of the particular incumbent in office. That has nothing whatever to do with the particular individual; that is not my interest at all.

The objection to the submission of the loan question to any Haitian Government organized as it is now is that no Haitian Government is a free agent under the American occupation. We helped in 1915 to put into office a candidate for President, a man who agreed in advance to do what the United States would want him to do—at least, under certain representations.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I can not accept that statement. Of course there is no question but what he was looked upon more favorably by the United States Government than other men.

Mr. ANGELL. It is a matter of interpretation of facts, of course.

Senator POMERENE. I think so.

Mr. ANGELL. In my judgment—and I believe it is a sound judgment—I submit it as my personal conviction for whatever it is worth—we held a large share in the choice and election of President Dartiguenave. There were several candidates for the presidency, in a time of extreme emergency. Our troops were in complete control of the capital, and our naval forces, under Admiral Caperton's personal direction, had canvassed the field of candidates. They had gone to different men and asked them to stand for President. Haitian citizens of real standing in the community had refused on the ground that they could not agree in advance to what the United States wished to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt you there for a moment. In the first place, assuming that the representatives of the United States preferred the election of President Dartiguenave, that does not imply that he would do whatever was demanded of him. Secondly, I submit that if Captain Angell wishes to conclude his testimony, he would better not cover ground which has already been covered. The committee is perfectly ready to sit again to-morrow, but I understand that Captain Angell wants to go back to New York.

Mr. ANGELL. I do.

The point has been raised, and I must answer it briefly. My statement is that the United States had a material hand in the election of President Dartiguenave in 1915, but after his election and when we could not get the Haitian Chambers to do our will in connection with the new constitution passed in 1917 we had the Chambers dissolved, and that in the new constitution, written largely in the city of Washington by American Government officials, and submitted to the Haitian people through the illegal form of a plebiscite, an ingenious device was introduced of a council of state, appointed by the Senator POMERENE. What do you understand by the doctrine of Pan Americanism.

Mr. ANGELL. I think what that man means—

Senator POMERENE. Well, what does he mean by it?

Mr. ANGELL. I think what he means by it, and what many people mean by it, is—

Senator POMERENE. We are talking daily about Pan Americanism but means a friendly relationship of all the countries in South and Central America, as well as Mexico and the United States. That is what it means. It can not place any other construction upon that language than that Haiti be one of the Pan American states, just as Brazil or Argentina or Mexico the United States now is.

Mr. ANGELL. No, sir; I do not think so. My own interpretation of that particular man means, of course, is of no ultimate significance.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we are taking a great deal of time unnecessarily to discuss an article by an anonymous marine officer. You will recall that of Colonel Reed, in Santo Domingo, who issued a circular to his officers regarding annexation and who has since been reprimanded and had the record placed upon his record. And we know that representatives of the United States can people are here now negotiating with the State Department for the establishment of the Dominican Government.

Mr. ANGELL. I want to read to you, finally, a statement by Senator Harding when a candidate for President, a statement which I had never seen yesterday, made on August 28, 1920, at the time of the first public statement, believe, of some of the documents showing how the intervention was planned and the treaty put through in 1915. Senator Harding said:

"If I am elected president, as I expect to be, I will not empower my Assistant Secretary of the Navy to draft a constitution and jam it down the throats of a helpless people at the point of bayonets held by American troops. Nor will I misuse the power of the Executive to cover with a veil of secrecy repeated acts of unwarranted interference in the domestic affairs of the Republics in the Western Hemisphere, such as in the last few years have only made enemies of those who should be our friends, but have instead discredited us as their trusted neighbor.

"To the best of my information this is the first official admission of the rape of Haiti and Santo Domingo by the Wilson administration. To me, moreover, it is the most shocking assertion that ever emanated from a responsible official of the United States Government.

"Talk about self-determination! Talk about American ideals! Talk about equal rights for small nations! Before the confession of deeds such as these, what becomes of the smooth rhetoric of vaunted righteousness to which we have been so long accustomed?

"True we know little of the conduct of the wars of occupation and imposition of laws upon our helpless neighbors. The censorship is so strict that it was on the secret conferences and conspiracies in Congress has not been informed. The people are kept in ignorance."

I want to incorporate in the record at this particular point the conclusions which were drawn in this report of the 24 lawyers—the conclusions which appear at the end of the report. There are eight conclusions. I shall state them all, because they go back over the same ground to which I have constantly made reference, but the final conclusion is this:

"8. We declare, without qualification, that the honor and the good of the United States, the preservation of the sovereignty and the cherished interests of Haiti and her right to fair dealing on the part of the United States, as well as the possibility of assuring the continuance in the future of honorable and amicable relations between our country and Latin America, based on mutual confidence, all require:

"(a) The immediate abrogation by the United States of the treaty of 1904 unconditionally and without qualification.

"(b) The holding of elections of representatives to the legislative body of Haiti and of a President by the free will of the people at an early date.

"(c) The negotiation of a new treaty with a new Haitian administration, based on friendly cooperation between the United States and Haiti upon such terms as shall be mutually satisfactory to both countries and by the method of free and independent sovereign states."

That last suggestion provides the proper way out of the impasse which we are at the present moment. We all know that we can not withdraw the which will not be a disgrace to the good name of the United States: an act of aggression against a weaker, helpless people. The method of action and of carrying out such a possible convention, if desired by both, must be such as are above any suspicion of reproach to a stronger power: no abuse of force and might.

Finally, gentlemen, I think you know that I am not of that school of and professional mud slingers who delight in the emotional frenzies of their own government for real or fancied sins common to all governments. I would far rather have discovered, as an attorney, that my clients, those of American and Haitian citizens, had at best a weak case, and that as a citizen, that my country had added just laurels to its own reputation, name, and brought the blessings of a wise and just peace in this interference with a weak and helpless neighbor. But I should be wanting, I think, both in my professional duty as a lawyer and in the higher loyalty of a citizen were I to fail to emphasize, with all the earnestness at my command, the great wrong we have done to Haiti, that small neighbor to our own country.

By sheer force of arms, unjustified by any wrong committed or done to our own country or to any other country, we have crushed the independence of another people, stamped out by force, and by clever devices bearing no sanctity of law, every vestige of native self-government, every possible effective opposition to alien intrusion and domination. We have made Haiti a vassal, a stepping stone under our southward marching absorption of America.

Haiti under the treaty of 1915, imposed by our "exercising military power at propitious moments in the negotiations," is and will remain a living illustration, as our friend the marine officer at Port au Prince puts it, of our Pan-Americanism, of repudiation in action of all our fair professions of faith toward Latin America and of the wanton destruction of Haiti.

Do not deceive yourselves, gentlemen, if Haiti is not freed now she will be. Ten years, 20 years hence, the invisible chains of trade and commerce, finance and industry, investments and vested interests, will be too strong for mere advocates of such an old-fashioned doctrine as "Liberty" to break. Haiti will then have been irrevocably absorbed by her powerful and greedy neighbor from the north.

You can not, I am confident, either by ignoring the facts constituting the seizure of Haiti in 1915 or by the palliation of skillful argument, reissue from the higher plane of fundamental freedom of peoples to the lower plane of temporary expediency.

Questions such as the building of roads, the incidence of coffee export efficiency in the collection of revenues, pale into insignificance in the glare of light of the wrong done by our irresponsible bureaucrats to the very touchstone of international justice, order, and freedom?

The CHAIRMAN. Who are the irresponsible bureaucrats?

Mr. ANGELL. Our executive officials in Washington who made us wage war on Haiti in 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, they were not irresponsible, were they?

Mr. ANGELL. They were not authorized by Congress to make war.

The CHAIRMAN. I just want to define that. You mean the representatives of the executive power, responsible under our Constitution to the people? Or do you not mean "irresponsible bureaucrats"?

Mr. ANGELL. They acted in an entirely irresponsible manner, I think, Senator, and when the treaty was submitted for ratification in 1916 it was used to obtain that treaty on the part of Haiti were not disclosed.

The CHAIRMAN. I merely want to define the character of the persons responsible for this policy. You do not mean subordinate officials of the departments here in Washington, do you?

Mr. ANGELL. I do not know who conceived the idea and put it through, but it was done in the names of the Secretaries of the Navy and State. Who was responsible for it I do not know, whether those gentlemen or their subordinates.

Respectfully, but none the less firmly, I challenge this committee to the use of force and oppression which made possible in 1915 the complete control of all affairs public and private, which the United States exercised in Haiti in 1922.

If you pass over these facts in silence, you thereby admit that they have been explained away or justified. If you attempt openly and squarely to face them your own consciousness of what is inherently right and decent will

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, December 7.

From: The brigade commander.

To: Maj. Andrew B. Drum, A. A. and I., United States Marine Corps.

Subject: Investigation of alleged misconduct of certain members of the United States Marine Corps and the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

Inlosures: 1.

1. Under the authority of section 183 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 13, 1911, you are hereby detailed to investigate charges made before the select committee of the United States Senate by the inhabitants of the Hinche district, Republic of Haiti, against First Sgt. Patrick F. Kelly, United States Marine Corps, and certain other members of the United States Marine Corps and the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, names and which charges are set forth in the papers inclosed.

2. In accordance with the provisions of the statute above mentioned are given authority to administer an oath to any witnesses attending to testify or depose during the course of the investigation.

3. You will notify First Sergt. Patrick F. Kelly, United States Marine Corps, of the nature of the charges against him and of his right to be present at the investigation, and you will give him an opportunity to introduce witnesses and to make such statement as he may desire.

4. You will make a thorough investigation of the matters set forth in the papers above mentioned, and upon the completion of the investigation make a complete report to the brigade commander of the facts which you find to be established, together with your opinion and recommendations on the premises.

5. The commanding officer marine camp, Hinche, Republic of Haiti, is hereby detailed to afford you such facilities as may be necessary to the prosecution of the investigation and to furnish the necessary clerical assistance.

JOHN H. RUSSELL

ABSTRACT OF TESTIMONY TAKEN AT HINCHE, MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1919

OFFICE OF THE MILITARY GOVERNOR
Santo Domingo City, Dominican Republic, December 12, 1919.

All witnesses sworn.

Madame Exile Onex'le, Section La Juan, complained that about June, 1919, her mule was stolen from her house and was located in the possession of Captain Kelly at Cercle La Source. Captain Kelly refused to return the mule and demanded 135 gourds from her. She went back home and got the money, then (?) gave them to Kelly, who, however, did not give her her mule. Captain Kelly had her put in jail for two days.

In March, 1919, she said Captain Kelly went with a patrol to her house and stole some money, tied her husband up inside the house, burned the house, killing the husband. She heard of this occurrence two months later from her younger brother, Damuls Jean. She received this word when she was in Ranquette, where Jean also lived. Neither the witness nor the husband survived the killing. She made complaint of all of this to Lieutenant Wachs on November, 1920. No one now living where her habitation was.

Prevoir Solond, of Section La Juanaria, took refuge in Hinche from his house in about November, 1919, accompanied by his wife and child. They went to his house for food, and then the marines shot them. The witness saw the killing. The next day one of the neighbors about Leger and Giraud did see the body of the wife, and Lorisca Phenor saw the wife buried. She lived one hour's journey away from Hinche on horseback. The son was killed, and was buried with the mother.

Charles Bursey Zamor, of Hinche, accused Colonel Hooker of occupying his house March 27, 1919, against his will, and without compensation. He accused him of stealing his two mules and one burro. Complaint was made to the military

3. Question. Has Madame Exile Onexile, of Section La Juan, ever under your observation?

Answer. I do not recall the name.

4. Question. Did any woman during the month of November, 1921, make a complaint to you to the effect that Captain Kelly stole her mule, 4-135 gourds from her and put her in jail for two days in or about January? And, further, that in March, 1918, the same Captain Kelly entered her house, stole some money, tied her husband in the house, and then burned it.

Answer. No. When Admiral Knapp visited Bahon in November, 1921, a woman whose name I do not remember made a statement to Admiral Knapp which I interpreted. The substance of her statement was something like that in the question. No complaint of this nature was ever made to me.

(There being no further questions to put to this witness, he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

(The investigation then, at 10:30 a. m., adjourned to meet at Hinche, Republic of Haiti, upon the arrival of the investigating officer thereat.)

SECOND DAY.

HINCHE, REPUBLIC OF HAITI
December 29.

The investigation met at 8.45 a. m. Present: The investigating officer read the record of the proceedings of the first day of the investigation was read and approved. Then Pvt., First Class, Luke C. Wrisley, United States Marine Corps, entered, was duly sworn, and took his seat as recorder.

First Sergt. J. M. Darmond, United States Marine Corps, first lieutenant, Gendarmerie, entered, was duly sworn as interpreter, and took his seat.

The investigating officer called before him Madame Exile Onexile, the complainant, and First Sergt. Patrick Kelly, United States Marine Corps, Gendarmerie, the defendant, and announced that the investigation would be conducted with open doors.

The investigating officer reread the order directing him to make the investigation and the other papers transmitted to him by the brigade commander heretofore mentioned.

Madame Onexile and First Sergeant Kelly were informed of their rights present during the investigation and to be represented by counsel.

Neither desired counsel.

Madame Onexile and First Sergeant Kelly were informed of the rights given by First Sergeant Wood on the first day of the investigation and desired to question him further.

At this point First Sergeant Kelly requested that the complaint against him be not heard until he was given opportunity to go to Cerca La Source for tant evidence and return. The request being granted First Sergeant Kelly and Madame Onexile were temporarily excused and the investigation of case in which neither of them were interested was proceeded to by the investigating officer.

CHARLES BUSSEY ZAMOR was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Charles Bussey Zamor, Hinche, farmer.

2. Question. You have accused Colonel Hooker of occupying your house without your consent, on March 27, 1921. Is this correct?

Answer. Yes.

3. Question. Did Colonel Hooker ever offer to give you money for the house?

Answer. Before they occupied the house they offered me 75 gourds for rent of the house, which I refused. I did not want to rent the house to anybody.

4. Question. Have you ever asked for any money or put in any bills for the house?

Answer. No. Because Colonel Hooker had gone and I did not think it worth while to ask any other officer.

5. Question. To what use was this house put when used by Colonel Hooker?

Answer. It was used as a barracks and hospital by the marines only.

6. Question. How long did the marines occupy this house?

Answer. Two years.

JOSE DERIBERT was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Jose Deribert; section Aguahedione, near Los Palis; farmer.

2. Question. State what you know of the killing of your two brothers, Nestor Joseph and Joseph Deribert, in either October or November, 1919.

Answer. My two brothers are Joseph Deribert, age 25, and Nestor Joseph, age 15. I heard that three white men with 40 gendarmes entered the house and killed Joseph Deribert. Nestor Joseph entered and he was taken out after which they burned the house.

3. Question. State just what you yourself know concerning the shooting.

Answer. I saw three white men and 40 gendarmes pass before my house. It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I was 300 yards away [witness indicated a distance of 300 yards] and did not see them enter the house. I heard shots. They passed right by my house, and I had a little baby in my arms. I didn't see them put fire to the house and I didn't see them shoot anyone.

4. Question. Did you see the bodies with your own eyes?

Answer. Yes; I buried them. I found Joseph Deribert in the ruins of the house which was burned, and he was dead. Nestor Joseph was dead in Joseph Deribert's house.

5. Question. Did you see bullet holes in the bodies of the brothers?

Answer. Yes.

6. Question. Was it a machine gun that killed them?

Answer. No; it was a revolver that I heard fired, and I know the difference between the sound of a rifle and a revolver.

7. Question. Did you recognize any of the white men or gendarmes who passed by the house?

Answer. No.

(There being no further questions to put to this witness, he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

VERGELINE MUSCIEN was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Vergeline Muscien; Los Palis; I work on my farm.

2. Question. State what you know of the killing of the two brothers, Joseph Deribert and Nestor Joseph, either in October or November, 1919.

Answer. At about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, at Aguahedione, there were nine men, including my husband, Joseph Deribert, an invalid, sitting in the house playing cards. My husband was sitting on the bed and playing cards. The men saw the gendarmes and white officers coming and everyone ran. My husband was a cripple and could not run, so he hid in the bed. Nestor Joseph remained in the house. The gendarmes and white officers fired a volley at the people who ran. One white officer entered the house and fired once at my brother-in-law, who was standing at the right, and one shot at my husband, who was in the bed on the left, killing them both. Both shots were fired from a revolver. He then left the house. I was standing in the middle of the room with my two children. No one fired at me. Then, this white officer, before my very eyes, set fire to the house with a match, and the white officers and gendarmes left the section. My husband's leg was broken before we dragged his body out.

3. Question. Were the people in the house cacos or did they have arms?

Answer. They were good people and had no arms.

4. Question. Were there any cacos around?

Answer. Yes; there were cacos around, but I didn't see any because I was in the house.

5. Question. Could you recognize again the white officer who killed my husband and brother-in-law?

Answer. No.

(There being no further questions to put to this witness, she verified her testimony and withdrew.)

ERIE EMMANUEL was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Eria Emmanuel; section Aguahedione; farmer.

2. Question. State what you know of the killing of the two brothers, Nestor Joseph and Joseph Deribert.

(Neither the investigating officer nor Captain Kelly wish to question further. She verified her testimony and resumed her status as complainant.)

DAKUIS JEAN was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Damuis Jean, Ranquitte, farmer.

2. Question. State what you know of the killing of the husband of Madame Onexile, your sister.

Answer. On one morning in January, 1919, Captain Kelly and six men entered the house, tied up Madame Onexile's husband, choked him and hit him with a revolver despite a macout of money he had given them to save his life. They tied me and beat me, then took me outside of the house, beat Onexile's body. They took me to Hinche and left me on the curve for months.

3. Question. Was Onexile a relative of Norde?

Answer. No.

4. Question. Were there any cacos in the neighborhood at that time?

Answer. No.

5. Question. Were you the only witness that saw the killing?

Answer. Yes.

6. Question. Who shot your brother-in-law?

Answer. I don't know which one.

7. Question. Do you know Captain Kelly?

Answer. No.

8. Question. How do you know that it was Captain Kelly that was with the patrol?

Answer. Because he was in the command at Hinche and I knew him at the time.

9. Question. Is this Captain Kelly? [Pointing to Captain Kelly.]

Answer. I don't know.

10. Question. How far from Hinche is the place that the killing happened?

Answer. Four hours on foot.

11. Question. What is the name of this place?

Answer. Aguahedone.

NOTE.—When witness was asked a question he would always repeat in fashion the answer which he had given to question 2; then he would answer the question asked.

(Neither the complainant nor the defendant desired to question this witness. There being no further questions, he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

FEREND LE FORT was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Ferend Le Fort, Hinche, justice of the peace of Hinche.

2. Question. State what you know concerning the death of Madame Onexile's husband.

Answer. A man named Lozama Supreme came here to get gendarmes out to the house of Onexile, where he claimed there were a bunch of cacos. A white officer went out with the gendarmes.

3. Question. Who was the officer?

Answer. I don't know.

4. Question. Was it Captain Kelly?

Answer. No.

5. Question. How do you know it was not Captain Kelly?

Answer. I saw the officer that went out on the patrol, and it was not Captain Kelly. I know Captain Kelly very well.

6. Question. Were there any cacos where Onexile was killed?

Answer. I don't know, but it was rumored that there were bands of cacos.

8. Question. State what you know of the death of the father-in-law and brother-in-law of Odilis Telisima?

Answer. He was arrested with his son by the gendarmerie for being up with Cacos. The father-in-law was named Arcilis Joseph.

9. Question. What became of Arcilis Joseph?

s rumored that they arrested him and put him in prison and has been heard of him. I don't know what became of his son.

State what you know of affair of Maxime Michel? heard her mother was killed by white men and her brother was in the cape. It is only a rumor.

Were there Cacos around Aguabedione in 1918 and 1919?

They were all around there then. It was in a Caco district.

Do you know any of the gendarmes who went with Lozama and not know any of them.

no further questions to put to the witness, he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

MICHEL MAXIME was called as a witness and duly sworn.

Where were you when your mother was shot?

was at my husband's house, and my little brother, Telor Faveus, called me and told me that my mother was shot.

You didn't know anything about the killing of your mother when she came and told you?

I heard the shots, and my brother came running and told me.

Then you have not told the truth. You did not see white men when she shot her?

I did not see them shoot her; my brother told me about it.

Show us relatively the distance from the house you were in to the house where she was shot?

ness pointed to a tree, which is 75 yards distant, and said that she was that far from the place where her mother was killed, and that was the house at the time.

TELOR FAVEUS was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Telor Faveus, Bohoc, farmer.

2. Question. State what you know of the killing of your mother in 1919?

Answer. I came out of the house early in the morning and saw three coming along the road. Just at that time my mother came out of the house, one of the marines fired; my mother ran about 15 feet and fell. I then and watched them go into the house. They brought out my brother sick and made him a prisoner.

3. Question. How close were you to the house when they shot your mother?

Answer. I was right at the house standing beside mother. We watched white men and at 75 yards [indicated] they, or rather one of them, raised rifle and fired, I then ran.

4. Question. Where was your sister Michel Maxime?

Answer. At her house [indicating a distance of 800 or 1,000 yards];

5. Question. Did you sister see the shooting?

Answer. No. She knew nothing about it until after I buried mother.

6. Question. Were there more than three marines in the party?

Answer. I only saw three white men.

(There being no further questions to put to this witness he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

MERESSE WOOLLEY was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Meressee Woolley, Hinche, former mayor of Hinche.

2. Question. Were you present in Hinche when Madame Onex's husband was killed?

Answer. Yes.

3. Question. Did Captain Kelly lead the patrol that killed this man?

Answer. No.

4. Question. Are you certain?

Answer. No. I am not certain.

(There being no further questions to put to this witness he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

ODALIS TELISMA was called as a witness and duly sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Odalis Telisma; Aguahedione; farmer.

2. Question. State what you know of the killing of your father-in-law or brother-in-law?

Answer. At Aguahedione on one Sunday at sunrise about three years ago I heard shooting and went out. I looked around and saw a house burning. I went to the house and found my mother-in-law hiding in a ditch. I then saw some more shooting and went down the road and found my brother-in-law dead in the road. My father-in-law was missing and I heard that the marines brought him to Hinche.

3. Question. How far were you from the shooting?

Answer. I was about 300 yards [indicated] away from the place my brother-in-law was killed. At no time did I see the ones that did the shooting.

4. Question. Who did see the shooting?

Answer. There was not anyone that could have seen it.

5. Question. Did you see your father-in-law in prison?

Answer. No.

6. Question. What is the name of your father-in-law?

Answer. Arcilis Joseph.

7. Question. What is the name of your brother-in-law?

Answer. Anselis Joseph.

8. Question. How do you know that your father-in-law is dead?

Answer. A Dominican who is now dead, told me.

NOTE.—Prison records at Hinche do not show names of either Joseph

No further questions to ask this witness he verified his testimony. The investigation then at 4 p. m., adjourned to meet to-morrow, at 8 a. m.)

THIRD DAY.

HINCHE, REPUBLIC OF HAITI,
Wednesday, December 21, 1921.

Session met at 11 a. m.

Investigating officers and all the parties to the investigation. Present, justice of the peace at Cerca la Source, a witness called to the stand, was duly sworn and testified as follows:

What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Met Salomon; justice of the peace, Cerca la Source.

State what you know of the affair of the mule of Madame Exile she claims was taken by Captain Kelly, G. d' H., at Cerca la Source.

About three years ago I heard that the chief of section at Cerca la Source. Later the magistrate called me to his office to assist in the sale of a lost animal. It was sold to Milcent Dubois by public auction for 130 gourds.

Is this the mule? (pointing to Captain Kelly's mule).

I do not remember.

The witness did not desire to question this witness. There being no further questions to ask this witness he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

Present, the former Mayor of Cerca la Source, was called as a witness, duly sworn and testified as follows:

State your name, residence, and occupation.

I am Apollon; Cerca la Source; former mayor of Cerca la Source.

State what you know of the affair of the mule of Madame Exile she claims was taken by Captain Kelly, G. d' H., at Cerca la Source.

The chief of the third section, Cerca la Source reported to me that the mule was in the section and that the owner could not be found. I ordered him to bring the mule to me. I kept the mule in the section for the required time. At the end of this time the mule still in the section, it was sold at public auction to Milcent Dubois for 135 gourds. Dubois later sold the mule to Captain Kelly for the same price. The mule was sold, this woman [pointing to Madame Onexile, the wife of the chief of the section] came to me claiming the mule. She brought two other animals along with her as proof of her statement. I compared the brands on the two animals. They were not the same. I gave her the mule. I told her that if she could bring papers to prove the mule was hers that I would return it to her. She never

Is this the mule that you sold at public auction and which she claimed? [Pointing to Captain Kelly's mule].

It is the same mule.

Is this mule the lawful property of Captain Kelly?

It is.

Where was Captain Kelly during the month of January, 1919? What is the year Cerca la Source was attacked Captain Kelly was at Cerca la Source the entire month.

Cerca la Source was attacked 2d February, 1919.

(The complainant did not desire to ask any questions but launched a tirade against the justice of the peace and the mayor. There being no questions to ask this witness he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

First Sergt. PATRICK F. KELLY, United States Marine Corps, took the stand, as at his own request, was duly sworn and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name, rank and present station?

Answer. Patrick F. Kelly, first sergeant United States Marine Corps, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at Grande Riviere, Republic of Haiti.

2. Question. Where were you stationed in the years 1918 and 1919?

Answer. During the months of September and October 1918 I was stationed in Hinche. All the rest of the time from January 1, 1918, to September 1, 1919, I was at Cerca la Source.

3. Question. Where is Aguahedlone?

Answer. District of Hinche.

4. Question. What do you know of the death of Exile Onexile?

Answer. Nothing.

5. Question. During the latter part of 1918, or first part of 1919, did you take a patrol to the vicinity of Aguahedlone?

Answer. No, sir.

6. Question. Is the mule which you now have, the same you purchased at Cerca la Source from Milcent Dubois for 135 gourds?

Answer. Yes, sir. I will send you the papers.

7. Question. Have you ever taken any money from Madame Exile Onexile?

Answer. No, sir.

8. Question. Why was Madame Onexile locked up at Cerca la Source?

Answer. She was not locked up. She was detained by the Gendarmerie for one and one-half days pending my return from Hinche. I let her return as soon as I arrived. She was about to have a baby.

9. Question. Do you know Charles Bussey Zamor?

Answer. Yes, sir.

10. Question. Was he a Caco?

Answer. No, sir. Just a Bolshevik and a trouble maker. He disorganized the occupation.

(The complainant did not desire to question this witness. There being no further questions, the witness verified his testimony and resumed his position as the defendant. There were at this time no witnesses to call. The trial adjourned at 12:30 p. m.)

FOURTH DAY

PORT AU PRINCE, REPUBLIC OF HAITI
Wednesday, January 14, 1920

The investigation met at 9 a. m.
Present: The investigating officer.

WILLIAM F. BECKER, captain, United States Marine Corps, was called to the stand by the investigating officer, was duly sworn, and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. William F. Becker; captain, United States Marine Corps, stationed at Petionville.

2. Question. Have you ever been stationed in the district of Hinche?

Answer. Yes.

3. Question. During what months were you stationed there?

Answer. From April 20, 1919, to January 8, 1920.

4. Question. Are you familiar with a locality called Bohoc?

Answer. Yes; I am. It is between Hinche, Pignon, and Malassade.

5. Question. Were there any cacos in the neighborhood of Bohoc in 1919?

Answer. Yes, sir. I led a patrol into this district in June, 1919, in a battle with 200 cacos. I have my diary with me and it contains a full account of the affair written by me the day after the fight.

6. Question. Read from this diary such portions as pertain to the Bohoc.

3/19. Left Pignon at 2.30 a. m., with Major Lutz, United orps; Doctor Snowden, United States Marine Corps; and First er, United States Marine Corps; and 15 enlisted men, L. M. G. divisions, camped at Bohoc, La Tata; attack began 5.30 a. m., killed 9, seen, estimated 15; captured one bandit chief with name Calveus Pepet, four rifles, one revolver, one sword, one chette, and two horses, drove bandits toward Mombin Crochn, ; returned to Pignon 3.30 p. m., 18th."

Do you remember any other facts concerning this attack?
sir.

State them.

Setting my information from bandit prisoner I had my inter-prisoner to be sure and lead me to the big chief's quarters first, that one big chief was worth more to me than 40 or 50 soldiers. Men informed me that he would lead me to the caille, where a hat made this native a prisoner in this bandit camp. At about 18, 1919, we arrived near a bandit outpost; several bandits [personally rushed in this caille that was pointed out to me by the big chief's quarters and grabbed a native by the neck that under his mat for a large machette. I dragged my prisoner out—my prisoner guide if he could identify him; the guide then was the big chief he wanted me to capture. The guide gave me rank as follows: Calveus Pepet, colonel. My patrol then ravine to attack the main camp. During this advance bandits both sides of this ravine and it took us until about 11 a. m. to tire five divisions camped in this section.

What became of Calveus Pepet?

It him to the prison at Cape Haitien, Republic of Haiti.

How many men were with you when you entered the Caille tered alone. My entire patrol of 15 men was outside. I had ers not to fire.

Was a woman killed during this attack?

to my knowledge. A woman ran out of Pepet's Caille but irt.

But a woman might have been killed?

; because we were fighting right in the main bandit camp and men all around.

Were any other patrols in the Bohoc section during the month to my knowledge, and I commanded in that section. However, ion pack train, guarded by marines, passed there every week.

Are there any of the persons who accompanied your patrol to 1919, now in Haiti?

sir. The guide later joined the bandits and was killed.

Did you have any fights with Cacos in November, 1919, in ' Savanne Leujeu [showing witness on the map the location as it is not known to him by that name]?

sir; but Sergeant Swanson of my command took a patrol on October 20, 1919, and encountered bandits. There were ; in this section, and they fired on every patrol that passed

Have you Swanson's patrol report?

sir.

Where is Sergeant Swanson now?

he United States; perhaps out of the service.

Was Bohoc a bad Caco district?

of the worst in Haiti. All the inhabitants were Cacos or Caco

Are you familiar with Aguahedlone in the Los Palis section?

sir. It was not in my district.

Are any members of Sergeant Swanson's partol still in Haiti?

sir. Neither have I any way of knowing who they were. ber of my old company is still in Haiti and he did not make

21. Question. During your stay at Maissade was there any other person by the name of Calveus arrested in the Bohoc section and sent to Cape Haitien?

Answer. No, sir; there was not.

(There being no further questions the witness verified his testimony and withdrew. There were no further witnesses to call. The investigation announced that the investigation was finished and adjourned at 11:30.

Before arriving at a finding the investigating officer carefully examined old patrol reports obtainable, but could find nothing that would throw light upon the matters under investigation. The names of the persons nowhere appear; neither do, in most cases, the localities mentioned. Localities named are clusters of a few huts surrounded by farms or plantations. They are all, without exception, situated in the sections where the cacos are most active. Every inhabitant either aided the cacos through force or cowardice or sought refuge in the adjoining towns.

There is no record at Hinche of any report about the killing of the brothers.

An affidavit by Capt. Philip Neuhaus, gendarmerie d'Haiti, relative to the claim of Charles B. Zamor, is hereto appended, marked "1."

There is no record in the prison at Cape Haitien of a Calveus Faveus being confined. There is, however, record of one Calveus Pepe being confined at Cape Haitien and every detail corresponds to the facts given by Michel Maxime concerning the arrest, confinement, and death of Calveus Faveus. Extract of the prison record of Calveus Pope is hereto appended, marked "2." Although Captain Becker testifies that the name of the prisoner was Calveus Pepet, the receipt given to Captain Becker for the prisoner by the prison officer at Cape Haitien reads "Calveus Pepe."

Every effort was made to ascertain the identity and whereabouts of the gendarmes who were members of any of the various patrols mentioned without success.

FACTS ESTABLISHED.

1. That Charles Bussey Zamor was offered 75 gourdes per month for the use of his house by Lieutenant Colonel Hooker, United States Marine Corps, and that he refused to rent the building. That the Marine Corps requested the house for use as a hospital and so occupied it for two years. That no rental has ever been paid for the house nor has any bill ever been paid by Zamor for rental.

2. That Madame Exile Onexile did not make a complaint to First Sergeant Harold R. Wood, United States Marine Corps, captain gendarmerie d'Haiti, concerning the alleged misconduct of First Serg. Patrick F. Kelly, United States Marine Corps, captain gendarmerie d'Haiti, but that she did make a complaint to Admiral Knapp, United States Navy.

3. That the wife and child of Previor Solon were killed at Juan-Maissade, Republic of Haiti, in November, 1919, by either the cacos or marines from Maissade, during an attack on the cacos, who were present at that time.

4. That Joseph Deribert and Nestor Joseph were killed by a caco patrol, officered by marines, names unknown, in October, 1919, at Agouadone, a place that was infested with cacos.

5. That Exile Onexile was killed either by cacos or by marines in January, 1919.

6. That First Sergt. Patrick F. Kelly, United States Marine Corps, captain gendarmerie d'Haiti, had nothing whatsoever to do with the death and robbery of Exile Onexile in any manner, shape, or form.

7. That the mother of Madame Michel Maxime, Madame Faveus, was killed in June, 1919, at Bohoc by a marine patrol under Captain Becker during a battle with the cacos.

8. That Ansell Joseph was killed at sunrise on a Sunday in January at Aguahedone by a gendarme patrol officered by white men (marines).

9. That Arcilis Joseph has been missing since the death of his son, mentioned in paragraph 8.

10. That the mule claimed by Madame Exile Onexile is the lawful property of First Sergt. Patrick F. Kelly, United States Marine Corps, captain gendarmerie d'Haiti, and that she has no valid or just claim to same.

Mediane, Savanne Lenjeu, and Bohoc are in the districts which were infested with cacos.

OPINION.

As Jean, the brother of Madame Exile Onexile, is lying. He is untruthful and a degenerate. His manner of telling his story to me has been most carefully coached. Exile Onexile was most anxious as it is strongly rumored that he was a relative of Norde, and was killed by a marine or gendarme, but not in the manner described.

The claim made by Madame Exile Onexile was most probably once in a while obtained in an illegal manner; otherwise she would have her papers for it.

As Bussey Zamor does not know who took his animals. He has not the circumstances before. He hates the occupation and would like getting the better of it.

As Faveus and Calveus Pepe are one and the same person. As arrested June 18, 1919, and sent to Cape Haitien, where he died on July 22, 1919, to six months' hard labor. He died in prison on December 24, 1919, just one month before his time was up. It appears to be about 60 years of age. Her "little brother" would be about 40 years old. Therefore the age of Calveus Pepe (45) is about that of Madame Maxime's brother. Captain Becker can find if any other Calveus was arrested in the Bohoc section during the command (April, 1919, to January, 1920), as he is very methodical in his excellent diary.

As Deribert and Nestor Joseph were killed the gendarme patrol upon a group of nine men, seven of whom ran. In this section I can be suspicious. Also it is not certain that the Haitians were afraid, the gendarmes shot quickly, and the two men were killed and burned. I do not believe that the incident occurred exactly as described.

As Ansell Joseph were undoubtedly cacos and killed as such. As Evoir and her child were innocent victims of the marines during the work on a caco camp.

RECOMMENDATION.

It should be appointed to consider the claims of Charles Bussey Zamor, and a decision be made. Further action be taken in regard to the other complaints.

As Bussey Zamor, statement of, concerning taking of house at Hinches.

During the course of a conversation in this office between Mr. Zamor and Mr. Zamor made the following statement:
I was subjected to much ill treatment at the hands of the members of the cacos. They even threw me out of my house when I refused to turn it over.

I asked Mr. Zamor if he had not been paid rent for the time the house was occupied by the marines. His answer was:

"No; I have not been paid, nor will I ever be paid rent for my house. I can be paid rent if I never rented the house. I tell you the house was taken from me. Nothing can pay for that."

2. The above has been Mr. Zamor's attitude toward this difficulty at the time the house was taken. It is general knowledge that he was offered $15 per month for the time the house was used. This amount is less than is being paid for the rental of any house in Hinche.

ART. 39. In case of vacancy by reason of death, resignation, disqualification, or any other cause, provision shall be made for a successor in his department only for the remainder of his term, by a special election called immediately by the President of the Republic.

This election shall take place within a period of 30 days after the adjournment of the primary assembly, in accordance with article 107 of the constitution.

The same procedure shall take place in case of nonelection in the several departments.

SECTION III.—THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

ART. 40. The two houses shall meet in National Assembly, in the case provided for by the constitution.

The powers of the National Assembly shall be limited and shall not be extended to any other purposes than those which are specially assigned by the constitution.

ART. 41. The president of the senate shall preside over the National Assembly, the president of the Chamber of Commons shall be the vice president of it, and the secretaries of the senate and of the Chamber of Commons shall be the secretaries of the National Assembly.

ART. 42. The attributions of the National Assembly shall be:

1. To elect the President of the Republic and to administer to him the constitutional oath.

2. To declare war, upon the report of the executive power.

3. To approve or to reject treaties of peace and other international agreements and conventions.

ART. 43. In the years of regular presidential elections the National Assembly shall proceed to the election of the President of the Republic on the second day in April and shall not undertake any other work, remaining in session, except on Sundays and holidays, until the President shall be elected.

ART. 44. The election of the President of the Republic shall be made by ballot and by an absolute majority.

If after the first ballot no candidate has secured the number of votes required for his election, a second ballot shall be taken. If on this second ballot no candidate is elected, the election shall be concentrated on the three candidates who have obtained the highest number of votes. If after three

In case of urgency, at a time when the legislative body is not in session, the executive power may convene the National Assembly in extra session to communicate to the National Assembly, through a written message, his convocation.

The presence in the National Assembly of a majority of each of the houses is necessary to pass its resolutions; but a minority may adjourn in order to compel the absent members to attend the meeting, in any manner and under the penalties which the National Assembly

CHAPTER II.

SECTION I.—THE EXERCISE OF THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The seat of the legislative body shall be in the capital of the Republic.

The legislative body shall meet each year, without need of express summons, on the first Monday of April.

The session shall begin from the date when the bureaux<sup>1</sup> of the two houses shall have met for the last three months. In case of necessity, this period may be extended for a longer or shorter time by the executive power or by the legislative body.

The President of the Republic may adjourn the houses. But the adjournment shall not last over one month, and more than two adjournments shall not be made during the course of the same session.

The interval between sessions, and in case of urgency, the President of the Republic shall call the legislative body to meet in extra session.

When he calls them, by means of a message, the reason for this measure.

When called to meet in extra session, the legislative body shall discuss only other matters foreign to those for which it has been convened. The President of the house shall be the judge of the election of its members and shall settle the contests which may arise on the subject.

Each member of each house shall individually take the oath to maintain the constitution of the people and to be faithful to the constitution.

The meetings of the two houses shall be public.

Each house may resolve itself into a secret committee at the request of five members thereafter by an absolute majority whether or not the meeting is to be held in public in regard to the same subject.

The legislative power shall make the laws on all subjects of public administration. [of the legislation] shall belong to each one of the two houses in case of vacancy of the executive power.

The President of the Republic shall promulgate the budgetary law, the law concerning the assessment, distribution of collection of taxes and contributions, the laws having for their object the creation of revenue or increase of the expenses of the State voted by the Chamber of Deputies.

In case of disagreement between the two houses in regard to these laws, each house shall draw by lot an equal number of members to form an inter-commission which shall decide the disagreement with finality.

Officers and clerks necessary for the conduct of business.

The executive power has the exclusive right to take the initiative regarding the public expenses, and neither of the two houses has the increase in whole or in part the expenses proposed by the executive.

ART. 56. Each house, by its own rules, shall establish its discipline and determine the method under which it shall exercise its attributions.

Each house may impose disciplinary penalties upon its members for reprehensible conduct and may expell a member by the vote of a majority of two thirds of its members.

ART. 57. The members of the legislative body, except in case of delicto, of treason, or acts entailing a corporal or ignominious punishment, shall not be prosecuted or arrested by way of repression during the legislative session without the authorization of the house to which they belong.

In no case shall they be arrested while they are attending a meeting of the house or while they are on their way to and from it.

ART. 58. Neither of the two houses shall adopt any resolutions in the presence of an absolute majority of its members; however, a lesser number of members may adjourn from day to day and compel the absent members to attend the meeting according to the manner and under the penalties which the house may prescribe.

ART. 59. No act of the legislative body shall be passed except by a vote equal to or greater than the majority of the members present, unless otherwise provided for by the present constitution.

ART. 60. No bill shall be adopted by either of the two houses which has not been voted article by article.

ART. 61. Each house shall have the right to amend and revise the bills and amendments proposed. The amendments voted by one house shall not be made a part of a bill until they have been voted on by the other house. A bill shall be enacted into law until after it has been voted on in the same manner by the two houses. Any bill may be withdrawn before said bill is voted upon.

ART. 62. Every law passed by the legislative body shall be immediately promulgated to the President of the Republic, who, before promulgating it, has the right to make objections thereto, in whole or in part.

In this case he shall return the law to the house in which it originated, together with his objections. If the law is amended by this house, it shall be sent to the other house, together with his objections.

If the law thus amended is passed by the second house, it shall be sent to the President to be promulgated.

If the objections are rejected by the house which originally passed the law, it shall be sent to the other house, together with the objections.

If the second house likewise votes to reject these objections, the law shall be sent to the President, who shall then be obliged to promulgate it.

The rejection of the objections shall be voted in both houses by a vote of two thirds of each house; in this case the vote of each house shall be recorded by yeas and nays and shall be noted down in the margin of the minutes, together with the name of each member of the Assembly.

If two thirds of either house shall not meet to consider the rejection of the objections, said objections shall be accepted.

ART. 63. The right to object should be exercised within eight days after the date of the presentation of the law to the President, exclusive of Sunday and the days of adjournment of the legislative body, in accordance with article 62 of the present Constitution.

ART. 64. If within the period prescribed by the preceding article, the President of the Republic does not make any objection, the law shall be promulgated unless the session of the legislative body shall have closed before the expiration of that period. In this case the law shall be held in abeyance.

ART. 65. A bill rejected by one of the two houses shall not be reintroduced during the same session.

ART. 66. The laws and other acts of the legislative body shall be promulgated through the Moniteur and shall be inserted in the bulletin, printed and sold under the title Bulletin des Lois.

ART. 67. The law shall take its date from the day of its definitive promulgation by the two houses; but no laws shall become obligatory until after the promulgation, which is to be made according to law:

ne shall personally present petitions to the legislative body.

ART. B. The duration of the mandate of the communal councillors shall be five years, to end on the 15th day of January, 1920.

ART. C. The first election of members of the legislative body after the promulgation of the present constitution shall take place on the 10th of January, 1920, even-numbered year.

The year shall be fixed by a decree of the President of the Republic at least three months before the meeting of the primary assemblies.

The session of the legislative body then elected shall convene on the constitutional date immediately following the first election.

ART. D. A council of state, created in accordance with the same conditions as those of the decree of April 5, 1916, and composed of 21 members distributed among the different departments, shall exercise the legislative functions until the legislative body is constituted, on which date the council shall cease to exist.

ART. E. The irremovability of judges shall be suspended for a period of six months beginning from the date of the promulgation of the present constitution.

Third. To approve or to reject treaties of peace and other international conventions.

In short, if it be true that the council of state exercises the functions of the legislative branch, it has not, however, the functions of the National Assembly.

The council of state is consequently without power to elect the sovereign M. Dartiguenave.

According to the contrary opinion, although not at all widely held, that the council of state, having declared war on the German Empire and having ratified the treaty of Versailles, has full power to elect the sovereign M. Dartiguenave.

I reply that it is in violation of the constitution that the council declared war on Germany and that it was further violative of the constitution that it approved the treaty of Versailles. And I add that two violations of the constitution can not validate a third violation.

Deponent was in the city of Port au Prince in the month of December, 1914, and on or about the 13th day of December, 1914, United States marines landed from the U. S. S. Machias. Said marines, in uniform and armed, proceeded to the building occupied by the Bank Nationale d'Haiti and received $500,000 in gold, which said marines then and there transported to the streets of Port au Prince between 12 noon and 2 p. m. of the said day. The wharf and thence loaded the same on board the U. S. S. Machias. The aforesaid events were not witnessed by deponent personally, but were witnessed by considerable numbers of passers-by in the streets through which they proceeded openly, and the said facts were and are a matter of common knowledge in Haiti. Deponent's knowledge of these facts is derived from the papers printed in Port au Prince in the late afternoon of the same day.

On the same day the Government of Haiti instituted a formal investigation and complaint against the bank for delivery of the said gold, the proceeds of the Haitian Government, held in trust by the bank as security for paper money then in circulation, to which reference is made in the report of M. Louis Borno, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs for the year 1916, Volume II, page 100.

ing order was read, and the board determined upon its provided to sit with open doors.

then called before it Acting First Lieut. Charles E. Kenney, in his status as a defendant, and of his right to be present during ion and to be represented by counsel.

Mr. ALVIN GERDES, a witness called by the board, entered and was sworn.

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

Answer. Alvin Gerdes, assistant public health officer, Aux Cayes.

2. Question. Do you know First Lieutenant Kenney of the gendarmerie?

Answer. Yes.

3. Question. Did he come under your observation recently at a concert at the Cercle Union in Aux Cayes; and if so, state the circumstances under which the board what Lieutenant Kenney did on that occasion.

Answer. Yes; I was there and I saw Lieutenant Kenney. It was a concert given by Jehan Riko, the singer. Lieutenant Kenney and Lieut. Freidman came in together; Lieutenant Kenney sat down and Lieut. Freidman was standing at his right; Lieutenant Kenney was approached by the president of the club, Mr. Douyon, who said to him in English: "Buy a program," to which words Lieutenant Kenney took exception. He seemed to mean him, who was not yet acquainted with the people, customs on such occasions, "you are obliged to buy a program in order to be present." The president of the club, who does not speak English well, desired to know whether or not Lieutenant Kenney wished to give something out of generosity. Then Lieutenant Kenney turned and said to someone near by: "Give Lieutenant Freidman a chair." After having a second time and no chair came forth, Mr. Dartigue told him it had not been the custom to furnish chairs to the people who come; that everybody was to use their own chairs. Then Lieutenant Kenney asked me who was president of the club, and I introduced him to Mr. Ernest Douyon, and he asked Mr. Douyon who gave them permission to have the meeting. Mr. Douyon replied that he had sent notice to the gendarmes already that they intended to have a meeting, etc. I do not recall all the conversation that ensued; I do recall that Lieutenant Kenney told President Douyon that in the future he would have a gendarme present for the sake of the people in case anyone attempted to cause disorder. He also stated to those near by that it would be convenient in the future to have a few chairs there for any public office that might desire to come. I stayed there until the end of the meeting, and it happened that was not right.

4. Question. Do you know whether or not Lieutenant Kenney was under the influence of liquor, judging from all appearances and actions?

Answer. To the best of my knowledge he was not.

(None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine him, so he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

Mr. J. A. GERDES, a witness called by the board, entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the BOARD:

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

Answer. J. A. Gerdes, proprietor of the Hotel d'Haiti, Aux Cayes, Haïti.

2. Question. Where were you on the evening of November 19, 1921?

Answer. In Aux Cayes.

3. Question. Do you know Lieutenant Kenney?

Answer. Yes.

4. Question. Did he come under your observation on the evening of November 19, 1921; and if so, state briefly the circumstances to include what you actually saw and heard, and of your own knowledge know to be true?

Answer. I was in front of the Hotel Haiti with the pompiers when Lieutenant Clermont came to me and told me that the district commander had ordered him to order the bugles of the firemen company stopped. As I was the only man in the company who could talk English, I asked the commander of the company, Mr. Joseph Delorme, for permission to go and explain the matter to Lieutenant Kenney. The whole company approved of this, and I asked Lieutenant Clermont to come with me to see Lieutenant Kenney. We were in the street coming toward us about 150 yards from where the band was; I addressed Lieutenant Kenney, and tried to explain to him that it was for us to have fire drill at other hours, as the most of us were employed by commercial concerns. Lieutenant Kenney replied that he had an order and wanted it carried out, and that if he should happen to hear noise again he would have Mr. Delorme and those who were blowing the horns put in prison.

4. Question. Did Lieutenant Kenney order the drill to be stopped, or was the drill already stopped and some one was just blowing the bugles?

drill had suspended for a few minutes, and we were having a tel; we had finished drilling with the pumps but had not had our en were practicing on the bugles.

When you saw Lieutenant Kenney, was he drunk or did he ap-pen drinking?

n not say that he was; I did not talk at length with him.

What happened after that?

n I answered him, "All right, sir; your orders will be executed."

and went back to the firemen's company, to whom I related ex-been said between Lieutenant Kenney and myself. Then we all as best that we should try again to ask Lieutenant Kenney to order, so we all marched toward the Hotel International, where tenant Kenney standing on the gallery with Lieutenant Clermont.
nt ordered the company to halt. The commandant and myself ng terms: "Excuse me, Lieutenant Kenney; here is the com-would like to tell you a few words"; and he replied, "At the y office hours." So the commandant ordered the company to station without blowing the horns. When we arrived there we it it was better for us to make a decision as to what to do about not know whether or not we would be allowed to have any more ecided to dissolve the company until we could get further inforhe matter. Mr. Delorme stated that if we were going to dissolve e would have to write and notify the district commander to that as done, and signed by all members present.

Did you all maturely deliberate upon the matter before writing er written hastily or on the spur of the moment?

was written hastily and on the spur of the moment, perhaps, as we think everything over and the possible consequences. The affair to some of the others; the lieutenant was perhaps misunderstood;
ow.

Do you think you people were justified in dissolving the com-as you did?

um the point of view we had at that time; yes. We are a volunion and are business men who can not have these drills in the well. We had the impression that Lieutenant Kenney wanted us ls in the evening, so we could not see how it would be possible to istence. So we dissolved.

Did you see Lieutenant Kenney any more after that?

s. Two days later, when I was well again, I went down to the ad a very nice talk with him. I found that he had not intended ntinue our drills, but that he simply was opposed to blowing the ark.

u, a witness called by the defendant, entered and was duly sworn.

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

chard Cardoza, a clerk of Taverne & Co., of Aux Cayes.

Where were you on November 19, 1921?

re in Aux Cayes.

. Do you know First Lieut. Charles E. Kenney, of the gend-

s; I do.

. Did you see Lieutenant Kenney on the evening of November 19;
ise state the circumstances?

Answer. At about 6.45 p. m. I was standing at the Hotel Intercontinental. Lieutenant Kenney came in one door and walked out the other and stood on the porch looking at the volunteer firemen, who were congregated in front of the hotel. I then got up from where I was sitting and went to the kitchen for supper. Afterwards, at about 8.30, I met him on the street in front of the ice-cream parlor, near the hotel. From there we took a walk and arrived at Kenney's home at about 10 o'clock. While there some one brought me a letter, which had marked on the envelope the words "very urgent." It was in French, and I knew French, Lieutenant Kenney asked me to read it for him.

(At this stage of the testimony, the defendant produced a copy of the letter which was certified correct by the civil officials of Aux Cayes, of which is appended, marked "Exhibit No. 1," and same was read before the board. The board directed the witness to continue his testimony.)

Answer. I translated Mr. Delorme's letter, which had been signed by the members of the firemen's company, and explained the contents to Lieutenant Kenney. Then Lieutenant Kenney sent for Mr. Delorme and, when he came, explained to him that no bugles were to be sounded nor drills to be held at night; that they had been holding such drills near the hospital and there where there were two cases of sickness. They talked for about two hours on the question of having such drills at night, and of such regulations as were necessary for the government of a firemen's company. Mr. Delorme agreed with Kenney on every point it seemed, so Kenney told him to leave the bureau only after he had thoroughly understood his attitude on the matter. He turned Mr. Delorme over to Lieutenant Clermont and told Lieutenant Clermont that when Mr. Delorme had fully understood matters, what Lieutenant Kenney wanted him to do, he should release him. When he started to go, Kenney turned toward Delorme and told him that in case of fire that night Delorme would be held responsible in case the firemen did not assist. As he said this, he had a crop in his hand, which he shook in the face of Delorme as he talked to him, emphasizing the remark.

5. Question. How did Lieutenant Kenney use the crop?

Answer. He held the crop in his right hand, beating it on the palm of his left hand, in front of Delorme's face, which made Delorme more angry, and he told Lieutenant Kenney to not point the whip in his face. Then Delorme grabbed hold of the crop and pushed it back toward Kenney. With his left hand, grabbed Delorme back of the neck and pulled the crop away from Delorme and walked away.

6. Did Lieutenant Kenney hit Mr. Delorme?

Answer. No; he did not. He only took the crop away from him and walked away; and, as he was leaving the room, he turned to the first sergeant and told him to confine Delorme. Kenney and I then left and went home.

7. Question. When did you see Lieutenant Kenney again?

Answer. The next afternoon at about 3 p. m. with the civil officials had come to see Lieutenant Kenney and ask for the release of Delorme. He stated that Mr. Delorme wanted his letter back, and that if Lieutenant Kenney would release him they would stand good for any disorder he might make. Consequently, Delorme was released that date. Then we all went home.

(Neither of the parties to the investigation desired to further examine the witness; he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

MR. EMILLE SENDRAL, a witness, called by the board, entered, and was sworn.

Examined by the BOARD:

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

Answer. Emille Sendral, an employee of Henri Sendral, Aux Cayes.

2. Question. Do you know Lieutenant Kenney?

Answer. Yes; when I see him.

3. Question. Did Lieutenant Kenney come under your observation on the evening of November 19? And if so, state the circumstances.

Answer. I saw him at about 6.45 p. m. in front of the Hotel Intercontinental talking to Mr. Delorme on the porch. I was one of the firemen who were assembled there, while my uncle, Mr. J. A. Gerdes, was also speaking to Lieutenant Kenney. As they were talking in English, I could not hear what they were saying, but when they were through talking, the firemen returned to their station. Did you actually see either Lieutenant Kenney or Mr. Delorme cussion?

I did not see either of them; I only overheard them talking at direction a noise that sounded like a slap. Can you swear that it was a slap you heard? I can not; as I did not actually see either of them. Could not the firemen arrange different hours for their drill? with the consent of the patrons. From there we went to Mr. Delorme's house at the door, and were admitted. We told him that Lieutenant Kenney's presence at the bureau, and he came along willingly.

7. Question. Did you arrest Mr. Delorme or simply request him to leave the bureau?

Answer. We simply requested him to come and he came readily.

8. Question. What happened at the bureau?

Answer. Upon arrival there Lieutenant Kenney asked Mr. Delorme if he had to write him such a letter as he did.

9. Question. Were you present during all the discussion?

Answer. No; as soon as I arrived there with Mr. Delorme I went to see Mr. Gerdes, as the lieutenant had given me a note for Lieutenant S. . . who was sick at the hotel. Finding that Mr. Gerdes was too sick to get down, and that he had had his doctor make a certificate to that effect, I returned to the bureau.

10. Question. Did Mr. Delorme explain why he had written the letter?

Answer. He told the lieutenant that the firemen had been having trouble. The lieutenant replied that they had no right to blow their bugles at night when drilling. Mr. Delorme also stated that he was not the one who had written the letter, that the firemen had written the letter and signed it themselves. Lieutenant Kenney asked for an explanation as to why it had been done, as Mr. Delorme was their commandant. Mr. Delorme stated that the firemen were employed in the business houses and could not drill all day, that it was necessary for them to continue after dark, and that they could not have their drills after dark they would have to dissolve the company. Then the lieutenant told him that as the company had no protection in case of a fire at night the town would be without protection and the commandant would be responsible, especially he, Mr. Delorme, their commandant. Delorme replied that on the contrary Lieutenant Kenney would be responsible, as he had made it impossible for them to drill, as he had not allowed them to sound their bugles after dark, which meant that they had no protection in case of fire. A hot argument followed, during which many words were passed, all of which I can not remember at present. Mr. Delorme argued that the firemen had been responsible for putting out the Bridault's store, and Lieutenant Kenney argued that the gendarmes were the most of it.

11. Question. Were you at the Bridault fire? And if so, state what you saw.

Answer. The firemen arrived there at the last minute. I was not there. I saw it all; the gendarmes had put it out with buckets and the water from a near-by well.

12. Question. Tell what else happened while Mr. Delorme was at the bureau.

Answer. In the argument that occurred between the two, Mr. Delorme did not give the reasons why the firemen had taken such sudden and unexpected action in dissolving the company. Lieutenant Kenney also asked if they had not announced to the gendarmerie in advance that they were to have their drill and sound their bugles after dark, to which Mr. Delorme replied that as they were free they were not obliged to say anything to the gendarmerie before drilling. Mr. Delorme said that he was at home and slept, that he had no further explanations to make. Then Lieutenant Kenney turned to me and said that he was going to leave Mr. Delorme's company until he was willing to give some satisfactory explanation for the action that had been taken by the firemen. In starting to leave the lieutenant turned to Mr. Delorme, and with a crop in his right hand shaking same in the face of Mr. Delorme as he spoke, announced that if a fire occurred during the night Mr. Delorme would be held responsible for the firemen not being there. Mr. Delorme became angry and pushed the crop back from him and told the lieutenant not to shake the crop in his face. As he pushed the crop away he also caught hold of it, and to recover the lieutenant with his left hand caught Mr. Delorme at the back of the head and with his right hand pulled the whip away from him and walked out.

13. Question. How hard did Lieutenant Kenney hit Mr. Delorme?

Answer. He did not hit him at all; it happened exactly as I just said.

Could the impact of Lieutenant Kenney's hand have been e, 20 meters away?

CHARLES LIAUTEAUD, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, a witness called by entered and was duly sworn.

ad by the BOARD:

What is your name, rank, and present station?

Charles Liauteaud, first sergeant Gendarmerie d'Haiti, on duty at Where were you on the evening of November 19, 1921?

re in Aux Cayes.

What do you know of Lieutenant Kenney's affair with Mr.

Answer. At about 11 p. m. Lieutenant Kenney sent for me at my room at the bureau, and when I arrived at the bureau, the lieutenant told me Mr. Delorme; that he had to see him.

4. Question. Did Lieutenant Kenney send you to arrest Mr. Delorme? Answer. No; indeed. He told me to tell Mr. Delorme that he was to see him at the bureau, which are the exact words I told Delorme.

5. Question. Did anyone accompany you to Delorme's home?

Answer. Only Lieutenant Clermont.

6. Question. Were any gendarmes near by when you arrived?

Answer. No; but as we left there, two gendarmes were standing at the corner of the block; one was a town patrol, the other was a man on liberty.

7. Question. Had Lieutenant Kenney sent you to get Mr. Gerdes?

Answer. He had told me to see Mr. Gerdes while on my way to Mr. Delorme's home and tell that he would like to see him.

8. Question. How many times did the lieutenant send for Mr. Gerdes?

Answer. Twice; the second time was to obtain the doctor's statement. Mr. Gerdes was too ill to come.

9. Question. Did he tell you to arrest Mr. Gerdes?

Answer. No, indeed.

10. Question. Relate what happened at the bureau after your return?

Answer. When Mr. Delorme arrived, Lieutenant Kenney offered him a chair and informed him that he had sent for him to find out about the fire, why he had written it, and why they had dissolved the firemen. At that moment I left for the hotel to see Mr. Gerdes the second time. I returned about 20 minutes later with the doctor's certificate.

11. Question. Who all were present here upon your return to the bureau?

Answer. I found Lieutenant Kenney, Mr. Cardoza, and Mr. Delorme.

12. Question. State briefly as possible all that happened which was at Lieutenant Kenney's.

Answer. Mr. Delorme was asked by Lieutenant Kenney to explain the sense and for what end and purpose he had written such a letter to Lieutenant Kenney, to which Mr. Delorme did not reply directly, always evading the question. He did this way during the entire session. After Lieutenant Kenney had asked the same question of Mr. Delorme about 8 or 10 times, receiving the same kind of an answer, Mr. Delorme got angry and refused to further reply. Then he said to the lieutenant, with considerable anger, "you are going to send me to jail, send me to jail; if you are going to send me to my home, send me there." I remember all that very distinctly. Then Lieutenant Kenney got up and told Mr. Cardoza, the interpreter, to tell Lieutenant Clermont that when Mr. Delorme had explained to him in French and for what purpose he had written the letter, he should let him go home. As he was leaving, Lieutenant Kenney turned to Mr. Delorme and said, with his riding crop in his right hand and shaking it in front of Mr. Delorme: "If a fire occurs in this town to-night, you will be responsible if the firemen do not come." Then Mr. Delorme replied: "What is it putting that crop in my face?" in exclamation.

13. Question. Had the lieutenant touched Mr. Delorme with it?

Answer. Not that I know of. Then Lieutenant Kenney replied in Creole: "Listen, if a fire occurs here in the town to-night, and if it does not come, you alone will be responsible." Mr. Delorme caught the crop and held it, while Lieutenant Kenney with his left hand pushed one side against his neck, and pulled his crop away from him with his right hand, and walked away.

14. Question. Was Mr. Delorme affected in any way by that?

Answer. Not in the least. He had not received a blow at all. He went out in anger and began cursing the lieutenant and calling him a scoundrel. Then Lieutenant Kenney turned to me and told me to lock him up the following morning, when the matter would be settled. As Mr. Delorme was going down the stairs, he said that if Lieutenant Kenney were a commander or in the gendarmerie he would like to go outside and settle the matter with him personally. I then took Mr. Delorme to the prison.

15. Question. Who accompanied you to the prison besides Delorme?

Answer. Nobody, except three civilians, who followed us at a distance. They claimed that they were friends of Mr. Delorme.

16. Question. As far as you know, had Lieutenant Kenney been drinking?

Answer. I do not know, but he did not seem to have been.

17. Question. Do you think Mr. Delorme had been drinking?

not know, but from the way he talked with such an air of which was very droll, one might easily think so.

answer to that is very easy to give. There are two political parties at the present time—the Partie Nationale, composed usually of the Partie Libérale, composed usually of mulattoes. Mr. Kenney is the head of the Partie Libérale, and, naturally, the Sendral and a few others belonging to that party consider it a crime on the part of that party.

THIRD DAY.

HEADQUARTERS, DISTRICT OF AUX CAYES, HAITI,

Thursday, December 1, 1921.

At 10 a. m.

The members and the parties to the investigation.

The proceedings of the second day of the investigation were read and

DELERME, a witness called by the board, entered and was duly

by the BOARD:

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

John V. Delorme, a lawyer of Aux Cayes.

Are you connected with the firemen of Aux Cayes, and if so, in as the commandant of the firemen's company at Aux Cayes.

Do you know Lieutenant Kenney?

I became acquainted with him on November 19.

Did he come under your observation on the evening of November 19? Describe the circumstances?

So that I will have to begin further back. The volunteer firemen were organized in 1885. They are not paid, and almost all of them have commercial concerns in the town. On November 19 we decided to have a drill. We gathered at the station at about 5.30 p. m. I had started out the pumps, as some of them were not in good working order. At 6.30 we were at Mr. Gerdes's hotel, Mr. Gerdes being the proprietor of the company. They were practicing on the bugles when the order came with an order from Lieutenant Kenney telling us to Did he order the drill stopped or simply the bugles?

He said to stop the bugles, which must mean of course the drill, as given by the bugle signals.

What were the firemen doing when the order came to stop the those who were not playing them were listening to the ones who Were any of them drinking?

They did that later after the order came.

How was the firemen's company organized?

It is purely voluntary with the consent of the people. The people had about $1,000 actual cash already toward the purchase of a pump. The commune will give the remainder of about $1,200.

When you received the order to stop blowing the bugles did you Answer. We stopped immediately. I sent the instructor, Mr. Germain, Lieutenant Kenney that the bugles were indispensable.

10. Question. Did you later see the lieutenant?

Answer. Yes; having received an unfavorable reply I had them march down to where the lieutenant was at Hotel Ferrandini. They refused to listen to me, saying that it was not the hour for officers. The firemen returned to their station. There the firemen wrote: Lieutenant Kenney announcing that since he had prevented us to drill the company was necessarily dissolved.

11. Question. Did you people consider that as being just to the patrons of your organization?

Answer. We had dissolved the company until such a time as we were permitted to renew the drills.

12. Question. Did you say that in your letter?

Answer. Yes.

13. Question. Did you ever retract that letter?

Answer. No; the Commissaire du Gouvernement and the Magistrate the letter to me from Lieutenant Kenney the next day.

14. Question. Tell what further dealings you had with Lieutenant Kenney.

Answer. At about midnight some one knocked at my door and when I found Lieutenant Clermont and First Sergeant Liauteaud there, corner near by, were 10 gendarmes; I had a saddled horse. I was. Lieutenant Kenney wanted to see me at the bureau gendarmier. Entering the door of his office, I saw him seated at his desk. He told me that all Haitians were poorly raised. I replied that there were Americans who were well raised, but that he himself was too ignorant to perform police duty for the Haitian people. He told me that I was a liar and I replied that he was more so than I.

15. Question. Are you sure he can speak the language well enough to tell you all that?

Answer. He told me so in Cerole.

16. Question. How long had you been in the room when this occurred?

Answer. I had just entered.

17. Question. How could the lieutenant ever thought that, not having seen you before? Did not something else lead up to all that?

Answer. When I first entered the room he asked me if I was the captain of the firemen's company, and I replied "Yes." He replied, "What do you say 'Yes, sir,' when you answer a question asked by the commander?" He then told me that if a fire should occur that night I was responsible. I answered that if my countrymen should lose by such a fire, would his, as all the insurance on the buildings here was from American companies. He then invited me to withdraw my letter and reform the company. I said I would take back my letter with pleasure—that I would reform the company, but on the condition that he give us the liberty to conduct our drills. He told me that after the fire at Bridault's some of the firemen went to Gerdes's hotel to drink, to which I replied that such a thing was expected after one was hot and had been perspiring, and wet from the rain of the pumps, that they had gone there at my invitation to take such a drink, this had always been the custom after drills. He asked me who had started the fire at Bridault's to which I replied that the town firemen had started the fire, with their pumps. He then called up four gendarmes and asked them who had put out the fire at Bridault's and they all replied that they had put it out. He then tried to have Lieutenant Clermont say that after 8 o'clock when he had ordered the bugles stopped, but he answered him that it was at 6.30. He asked me about ten times why he had stopped the fire at Bridault's to which I answered each time that it was the "Pompier" or the town firemen. Mr. Cardoza had translated the answers to his questions. Then he told me that I was a liar. I replied that it had not been his habit to lie he would not be calling me one. From that time he refused to answer any more questions. He then talked about a half hour with his interpreter, finally telling me that he was going to lock me up.

18. Question. In what words did he tell you that?

Answer. He said that he would lock me up if I did not take back my letter. I again told him that I would take it back if he would take back his letter. He said that I had no fear of the prison. He then threatened me with death but I replied that as I had committed no bad act I had no fear of the send me to Port au Prince for trial, to which I replied that glad for there I could find the senatorial committee. Then he approached me with a riding crop in his hand. He shook my face saying "Investigation" and some words in English I did not understand. I pushed him back with my hand. He left me the door. Later coming back to where I was and talking again he struck me in the face with the whip. I then returned the whip, by bending it back upon him, as he had been holding

by the BOARD:

Continue your testimony.

He had hit me in the face he exclaimed "Ou frappez-moi?" I—"Yes, as you have hit me first."

Where was the crop then?

Lieutenant Kenney had hold of it in his left hand and I had my right. He then struck me on the neck with the flat of his hand and the whip away from me. I was stunned for a moment, first sergeant. I told Lieutenant Kenney he was a coward to have taken advantage of me—he was armed and I was not—that I was in the United States Marine Corps, the Atlantic Fleet, and I was to handle me with. He told me that I was against the law which I replied that in a journal that I had published here I had said so. I then told him of the times when I had been on the Hill on his inspection trips, that I had been against the law on account of the corvée. In going downstairs on my way I told Lieutenant Kenney that if he were a civilian I would go out on him and regulate the difficulty personally man to man. In going below I met three friends of mine who wished to accompany me. At the prison, which I entered at 3 a. m., I was put in between two cells each of which had a "fool" in it. Consequence was unbearable, and I did not sleep. I was offered a bed, to remain until morning in a chair. I stated in my letter to you that the cell was filthy and infested. That was a mistake, as they were washed out daily and were very clean. Consequently I retract that statement. I have nothing to say against the prison. At 4 p. m. the prefect came to me with the letter from Lieutenant Kenney the evening before, saying that I should accompany him. The prefect and the magistrate told me that they would like to see me at his home, but I refused to go. I accepted company in case the lieutenant would recall his order about me. They assured me that the lieutenant would do that all right. Why did you refuse to see the lieutenant at his home?

Because he had hit me.

When were you released?

Evening at 7 o'clock. The next morning I was told by Mr. Lieutenant was still opposed to blowing the bugles after dark, effect and the magistrate that I still found the same difficulty with the reorganization of the firemen's company. Then I went out and saw General MacDougal, who assured me that he would protect the firemen's company would be protected in the future. Then I joined the company.

Do you know whether or not Lieutenant Kenney had been in the prison on November 19?

It is possible he had been; he acted like it, although I had never seen him before. Some one told me he had been in the Cafe Intermediaire that day.

After General MacDougal assured you that the firemen's company would be protected, etc., why did you go before the senatorial committee to make a complaint again?

Answer. I went to complain about Lieutenant Kenney and to prevent the firemen's company. I would just as readily tell President H. or Mr. Hughes the same thing had I the opportunity. I am not against occupation at all, but I am against those officers who do badly and against the Haitians, the only report I attempted to make against Lieutenant Kenney other than the one affair. I did not tell of the time he danced with some ordinary women at a "tombau" dance in town here once.

26. Question. Tell us about that.

Answer. I do not remember when it was exactly, but I heard about it as far as the fire at Bridault's is concerned the firemen and not the people put it out.

27. Question. Now, since this whole affair is over with what is your frank, and candid opinion of it all?

Answer. It was an unfortunate affair, more of a misunderstanding than anything else on the part of the company as well as the lieutenant, perhaps.

28. Question. How could the lieutenant have misunderstood; he had an interpreter?

Answer. There is the point. Mr. Cardoza is a bad little character, headed, and a trouble maker, who is not one of the firemen at all. I think he has taken advantage of this occasion to direct the lieutenant against us.

29. Question. Going back to the matter of the letter you sent to Lieutenant Kenney from the firemen, were you not the instigator of it?

Answer. No; it was the company who wrote that. I was not responsible.

Neither of the parties to the investigation desired to further question the witness; he verified his testimony and withdrew.

(The board then, at 1 p. m., adjourned until to-morrow, Friday.)

FOURTH DAY.

HEADQUARTERS, DISTRICT OF AUX CAYES, HAITI Friday, December 2.

The board met at 10 a. m.

Present: All the members and the parties to the investigation.

The record of proceedings of yesterday (the third day of the investigation) was read and approved.

Mr. RICHARD CARDOZA, a former witness, was recalled by the board; he warned that his former oath was still binding.

Examined by the BOARD:

1. Question. On the evening of November 19 were you acting as interpreter for Lieutenant Kenney?

Answer. Yes; at his request.

2. Question. Do you happen to remember whether or not Lieutenant Kenney said anything to Mr. Delorme as to who had really been responsible for the Bridault fire?

Answer. I remember that having been mentioned three or four times.

3. Question. What remarks did Lieutenant Kenney make about the Haitian people in general?

Answer. None that I know of, and I was there all the time.

4. Question. Was Mr. Delorme dazed very much from the cuff he had received from Lieutenant Kenney?

Answer. No; on the contrary, he was more excited and livelier than usual.

5. Question. Do you know anything about where Lieutenant Kenney spent that afternoon?

Answer. No; not before 3 o'clock, when he left in a car going toward the town. I do not remember the time exactly now. He returned about 6 o'clock in the evening. (Neither of the parties to the investigation desired to further examine the witness; he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

Second Lieutenant HENRI CLERMONT, a former witness, was recalled; he defended and warned that his oath was still binding.

Examined by the BOARD:

1. Question. When you went with the first sergeant to Mr. Delorme on the evening of November 19, were any other gendarmes there?

her gendarmes were there when we arrived; as we were leaving town patrol and one on liberty were standing on the corner king on.

during the discussion between Lieutenant Kenney and Mr. recall how often Lieutenant Kenney asked Mr. Delorme who fault fire?

not exactly, but it seems that it was three times he mentioned was disposed to argue.

parties to the investigation desired to further examine this tied his testimony and withdrew.)

BRIDAULT, a witness called by the defendant, entered and was

by the BOARD:

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

I Bridault, representative of Roberts-Dutton Co.

Were you present at a fire recently that the gendarmes helped if so state the circumstances?

I was present at the fire on November 10 when my place of e. I was at my residence at the time it began, but I soon arrived. When I got there the fire was well under control. The formed a bucket line from a well near there, and with the help of the firemen, it had almost been put out.

What part did the town firemen take in this case?

I arrived too late to be of much assistance, as the gendarmes were in charge. Lieutenant Kenney was there in charge, keeping those no bucket, etc. The presence of the gendarmes also prevented the firemen from doing more. I wanted to give them a present of two hams and six for what they had done but Lieutenant Kenney objected, saying too much already.

What did the firemen do after the fire was over?

Some of them blew their bugles promiscuously almost all night. I was not directly in that respect.

parties to the investigation desired to further examine this tied his testimony and withdrew.)

FERRER, a witness called by the board, entered and was duly

by the BOARD:

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

Line Ferrer, Spanish consul at Aux Cayes.

Where were you on November 19, 1921?

I was in Aux Cayes.

Did you come into contact with Lieutenant Kenney on that date? At 2 a. m. on the following morning, Mr. Gerdes, my brother-in-law, called and told me that he was very sick. So I got up and went to the house of the two Sendral brothers there also. He said he had been with Lieutenant Kenney. Lieutenant Clermont was there getting a report. After awhile later I decided to take my family and go to the bureau also, as I had heard that Mr. Delorme was there. I overheard part of a very lively argument on the inside, so I went to the porch of the store opposite the bureau. I heard a noise that sounded like a slap, which seemed to come from that direction. I did not go in; then I heard the voice of Mr. Delorme saying, "I have hit me, coward," which words he repeated at least a dozen times. I followed by the phrase, "because you are armed and have the right to defend yourself." Then he came down stairs with the first sergeant on his way to the prison. I went up to him and told him to quit such scandal, as he still was in the street crying. I told him to go to the prison peacefully. I went out as the prison door in company with the Sendral brothers, and returned home. I know nothing about the affair beyond that. The parties to the investigation desired to further examine this tied his testimony and withdrew.)

LEON, the commissaire du gouvernement, a witness called by the board, entered and was duly sworn.

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

Cour Leon, commissaire du gouvernement, Aux Cayes.

2. Question. Where were you November 19 and 20?

Answer. At Aux Cayes.

3. Question. Are you acquainted with Lieutenant Kenney of the merie?

Answer. Yes; I am well acquainted with him.

4. Do you know anything about the affair he had with Mr. Delorme November 19; and if so, state what you know about it.

Answer. I can not state anything as to what happened on that date, the two, but I can regarding the events of the following day. At about Sunday Mr. Philippe Hall came to my house and told me of Mr. Delorme's arrest, that he had been in jail during the night, and he asked me if I could not see Lieutenant Kenney and obtain his release. I went to Lieutenant Kenney's house, accompanied by the prefet and the magistrat. When Lieutenant Kenney was still asleep we did not bother him until that afternoon. We asked Lieutenant Kenney to release him, to which he gladly assented. So I sent for Mr. Delorme to come up to Lieutenant Kenney's house to tell him that the lieutenant did not have anything against him, that everything could be well settled and explained there. He repeatedly refused my offer, so we made out a copy of the letter that Mr. Delorme had written before, and returned Mr. Delorme's letter to him, the minute he was released. The lieutenant was very kind and reasonable about the matter.

5. Question. Do you know Mr. Delorme well?

Answer. Yes; I have known him for many years. He is a [hot-headed] man, always trying to raise difficulty, praising or criticizing a thing, according to his own interests in the matter. He is the kind of man who wants to be the head man in everything, but everybody knows him and considers him accordingly. He is impulsive. Nobody pays any attention to his actions.

6. Question. How has Lieutenant Kenney conducted himself while at Aux Cayes, judging from what you actually know?

Answer. For my part I can truly state that he has tried his best to do duty and do something for the city, but the people do not seem to like him; they are afraid of his regularity and his strict observance of order. I must compliment him for trying to cooperate with me.

7. Question. How has he treated the people in general?

Answer. So far as I know he has never harmed or wronged anybody.

8. Question. Did you see the letter Mr. Delorme wrote Lieutenant Kenney and if so what is your opinion of it?

Answer. I have read the letter, and I told Mr. Delorme that he should never have sent it.

9. Question. Did you make a proces verbal of Mr. Delorme's arrest and imprisonment, as he stated you did, when he was testifying before the committee?

Answer. No; I did nothing of the kind.

(Neither of the parties to the investigation desired to further examine the witness; he verified his testimony and withdrew.)

Mr. STEPHANE FOUGERE, a witness called by the board, entered and was sworn.

Examined by the BOARD:

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

Answer. Stephane Fougere, magistrat du communal, Aux Cayes.

2. Question. Where were you on November 20?

Answer. Here in Aux Cayes.

3. Question. Did you see Lieutenant Kenney on that date? And if so, under what circumstances?

Answer. On that date early in the morning Mr. Sicard came to my house and informed me that Mr. Delorme had been arrested the night before by Lieutenant Kenney. He asked me if I wouldn't see Lieutenant Kenney to obtain his release. Later Mr. Philippe Hall, president of the firemen company, Ernest Douyon, president of the lawyers' club, came to the communal office and formed me as to the imprisonment of Delorme, and made the same request. I went at 8 a. m. to see Lieutenant Kenney, but as he was still asleep I did not return until the afternoon. By that time our group had increased, the prefet and the commissaire du gouvernement. After conferring with Lieutenant Kenney we obtained Delorme's release. Then Mr. Delorme, in explanation, said that he had been hit by the lieutenant, which the lieutenant true.

Did it seem to you that the firemen had acted wisely by dissolving because Lieutenant Kenney had stopped them from blowing at 6.30 p. m.?

They did not act wisely at all. In my opinion Mr. Delorme is not the man he has. He is a little crazy at times and disposed to cause trouble to the authorities by taking great exception to very small things. At first he permitted certain of his men to blow their bugles over the town for the greater part of the night, keeping the town awake. When I asked him why he did it, he tried to tell me that it was for the purpose of their exercises; which is, of course, untrue. Do you think Lieutenant Kenney made a mistake by confining the firemen?

I do not. Lieutenant Kenney seems to have done it simply to cause disorder on the part of Delorme.

He then called the parties to the investigation desired to further examine this and then he withdrew his testimony and withdrew.)

PRESSOIR, a witness called by the board, entered and was duly sworn.

Interrogated by the BOARD:

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

I am Ebe Pressoir, the prefet at Aux Cayes.

Do you know Lieutenant Kenney?

Did he come under your observation on November 20? And if so, under what circumstances?

On the arrest of Mr. Delorme, knowing that the town was more or less in a state of confusion, I went in company with the other officials to see Lieutenant Kenney out why he had been arrested, and in case his offense had not been such as to obtain his release, if possible. I was received splendidly by him, who showed the letter Mr. Delorme had written, and asked me to sign it. I replied that I saw nothing about the letter itself that should cause trouble, and that if he would release Mr. Delorme he would be doing so to great favor. Lieutenant Kenney agreed very willingly to this, and at 6.30 p. m. Mr. Delorme was released.

Do you think the company acted wisely by writing that letter?

Apparently wrote the letter in a moment of heat. They had no other motive for the company for what had occurred.

What is your opinion of Mr. Delorme?

He is hot-headed at times, always an enemy to the occupation, and takes advantage of small mistakes to exaggerate and advertise them to the public, connected in any way with the Government.

He then called the parties to the investigation desired to further examine this and then he withdrew his testimony and withdrew.)

SENDRAL, a witness called by the board, entered and was duly sworn.

Interrogated by the BOARD:

What is your name, residence, and present occupation?

I am Henri Sendral; a merchant in Aux Cayes.

Where were you on November 19?

Aux Cayes.

Did you see Lieutenant Kenney on that date; and, if so, state the circumstances, telling what you actually saw and heard.

That afternoon, at about 5 o'clock, the volunteer firemen of Aux Cayes held drill. At about 6.30 Mr. Delorme, our commandant, led up to the town. As we were going out to assemble there was a moment when it was said that Lieutenant Kenney had sent word to stop the drill. We then decided to go in a body to see the lieutenant. When we got there he told our commandant that that was not the time for a drill, that he would see him at his office at 9 the following day. When we returned to the fire station a letter was addressed to me and I took it myself to the bureau to have it delivered to him.

In the night I was awakened by a servant from Mr. Gerdes saying that Mr. Gerdes, the instructor of the firemen, was sick; that Lieutenant Kenney had sent to arrest him. My brother and I immediately went home and found that he was too sick to come down to the bureau. Lieutenant Clermont, Mr. Ferrer, and some others were there. My brother and myself left the hotel at about 2.30 a. m. and passed by the gendarmerie. In passing we overheard a violent argument between Lieutenant Kenney and Mr. Delorme. I saw Lieutenant Kenney raise his hand but I could not go down, but that was immediately followed by a slap, very loud, as Delorme said in a loud voice that he was a coward to have struck a man who was not armed like himself, inviting the lieutenant to go down with him to settle the insult man to man. It is needless to say that the lieutenant turned himself back. He then sent Mr. Delorme to the prison in the hands of the gendarme. The following morning myself and Mr. Philippe Hall, Ernest [?], and some others took the necessary steps to have him released. I saw Delorme at 7 p. m., accompanied by the authorities of the town, as he was leaving the prison. Lieutenant Kenney is not the man for Aux Cayes, a peaceful and quiet town. All his American predecessors who have served here can say so. I wish to say also in closing that as a foreigner, impartial and nonpartisan, the same thing.

4. Question. What was your motive in going before the senatorial committee?

Answer. I did not go to Port au Prince for that purpose. I went there on business, but while there I was called before the committee at the suggestion of Mr. Delorme to confirm certain of his statements.

(Neither of the parties to the investigation desired to further question the witness. He verified his testimony and withdrew.)

Acting First Lieut. CHARLES E. KENNEY, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, the doctor requested that he be sworn as a witness. His request was granted, and he duly sworn, having been informed by the board that his examination was governed by the same rules as govern the examination of an accused who stands at his own request in trial by court-martial.

Examined by the BOARD:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Charles E. Kenney, acting first lieutenant, gendarmerie.

2. Question. Where were you on November 19?

Answer. At Aux Cayes.

3. Question. State briefly all you did on that date which has any reference to Mr. Delorme and the firemen's company.

Answer. I was ordered by Maj. W. G. Emory, G. d'H., to accompany him about 5 p. m. on a trip of inspection to Cavaillon, St. Louis du Sud, and Aux Cayes. At the foot of Morne St. George the car broke down. I walked with the foreman to St. Louis du Sud to get animals. I returned to Morne St. George with the animals, four of them, finding Major Emory was to leave then for Port au Prince in a car from Aux Cayes. The machine was repaired there, and I accompanied Lieutenant Schneider, Doctor White, and myself got into the car and started for Aux Cayes, arriving there at 6 p. m. At 6.30 p. m. I heard the fire bugles sounding and left the house to investigate, finding that the firemen were in the hands of the gendarme d'Haiti. I told Lieutenant Clermont to go to the hotel and have the firemen stopped, as the hotel adjoins the hospital, and also because there were many people in the hotel itself, Lieutenant Sullivan and one baby. I was on the way to walk outside the Hotel International when Mr. Gerdes came to me from the firemen's company, which had marched in a body from the Hotel d'Haiti to the Hotel International, and asked me if Mr. Delorme could talk with me regarding the order I had just issued regarding the bugles. As I already knew that Mr. Delorme was vice president of the Union Patriotique here and that all the firemen had been drinking before coming down, I replied that I never discussed business matters on the street; that Mr. Delorme could see me any time at my office at the caserne daily. Mr. Gerdes saluted and returned to the caserne. I received a letter late at night, which I did not open at first, as I was busy writing out a report of the inspection trip. I later opened it and found it was from Mr. Delorme, the commandant of the fire department, telling me that the company had disbanded, and that I would be responsible for the city in case of fire. I sent for Mr. Cardoza and told him I would like for him to accompany me to the bureau, as I was going to have to talk with some people. I went to the bureau and the first sergeant to get Mr. Delorme and Mr. Gerdes. Mr. Delorme came at 2 a. m., and I talked with him about the letter, telling pany was acting hastily and asking him if there was any reason other than the excuse given in the letter. I mentioned the supporting the fire company and the large contributions that had been made from them for the purchase of a steam pump. I did my best to see the matter in a reasonable light, but he talked drunkenly, his answers, finally refusing to talk at all. Finally I tried to use to him and told Lieutenant Clermont that when Mr. Delorme had been told him that he was to let him go home, as I had said sleep. As I started to leave the office Mr. Delorme made the gendarmes were no good. I told him to stop and think; that I saw one gendarme he was not to think that he did not represent the army, and 105,000,000 people. Mr. Delorme was standing in front of me talking. I was tapping the palm of my left hand with a riding crop to emphasize my remarks. Mr. Delorme grabbed the crop with his hands, and remove it from his grasp I was obliged to jerk the crop away. Mr. Delorme; and as seemed that the man was either under the influence of alcohol or mentally deranged, I thought that for the safety of the town and the possibility of fires occurring during the remainder of the night, I better confine him for safe-keeping, which I did. The following morning the magistrat du communal, and the commissaire du gouvernement came and asked me to pardon and release him as he was hot-headed and wished to retract his letter. I returned the letter to the magistrat after I had had a copy made and certified correct and the commissaire du gouvernement, at the same time sending the letter to the prison.

Had you been drinking on that day?

Did Mr. Delorme call you a coward, and invite you to fight outside?

No; he did, but, of course, I paid no attention to that.

Just why did you confine Mr. Delorme?

Coming from his actions and his talk, I thought the welfare of the town indeed that he be confined. He is a man of very bad history and is against the occupation and the Government. In our files are reports against him showing that he has given trouble to practically every officer that has served here. He is the vice president of the league here, and always ready to misconstrue and exaggerate what he can, if he can make use of it in his attacks on the occupation. Had you been drinking on the evening of November 5 at the concert?

I had not.

Why did you go there?

As had been told by Lieutenant Friedmann that the concert was of a patriotic nature, and as we were told at that time to look out for George Sylvain, and as I knew that Jehan Ryko was a member of the union at Port au Prince, I felt that I should go. I had only a few weeks, and had not yet gotten well enough acquainted with the town and people about the town to realize any differently.

Have you ever had any altercations with Lieutenant Sullivan?

No; never; we have always gotten along splendidly.

The parties to the investigation desired to further examine this defendant and resumed his seat as defendant.

When the examination was finished, all parties thereto withdrawing.

The board, the defendant, nor any of the parties to the investigation had any more witnesses.

After having thoroughly investigated all the facts and circumstances of the allegations contained in the precept, and having considered the evidence adduced, finds as follows:

FINDING OF FACTS.

The defendant did not strike Mr. Joseph V. Delorme as alleged; that he did not order the firemen's drills stopped as alleged; that the defendant was not intoxicated as alleged; that the defendant did not say that the gendarmes were "poorly raised" as stated in the testimony of the commandant; only 2 gendarmes were near by when Lieut. H. Clermont entered the house of Mr. Delorme, instead of 10, as alleged; that the firemen the bugles after the fire, on the night of November 5, blew them to excess an unnecessary hour, thereby creating disorder and necessitating a re-that practice.

OPINION.

In view of the facts established and of the attending circumstances, the manner and bearing of the various witnesses, and of the testimony in Aux Cayes of both the defendant and the complainant, the court is of the following opinion: That the defendant is temperamentally incapable of performing the duties of a district commander; that the conduct of the defendant has not been such as would discredit the uniform; that the defendant is unable to exercise good judgment in his dealings with the complainant; that the defendant has on certain occasions been undiplomatic and rude to the American point of view as well as the Haitian point of view; that the defendant and his firemen had once been warned as to the uncalled-for blowing of horns and that he purposely sought an opportunity to so involve and consequently discredit the uniform of the defendant as to eventually necessitate his withdrawal from Aux Cayes; that the complainant, Mr. Delorme, is of unsound mind, as shown by his contradictory statements.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

After maturely deliberating upon the facts established and the derived therefrom, the board recommends the following: That the defendant be transferred from his present station, but not before January 1, 1902, the defendant be assigned to duty under the direct control of a commissioned officer, and that a commissioned officer of experience be assigned to district commander at Aux Cayes.

VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT of AUX CAYES, November 19

From: The Commandant and the Company of Volunteers.

To: The District Commander Aux Cayes.

The rules of the volunteer fire company of this town provide that we be held twice a month at 4:30 p. m. on Saturday. In the present case, you know, it becomes dark early, and nearly all the firemen are married, and can not leave their places of business except from 4 to 5 o'clock. I have just given you orders to stop the drill. This is a hardship that even the military authorities in the most turbulent times never thought to be laid upon the fire department, for as you know well that a fire department that is not drilled can not be useful in case of fire. In this supposition of a fire at night, if no firemen are allowed to blow bugles, it would be dangerous for them to be in the streets. Consequently, you are advised to inform me that you have retracted your verbal orders, the fire company of Aux Cayes is dissolved, and we leave at your charge all responsibilities in case of fire. We are not doing anything wrong, and if we have a need of 15 days it is only for a purpose that all civilized men must agree to. Our predecessors here, we must say, have always encouraged and taken pleasure upon the drill of the fire department.

Accept, Mr. District Commander, our respectful greetings.

Case No. 42340, charge 1, assaulting with a deadly weapon and wounding another person.

Specification: In that a private, United States Marine Corps, at Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, did, on or about December 9, 1918, willfully and maliciously, and without justifiable cause, assault a Haitian citizen.

Case 45401, charge, assault.

Specification: In that a private, United States Marine Corps, at Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, did make an assault upon a citizen of the Republic of Haiti, and did then and there strike, beat, and otherwise ill-treat said citizen.

Case 46465, charge 2, assault, in that a private, United States Marine Corps, at Bahon, Republic of Haiti, did, on or about September 21, 1919, willfully and maliciously, and without justifiable cause, assault a citizen of the Republic of Haiti.

Charge 3, rape, in that a private, United States Marine Corps, did, on or about September 21, 1919, willfully and maliciously, and without justifiable cause, assault a citizen of the Republic of Haiti.

Case No. 44413, charge, assault with intent to commit rape, in that a private, United States Marine Corps, did, on or about April 21, 1919, in the town of Saut d'Eau, Republic of Haiti, feloniously, forcibly, and against her person, assault a native girl about 9 years of age, with intent to commit the crime of rape upon her.

Case 44690, charge, conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline in that a private, United States Marine Corps, serving, on July 28, 1915, in regular detail, as a guard over certain native prisoners, did, on the date said, willfully, maliciously, and without justifiable cause, maltreat, by means of his rifle or other blunt instrument, three of said prisoners who were entrusted to his care, thereby inflicting such injuries that the said prisoners aforesaid were placed on the sick list by the medical officer.

Case 31534, charge 2, conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline in that a private, United States Marine Corps, did, on or about the 19th of October, 1915, forcibly enter the home of a resident of Jacmel, Haiti, and there, willfully, maliciously, and without justifiable cause, break and damage five chairs to the extent that said chairs were made unfit for use.

The above-noted cases and offenses, representing convictions of the accused persons by general court-martial and approval by proper authority, are presented as sufficient evidence that the alleged offenses have been committed against the citizens of Haiti, or damage or destruction of their property by persons in the United States naval service since the 28th of July, 1915.

Examined by the Court:

3. Question. How many cases have you cited?

Answer. Twenty-seven cases.

4. Question. Have you any record of cases in which charges of a similar nature have been made, but have been investigated by the proper court and found unfounded?

Answer. The volumes in question contain the records of all trials by general court-martial on naval personnel in Haiti since the date in question and contain about 25 additional cases where offenses were alleged but were not proven, and where the accused was acquitted by the court; and a few cases where conviction was had but the findings and sentences were set aside by the department owing to errors in the prosecution of the case.

Neither the court nor the judge advocate had any further questions to ask this witness, and the witness then resumed his seat as judge advocate.

The court was cleared.

The court was reopened, and at 3.30 p. m. adjourned until 10 a. m. tomorrow.

SIXTH DAY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT
Washington, D. C., October 27, 1919.

The court met at 10 a. m.

Present: All the members and the judge advocate.

The record of the proceedings of yesterday (the fifth day) was read and proved.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE BARNETT, a witness called by the judge advocate, appeared and was duly sworn:

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. George Barnett, brigadier general, United States Marine Corps, under orders to command the Department of the Pacific, with headquarters at San Francisco, Calif.

2. Question. Were you major-general commandant of the Marine Corps from the 28th of July, 1915; and if so, for how long thereafter?

Answer. I was appointed commandant of the Marine Corps February 1, 1914; served until 1918, and was reappointed and served until June 30, 1919.

3. Question. I hand you a document, Exhibit 1 in this case, and ask you to identify it?

Answer. I do, as a copy of a report that I made to the Secretary of the Navy, October 11, 1920.

4. Question. In that report, there was included a copy of a letter from you to Colonel Russell, under date of December 24, 1919. Do you recall that?

Answer. That is a letter signed by General Haines.

5. Question. To Colonel Russell?

numbers were mentioned. They referred particularly—those two cases—the unlawful killing of two natives, and, as will be shown by this statement that I have referred to by Lieutenant Spear, counsel for Private Johnson—stated, among other things, that he had been present when others were unlawfully, and that was a prime factor in inducing me to write that letter. And I wish to say here in writing that letter I marked it "Personal and confidential," because of two reasons. The first reason was that only a few before, on September 27, I had written a strictly official letter covering the cases, but between that and October 2 I read both cases again and I was so impressed with the necessity for prompt and effective action that I deemed it advisable to write to Colonel Russell, the major general commander, and let him know that I was deeply interested in the cases, not only officially as commandant of the Marine Corps but personally. My letter was marked "Personal and confidential" for another reason, too. I did not want it to be public property in Colonel Russell's office. I put it of that letter on file at the headquarters, where it was found in less than three minutes, when it was wanted.

I wish to say here that in writing that letter I was writing to express my personal feelings, as those two cases had appealed to me, and the words I used and the conclusions I reached were from the effect that those two cases produced on my mind, and I felt I could not do too much toward clearing the matter, even if there were exceedingly few unlawful killings. But the words "indiscriminate killing," as I have since stated, I did not mean "miscellaneous." There are other equally good meanings of "indiscriminate," the best one is, I think, "without judgment." I did not mean "promiscuous," because I was referring particularly to those two cases filed by the court-martial and which occurred, as I remember now, in and about the district of Hinche.

Those two cases passed over my desk, and I read them very carefully on September 27, 1919. It was manifest to all that the commandant of the Marine Corps had not time to read all court-martial cases that came before him, but attached to the office of major general commandant is the adjutant-general's department, General Haines in charge, and in his office there is a disciplinary section—at that time and at present in charge of Col. Hay Lay—whose duty it is to read carefully all court-martial cases that are sent before the major general commandant. If the case presents no unusual conditions or circumstances it is taken by Colonel Lay to General Haines, adjutant-general, who prepares a formal indorsement for the signature of the major general commandant; but if there are unusual circumstances, as there were in those cases, Colonel Lay's duty is to bring it to the attention of General Haines, as he did in this case, and General Haines would bring it to the commandant's attention, as he did in those cases.

I read those cases over very carefully and, as I expressed it in that letter, I was terribly shocked at what developed in those two cases. So instead of putting on the formal notation for indorsement and returning it to the judge advocate general, as I would do in an ordinary case, I just put on the statement that the major general commandant concurred in the recommendation of the judge advocate general.

In that connection I wish to say that when I first came here as commandant I deemed it my duty in a court-martial case to make remarks in my comments with reference to the conduct of a trial in a certain case—no connection with this case, but it is just to show what came afterwards. That indorsement went to the judge advocate general, and the indorsement came back to me that I had nothing whatever to do with the trial of the case or the evidence introduced; that my duties ceased when I had commented with reference to the disciplinary features involved in the sentence "adjudged by the court-martial."

This was taken to the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy wrote me—I have a copy of the letter here—which shows that he sent it to the judge advocate general. I have simply mentioned that to show the action that was taken in those cases.

I would like here to present to the court a copy of the letter from the Department, under date of the 19th of September, 1917, from the Secretary of the Navy to the major general commandant Marine Corps, on the subject of the jurisdiction of the major general commandant in commenting upon court-martial.

The COURT. I would like to ask what bearing this has on this matter?

The WITNESS. It has a bearing to show what action I took on those two cases. I am going to state that in a minute, and I think you will see it very clear.

tion of the case before the court, the court will take an adjournment at 10 o'clock a. m. on Monday, November 1.

(The court then, at 10.35 a. m., adjourned until 10 a. m. Monday, November 1, 1920.)

EIGHTH DAY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT
Washington, D. C., November 1

The board met at 10 a. m.

Present: All the members and the judge advocate.

The record of the proceedings of Thursday (the seventh day of the inquiry) was read and approved.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

The court was cleared.

The court was opened.

The president announced that in view of the fact that the judge advocate reported that he had no further testimony to bring before the court at present or in the immediate future in Washington, the court would adjourn to the Republic of Haiti for the purpose of conducting inquiry there.

The president further announced that he would address a letter to the governing authority, notifying him of the proposed movement of the court.

The court adjourned, to be reconvened at the call of the president.

NINTH DAY.

BOARD ROOM
Port au Prince, Haiti, November 1

The court met at 8.50 a. m.

Present: All the members and the judge advocate.

The record of the proceedings of the eighth day of the inquiry was read and approved.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

The judge advocate introduced Frank M. Williams as stenographer in relief of Alexander H. Galt.

The stenographer was duly sworn.

The judge advocate introduced Commander Robert L. Ghormley, United States Navy, as counsel to assist the judge advocate of the court. He came with authority from the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 2, 1920, file No. 28028-348.8.

The judge advocate announced that he was not ready to proceed with the taking of testimony, being engaged in preparatory work at this place.

The court then, at 9 o'clock a. m., adjourned until 10 a. m. to-morrow.

TENTH DAY.

BOARD ROOM
Port au Prince, Haiti, November 1

The court met at 10 a. m.

Present: All the members, the judge advocate, and counsel.

The record of the proceedings of yesterday (the ninth day of the inquiry) was read and approved.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

Maj. THOMAS C. TURNER, United States Marine Corps, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank and present station?

Answer. T. C. Turner, major, United States Marine Corps, First Marines, Haiti.

2. Question. On what date did you join the First Brigade, and what have you performed since?

Answer. October 1, 1919, I reported here. Since that I have been adjutant and chief of staff.

3. Question. According to the corrected report by General Barnett, Secretary of the Navy, there have been a total of 2,250 Haitians killed by marine forces in Haiti. These figures were compiled by General Barnett, those on file in the Navy Department, being reports from the commander in Haiti. Do the records of the office of the brigade adjutant show how this data was obtained?

Answer. None that I know of have been sent to headquarters of the United States Marine Corps as to the number of men killed in action in Haiti except the the troops of occupation and talk to the people in his section in an effort to bring them in. As far as killing them with arms in their possession concerned, that is not so. No man was ever killed, except perhaps in a few cases, and if that was discovered that man was tried and convicted. Sometimes they would surrender 400 at a time. In February of last year bands marched in from the Valley of the Orange, one 450 and the other with their chiefs, and surrendered to the gendarmes at Croix de la Chapelle, and then the bandits went to work right away for the sugar people.

16. Question. They were not confined then?

Answer. No; when a man surrendered he was given his bon inhaïr and we wanted them to go back to the fields and go to work in the country cultivated.

17. Question. Have any orders ever been issued from the headquarters requiring or authorizing the killings of the bandits or revolutionists, after they had surrendered, without trial?

Answer. Absolutely not. The orders have been issued from time to time cautioning the troops in the field not to maltreat in any way the prisoners. These orders were issued because it was alleged there had been a mistreatment of prisoners, and every effort was made and insisted on, and when a man disobeyed those orders, he was tried by a court-martial.

Examined by the Court:

18. Question. You stated that your records here show the number of encounters since the 1919 campaign, dating, as I understand it, from October 1, 1919. Answer. Yes, sir.

19. Question. But they do not contain the number of encounters prior to that date, since the occupation?

Answer. No, sir.

20. Question. How, then, did they get information or estimates as to the number of killed before that time?

Answer. When I came to the office I found some data that I compiled. In my opinion is not correct. It was taken out of radiograms and letters.

21. Question. And that is the information that was forwarded to the headquarters, and presumably that is the information on which they based their data as to the number of killed?

Answer. As far as I know; yes, sir; because I have never forwarded data to headquarters that I know of as to the number of killed or wounded, except some important encounter like the matter at Port au Prince.

22. Question. There have been no compilations, then, of the number of encounters with bandits since 1915?

Answer. Not that I know of.

23. Question. Is it possible to make such a compilation?

Answer. Yes, sir; but I doubt if it would be correct. It would be a great deal of work. It would necessitate going back to the radiograms since 1915 and sorting out those records—some of those old records in 1915, 1916, and 1917—in shape.

24. Question. Then, it is your personal idea that the vagueness of the records on which estimates were based accounts in your mind for the state are presumably exaggerations as to the number of men killed?

Answer. Yes, sir.

25. Question. You stated that the number of killed in encounters starting of the 1919 campaign, the number of encounters being 236, the number killed compared with the number surrendered was about 1 to 1?

Answer. Yes, sir.

26. Question. I understand you to say also previously to that that the number surrendered was 17,000?

Answer. Yes, sir; but that went back before the 1st of October, 1919. I look at my records. Since October 1, 1919, we have 7,608 surrendered.

27. Question. In that time how many were killed in action, according to your records?

Answer. One thousand one hundred and thirty-two.

28. Question. And that number corresponds with the 236 encounters?

Answer. Yes, sir; that includes killed.

29. Question. May I ask you to repeat the number killed in this campaign?

Answer. One thousand one hundred and thirty-two. The first two months of October and November, 1919—might be a little wrong, because that was before we insisted on the actual count.

That is what you consider the intensive campaign against the current since the occupation?

sir.

And that leaves, from General Barnett's estimate, a little over the four years preceding?

sir.

And you think that number is exaggerated?

sir.

To make this perfectly clear, the total number surrendered, the best records, is in the neighborhood of 17,000?

It is from the records we have now and what went on before—no date.

You stated that orders in regard to the treatment of prisoners at orders were issued containing warnings against any maltreat-

sir.

And that the reason for the issuance of such orders was to say reports or rumors?

Reports of alleged maltreatment of inhabitants, which were sent to Washington.

Can you give that date when these orders were issued?

The first was issued October 15, 1919, and the other one on the 1st of November, 1919, which is merely a modification of the October 15, 1919, order. The parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness (see previous page.)

Then, at 10.30 a. m., adjourned until 9.45 a. m. to-morrow, Thursday.

ELEVENTH DAY.

BOARD ROOM,

Port au Prince, Haiti, November 11, 1920.

Met at 9.45 a. m.

The members, the judge advocate, and counsel.

Reviewed the proceedings of yesterday (the tenth day of the inquiry) and approved.

The judge advocate read a modification of the precept, original prefixed,

The judge advocate introduced John Alfred Holly as interpreter, stating the reason why he was appointed as such. The interpreter was duly sworn.

Monsieur D'ARTIGUENAVE, President of the Republic of Haiti, having appeared as a witness before the court, was called by the judge advocate, read, and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE (through interpreter):

Have you ever had brought to your attention that practically no killing of Haitians by marines, or gendarmerie acting under orders, has occurred?

Witness, no. I have heard regrettable acts spoken of as having been committed at Hinche, at St. Marc, at Croix des Bouquets, at Grande Rivière, at Mirebalais, at Lascahobas, etc. To the reproach that I have for not having kept the Government informed of all that was going on, the answer, rightly or wrongly, has been that they are afraid that they might come in conflict with martial law. The victims, or rather the leaders, have never brought their grievances to me, because the leaders have given them to understand that there was not a Haitian chief —saying a few exceptions, such as are to be found in every country at the coming of the Americans. They were expecting liberty, respect for their persons and property; but the corvée, as it has been called, the advice and counsel of the Government, has given rise to which has led to the revolt of the cacos, hence certainly the misdeeds as possible in cases of repression.

Have other unjustifiable acts of violence of oppression against their property by persons in the naval service been brought to your attention? Have the accused have not been brought to trial by naval courts?

Answer. Not having had to report to the occupation any acts of repression, I had no interest to find out if any person engaged in the service who might be guilty of such acts had been tried by naval court.

3. Question. In case there should have been numerous cases of homicides or other unjustifiable acts of violence against Haitians or property by marines, have you means whereby such acts would have been reported to you?

Answer. My answers to the preceding questions show that I had no means of disposal to prove the existence of cases of homicide or violence that have been committed by marines. They have been accused by public rumor.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness, he withdrew.

The judge advocate announced: I have no further witnesses or evidence present to the court at this time and am unable to state when I will have witnesses to bring before the court. I request that the court adjourn at the call of the president.

The court then, at 10.30 a. m., adjourned to meet at the call of the president.

TWELFTH DAY

BOARD ROOM

Port au Prince, Haiti, November 17

The court met at 9 a. m., pursuant to the call of the president.

Present: All the members, the judge advocate, and counsel.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

The record of the proceedings of the eleventh day of the inquiry was read and approved.

Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker, United States Marine Corps, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. R. S. Hooker, lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps, attached to and serving with the gendarmerie of Haiti, Port au Prince, as assistant chief.

2. Question. What duty were you performing in January, 1920?

Answer. Assistant chief of the gendarmerie of Haiti, stationed in Port au Prince.

3. Question. What information can you give the court relative to the number of killed in the attack on Port au Prince by the cacos in January, 1920?

Answer. At daylight on the 15th of January, I gave orders for the gendarmes to go and pick up the dead or wounded that could be found in the streets. There were actually delivered at the hospital 17 wounded and 27 dead. Of these wounded, 5 died subsequently. On the 15th and 16th 49 prisoners were taken, and on the 17th 14 of these 14, 2 subsequently died from gunshot wounds.

These prisoners were interrogated, and on the 21st of January the total number of prisoners taken was 39 in all, the wounded 9, and the official report of the chief of the gendarmerie sent in, which was based on the number delivered to the hospital and subsequent reports from the outlying detachments, brought the total number of dead to 66. The extra 29 or 30 are from the only, and there may be inaccuracy as to two or three of that number. 37 mentioned above were actual dead in the streets of Port au Prince as reported by the medical officer after they were brought to the hospital.

By the Court:

4. Question. Please inform the court as to the circumstances under which these men, reported as dead, were killed, as concisely as possible.

Answer. Yes sir. About 4 o'clock in the morning I was notified—

5. Question. What date?

Answer. On January 15, 1920. I was notified by the brigade adjutant that a report had come to him that a large number of bandits were entering Port au Prince. Almost immediately afterwards from my house I heard much gun fire. Twelve marines had encountered them at the market place, which is the center of the business section of Port au Prince. I saw Lieutenant Colonel Clinton, and he continued with his marines in that direction. The gendarmes took everything from the main street eastward and by the scattered shots, but the main force of the attackers had been of the city limits.

rs' statements there were about 300 that actually left the i to make this attack on Port au Prince. They had about 70 ere joined by quite a number of Haitians in town, the number

The dead were scattered from the center of the town to the n, and I should judge most of the dead were through machine fire. There were one or two persons not in the attacking

d by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

Do you know of any occasion where any Haitian was unjusti- any person in the naval service?

sir; I do not.

Do you know of any case where any person in the naval service stifiable violence toward a Haitian, or unjustifiably destroyed

sir; I do not.

Didn't you tell General Butler at one time that you had seen erson in the naval service having unlawfully killed Haitians? awfully killed them?

Yes.

when I talked with General Butler—

Answer my question first—did you?

not remember telling him that, sir.

What did you tell him?

I remember, I told him that there were some three or four prison- o not know exactly yet whether they were prisoners. They were acos, as they were termed up there, that were killed close to the own of Hinche in the district of Hinche—and I also told him that at Lieutenant Lang, who was then serving in Hinche, shot the a machine gun; that the prisoner was running away. Whether ner or not, he was a Cacos, a Haitian, so they said. That is all telling him, sir.

. In relating those facts to the General, did you not so express e would believe the shootings had been unlawful or unjustifiable? practically everything I told him was hearsay. I was not prepared to make any sworn statement to General Butler. It all happened two years ago. He called me in there, and I had never given the matter much thought, and, in fact, I had never done so until the last couple of days, and I was not in a position to state the true facts to General Butler, and not, until the last few days—I could not swear that anyone killed that man, that it, any person did unjustifiable killing.

13. Question. Did you not explain to me, within the past few days, that you were ready to testify under oath that a Mr. Lang had taken a man out of the barracks and shot him at Hinche?

Answer. As I remember it, I did not say he was taken out of prison. I said Lieutenant Lang shot a person up there on the plaza in front of the gendarme barracks, which I can explain—

14. Question. Never mind explaining it. Did you not say that Mr. Lang told you he was going to shoot a prisoner, and afterwards a man was taken out of the prison and shot?

Answer. No, sir; I do not remember saying any such thing.

15. Question. Well, is not that the fact, that he told you that?

Answer. No, sir; it is not.

16. Question. How about former Lieutenant Seeger. What do you know about his shooting prisoners?

Answer. I could swear to nothing. I do not know anything. I could not swear to Lieutenant Seeger shooting anybody.

17. Question. Did he not tell you at one time that he was going to shoot some prisoners out and shoot them?

Answer. I do not remember his telling me such a thing, sir.

18. Question. What has happened to affect your memory since two or three days ago?

Answer. Nothing, sir. I—nothing, sir.

19. Question. Did you not tell me two or three days ago that Lieutenant Seeger told you at one time that he was going to shoot some prisoners?

Answer. I do not remember telling you that Lieutenant Seeger said he was going to shoot some prisoners, sir.

20. Question. Do you know Lieut. Julian André, of the gendarmes?

Answer. Yes, sir.

21. Question. Have you any knowledge of his having shot prisoners?

Answer. No, sir; I could not swear to his killing any prisoners.

22. Question. Do you know that he had any prisoners killed under his direction?

Answer. No, sir; I could not swear to any such statement.

23. Question. Did you ever see him shoot any Haitians?

Answer. No, sir; I can not swear to that.

24. Question. What do you mean—that you can not swear to it?

Answer. I mean as far as I—I do not remember of his killing any prisoners. After careful thought, I do not remember of his killing any prisoners.

25. Question. You have given this whole matter very careful thought, have you?

Answer. Yes, sir; in the last couple of days.

26. Question. But when you were around accusing these people you gave it much thought?

Answer. I do not know I was accusing them, sir.

27. Question. When you say that people performed these acts, do you call that accusing them?

Answer. No, sir; not until I swear to it.

28. Question. What you say not under oath you do not hold yourself responsible for?

Answer. In a case like that, when I had not given the thing due thought and consideration; but having given it due thought and consideration, I do not swear that I have seen any unjustifiable killings in Haiti.

The COURT. Was that word "justifiable" or "unjustifiable"?

The WITNESS. Unjustifiable.

29. Question. What do you understand by "unjustifiable killings"?

Answer. A killing that is not justifiable; a killing that a person could not be justified for by the laws of the country or by the occupation for so doing, but not in accordance with the laws of the country.

30. Question. Suppose a prisoner, a Cacos, captured in the field and refuses to give information about where his band is located: Would a commanding officer under whose charge he is be justified in having him sir; he would not. He would not be justified in doing anything he was tried.

1. You do not know his rate?

Answer. No, sir.

46. Question. You say you reported the matter to Captain Lavelle?

Answer. Yes, sir.

47. Question. Did he seem to be acquainted with what was going on?

Answer. Sir, I do not remember.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to question him and he withdrew.

Harris Lifschitz, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered the witness stand and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation?

Answer. Harris Lifschitz.

2. Question. Where is your residence?

Answer. San Luis Sud.

3. Question. In Haiti?

Answer. Yes, sir.

4. Question. What is your business or occupation?

Answer. Coffee business—coffee manufacturing from the raw coffee.

5. Question. Have you any personal knowledge of any person in the United States naval service having unlawfully killed any Haitian? Do you speak English?

Answer. Perfectly; yes, sir. But excuse me, I want to give an explanation.

4. Question. Wait a minute. Just answer the question.

Answer. I do not understand—

5. Question. You do not understand the question?

Answer. No, sir; about the Naval Service.

6. Question. The Naval Service includes United States marines and enlisted men, and officers and enlisted men in the United States Navy?

Answer. How about the gendarmes?

7. Question. It includes certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy or United States Marine Corps who are detailed as officers or enlisted men of the gendarmes.

Answer. Now I understand perfectly.

8. Question. It does not include any Haitians. No Haitians are in the United States Naval Service.

Answer. I want to ask another question before I answer. How about the Haitian gendarmerie?

9. Question. No; it includes only the white officers in the gendarmerie.

Answer. Now I understand. Yes; I know.

10. Question. State the circumstances.

Answer. I know one of the men, Lieutenant Keskoski.

11. Question. How do you spell that?

Answer. I could not tell you. It is a long time.

12. Question. Well, go ahead.

Answer. He had been sent to Aux Cayes, and when he came to be like one of the gendarmes. I do not know what he had against him.

13. Question. How do you know this—that he did not like one of the gendarmes?

Answer. He told me himself.

14. Question. He told you himself?

Answer. Yes, sir; and he tried to discharge him from the service and discharge him.

15. Question. Who was this officer; what was his rank?

Answer. A second lieutenant, I believe.

16. Question. Go ahead.

Answer. And then he in the morning discharged him and gave to him pay—

17. Question. Speak slowly and distinctly, so that we may understand.

Answer. In the morning—in the evening—I do not know how he met him again in the street, and he killed him about 7 o'clock in the evening.

18. Question. Were you present?

Answer. Yes; it was before my place where I stopped in the same street.

19. Question. Did you see the killing yourself?

Answer. I do not understand.

20. Question. Did you see the killing yourself?

Answer. Yes, sir.

. How did the officer kill the Haitian?

. Was the sun shining?

o not know.

. Was the sun shining?

sir; it was about 6 or 7 o'clock in the night—something like sun was down; it was dark.

. How far away were you from where the killing took place?

t very far—about half a block. He called for him to stop, and and he ran away, and he fired.

. Where were you born?

n. Go ahead.

hen they bring up the head man to the prison, they are pushing g to prevent him going to prison. They come to the corner and the prisoner's side. The chief of the band said he would not go to prison and preferred better to go to the white man for justice in that is going on, and Lieutenant Barrett, he had been in the bureau of election, and at the same time they are fighting like, this one pushing and this the other way, wanting to prison and not to take him to prison; do not know whether he said something to Lieutenant Barrett about he come from the office and seen the trouble, and he come in the house, began firing and he killed a man.

45. Question. Was any report made to the regular authorities with respect to these two killings you have mentioned?

Answer. I believe yes.

46. Question. Did you ever tell about these cases to any officer of the gendarmerie—brigade commander or other person?

Answer. No, sir; because in one case General Williams come from Aux Cayes and investigated the matter; and the first case they sent to Aux Cayes to Port au Prince, but whether he finds out anything I do not know, because everybody has been obliged to keep those things to himself.

47. Question. Well, never mind; just answer the question. Have you any other information within your knowledge?

Answer. I have other cases not that I have seen. Yes; I have seen.

48. Question. Tell about them.

Answer. I can not again say exactly the date. I know it was about a month ago. A lady had been accused for stealing goods—some money—from a house in the country, and they bring her to the bureau of gendarmes in the place where I live, San Luis. Well, they arrest the woman and bring her in the office about two days and they beat her there. I did not see her with my eyes, but I heard crying from the woman.

49. Question. Do you know it was that woman?

Answer. There was no other woman in the place.

50. Question. There was no child there?

Answer. No, sir.

51. Question. You mean to swear there was no other woman in there?

Answer. Yes, sir.

52. Question. And no other child?

Answer. Yes, sir.

53. Question. Did you ever go into the office?

Answer. Yes, sir; I used to go.

54. Question. During the two days that the woman was there?

Answer. No; not the day when she been in. I have been in the office in the front, but they shut her off behind in another room.

55. Question. Go ahead.

Answer. Afterwards the gendarme take her and carry her to the house in the country where they say she steal the money.

56. Go ahead.

Answer. And the same day I come from Aux Cayes. It was in the morning about 7 o'clock in the night, and I met the gendarme and the lady on the horse, on the same horse. I asked the gendarme what was the matter—“you want to kill the horse?” He tell me about the woman—this same woman—that she was arrested, and “We beat her and she did not say where the money. Of course, we want to find out where is the money, and I bring her to the place where she stole the money, and from the morning for that she refused to tell, and when I bring her back she refused to go on the horse. She says she is weak, and I have been obliged to take her on the horse.” Before the house of the notable man the gendarme come, and the woman come outside on the street, and he says, “My good friend, the woman is here. I looked up, and says, “Is she dead, the woman riding with you?” She got off the horse and the body fell down on the ground.

57. Question. Did the gendarme with whom you talked admit that he beaten the woman?

Answer. Yes, sir; he told me.

58. Question. He told you that?

Answer. Yes, sir.

59. Question. This gendarme who had the woman and who admitted that he beaten her, was he an American or a Haitian?

Answer. A Haitian.

Examined by the Court:

60. Question. How far were you away from Lieutenant Keenaki when he was shot, killed a man at Aux Cayes?

about—I been about a half a block away.

This was at sunset?

sir.

Was it light or dark?

as not very dark. It was not very dark.

Were the streets lit in any way?

use me—

streets lit—were there light in the streets?

sir; there were lights.

Had there been any row or quarrel between Lieutenant Kos-discharged gendarme?

not know if it was a quarrel between them or not; that is what alluded on him to stop and he ran away.

Did you hear him say "Stop"?

sir.

Did he say "Stop or "Halt"?

Creole—

Well, halt is the same in all languages, "halt"?

means halt in English, because he spoke the Creole, as the gen-tailian and could not speak English.

In the case of Lieutenant Barrett, did you actually see him

, sir; that was in the day; I seen him; yes, sir.

u identify the individual that he was firing at?

sir.

Do you know at whom he was firing, whether at an individual, ately?

ould not tell exactly how it was. We stand out in the street w. Lieutenant Barrett ran from the place and shot. I don't it was—I could not say—

. Was he shooting at any particular man?

ould not say exactly.

. Did he hit anybody—did his bullets strike anybody?

, sir; he killed the man.

. Was the man under arrest?

sir; because they wanted to arrest him. They were trying to rison to guard him as a prisoner, and he said he refused, and he go to the white man for justice, and why did they arrest him; then came together. Naturally I did not meddle in such busi-ehended nothing. I did not go very near. I was 500 feet away.

. Five hundred feet?

is an open place perhaps more than 500—perhaps a thousand square, an open place, and there is nothing to prevent us seeing. daylight.

. And you were practically a thousand feet from Lieutenant he shot—when he did the shooting?

s; if not more.

. If not more?

s, sir; I stand up in the place and I see everything.

. Did you see the man struggling to resist arrest?

cuse me—

. Did you see the man at whom he fired struggling to resist

, sir; I did not see him.

. That is what you heard afterwards—there was a rumor after-effect?

nat is that?

. That he was resisting and trying to go to the white man for at is what I heard afterwards.

. That was a rumor?

s, sir.

. Then, you do not know the circumstances under which he was to now I do not know.

. You do not know whether it was accidental or deliberate?

Answer. That is not for me to judge. You see, I explain how it is. I know Barrett he came out to see what the trouble was. It looked as if he wanted to see what the trouble was about.

85. Question. Do you know the name of the individual he shot?

Answer. No, sir; because even the general, when he passed through Cayes, he stopped at my place. It is a small place, and no hotel as he even came to my place we never talked about it.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this man and he withdrew.

Lieut. Col. LOUIS MCC. LITTLE, United States Marine Corps, a witness by the judge advocate, entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Louis McC. Little, lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps, commanding Eighth Regiment (provisional brigade) and troops in the headquarters at Mirabalais, in the Republic of Haiti.

2. Question. In your official capacity have you ever received any orders against persons in the naval service that came through the President of Haiti? And if so, explain the circumstances.

Answer. I have, through the minister of justice, sent to the chief of the gendarmerie, Lieut. Col. F. M. Wise, a copy of telegram received from Lascahobas, and in this letter it said that—the translation of the words: "The marine doctor at Lascahobas, under the influence of liquor, attacked the judge of the peace at Lascahobas, breaking his jaw and knocking several of his teeth."

I immediately telephoned Major Stone out at Mirebalais to take Curtis and go over to Lascahobas and investigate it. I later went by airplane to Mirebalais and went over to Lascahobas myself to investigate. I spoke to all the principals in this matter in this report, and found that there was a hospital apprentice, a pharmacist's mate, third class, George C. Tomsen, United States Navy. The Hospital Corps man at Lascahobas had been on liberty, and coming up the street with two gendarmes had stopped in front of the house of M. Cerant. He was the clerk of the court of Lascahobas and not the judge of the peace. He came out to shut his door—the gendarmes saw him—and Tomsen resented this, being very tight, and an argument started, but the gendarme tried to keep the two people apart. After pushing aside the gendarmes the Hospital Corps man struck the gendarme. I have seen Monsieur Cerant and I had the doctor examine him, and while there were two teeth loose from the blow in the mouth, there was no other damage done at all; and two days later he was all right. There was no mark. I forgot to add that he also accused the gendarme, a gendarme named Solon, of taking part in the assault.

Examined by the COURT:

3. Question. Have you the telegram?

Answer. Yes, sir; I have the translation of the telegram in these papers recommending Tomsen for general court. It was proved clearly by the witnesses that Solon merely tried to separate the two and was doing so in preventing the corpsman from hitting the clerk. He took no part in keeping the judge's clerk away from the man. I immediately had him confined. He had been confined previously by Captain Perkins, but I sent him into town and he was confined here at the brig at this post. These are papers recommending him for a general court-martial, and an order from the general commanding to try him. This occurred about the 21st of October and he has been here for some time. You asked about Mirebalais: I believe?

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

4. Question. Yes.

Answer. At Mirebalais on the 7th of October of this year, 1920, the gendarmes were given liberty. They returned, as has been proved by the results of inquiry, under the influence of liquor. There were three quite drunk that one fell from his horse. He got into a discussion in a little room in a little town with one of these men, and later on, about an hour later, he met on the street. This sergeant drew his revolver, and in the street I am giving now the finding of the court of inquiry of which I was the 17. Question. Do you know of any cases of prisoners being shot, or being shot, outside of combat?

Answer. No; not from personal knowledge, because I was at a place called Thomasiki before the attack, and I spent about nine months there, at the time of the attack I went back to the town and was in the prison yard.

The court was cleared.

The court was opened.

The president announced: It is the duty of the court to advise you from the evidence adduced, you are, Mr. Lang, an interested party. It is your right to be present, and although not compulsory, you have the right to cross-examine the witness on matters relating to any alleged act of violence, and also to call such witnesses as you may desire, through the aid of a lawyer, and you may be represented by counsel if you so desire.

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE. Do you wish to be represented by counsel at this time?

Mr. LANG. Yes, sir; but I would like to ask a slight delay in order to get counsel.

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE. And also in regard to the cross-examination of the witness after he has given his testimony—

Mr. LANG. If I have the right, sir, to call witnesses at any time, I would like to ask the delay in regard to counsel, and I think I can get counsel by the end of the day.

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE. You can introduce your counsel at any time you desire. Do you desire to introduce your counsel before we proceed further?

Mr. LANG. No, sir; but I would like to have the right to recall the witness at a later date. I should be glad to cross-examine him myself, but what I want to know, sir, is after this witness is through here to-day, and I have to-morrow, can I recall this witness?

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE. Yes; you may recall him at any time. You may recall the witness now.

Mr. LANG. I would like to cross-examine the witness.

Cross-examined by Mr. FREEMAN LANG (an interested party):

18. Question. You have stated that I asked for the first prisoner?

Answer. Yes.

19. Question. Whom did I ask for this prisoner?

Answer. The sergeant who was in charge of the jail.

20. Question. You stated that I took this prisoner and shot him in the back?

Answer. As he came out of the prison door.

21. Question. Where was I?

Answer. Standing outside of the prison door.

22. Question. Where were you?

Answer. I was in the prison at the time.

23. Question. Whereabouts in the prison were you?

Answer. I was not shut up in the prison, but in the prison yard.

24. Question. Were you one of the prison guard?

Answer. I was not a prison guard. I was standing out in the yard.

25. Question. Why were you in the prison yard?

Answer. I was not shut up because there was no cause for being shut up.

26. Question. If you were not of the prison guard, what right had you to be in the prison yard?

Answer. I was there for making bricks. I was in the prison yard as a brick maker.

27. Question. You state that you were in prison as a brick maker, and how, in the prison, did you make bricks?

While the interpreter was interpreting the witness's answer, the witness occurred:

Mr. LANG. I object. I do not think this interpreter is capable of interpreting my questions and the answers the way I would like to have them. He does not understand what this witness says. I know what he says, but he does not understand what he says. I do not believe I can bring out the witness sufficiently well with this interpreter.

THE INTERPRETER. May I explain something to the court?

Mr. LANG. I am speaking directly to the court.

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE. You are not satisfied with the manner in which the interpretation is being made?

Mr. LANG. No, sir; I am not. He does not seem to understand the witness.

VOCATE. Have you an interpreter that you would like to bring yourself?

Were you not confined for communicating with Charlemagne, the chief?

When I came in Thomassique I was put in prison. At that time I was in the kitchen.

That was not an answer to the question. The question was, that you were confined for communicating with Charlemagne?

Answer. No.

36. Question. Why were you confined at Hinche?

Answer. I was confined in prison for 13 days, but I do not know until now.

37. Question. Why were you confined?

Answer. I do not know. But I was released by Major Doxey.

38. Question. Was not Lieutenant Lang instrumental in having you at Hinche?

Answer. I do not know exactly, but the sergeant who arrested me was apprehended by orders of Captain Lavole.

39. Question. Were not Captain Lavole's orders transmitted through tenant Lang to have you confined?

Answer. I can not state if the orders for my arrest were given to Lieutenant Lang, but anyhow I was arrested by the sergeant.

40. Question. Were you ever charged with communicating in any way with Charlemagne or his allies?

Answer. I do not know this.

41. Question. Don't you think this was the reason you were confined?

Answer. I don't know.

42. Question. Is this possible?

Answer. No; I had no communication with Charlemagne.

43. Question. Did you ever have communication with the Cacos?

Answer. No; I fought against the Cacos in the woods. That is all I know of them.

44. Question. When the gendarmes are arrested and confined, are they told for what reason they are confined?

Answer. Yes. When a gendarme is confined in prison they always tell him the charge against him; but in my case they never told me anything.

45. Question. How long were you confined in the brig at Hinche?

Answer. Thirteen days.

46. Question. Were you in prison before the attack on Hinche?

Answer. I was confined in prison at 2 o'clock p. m. on Monday at 2 o'clock p. m. they had the attack.

47. Question. You were confined on Monday at 2 p. m., and state the attack was at 10 p. m. on the same day, while, as the facts prove, the attack was really on Tuesday at 10 p. m. How do you reconcile these facts?

Answer. My wife came from Thomassique and saw me at Hinche about 2 o'clock when she arrived. It was at that same time I was put in prison, but I do not know the reason, and remained confined there for 13 days. Major Doxey released me.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. That is not an answer to the question. Read the question.

The stenographer repeated the question.

Answer. What I know is that the attack taken place at 10 o'clock on Monday.

The INTERPRETER. He says that the attack occurred at 10 o'clock in the morning, and I asked if he was fighting all morning, and he said, "No," which means that the attack occurred, and the next morning everybody spoke of it.

48. Question. Were you confined in a cell in the prison during the attack?

Answer. No.

49. Question. Where were you confined?

Answer. In the yard.

50. Question. Was this yard inside of the prison?

Answer. Yes; it is surrounded with the wall.

51. Question. How many people were confined with you?

Answer. Between 10 and 12 gendarmes.

52. Question. Was there anyone else confined in the prison, or in the yard?

Answer. Other civilians were confined also.

53. Question. Why were these other people confined?

Answer. They were in there so as to be protected from the bandits' words, so they should not be killed by the bandits.

54. Question. Did Lieutenant Lang enter the prison after the attack in company with some one else?

Answer. Lieutenant Lang entered the prison with an interpreter, a fellow, or a British subject.

55. Question. Was the interpreter a white man or a man of color?

ored man.

Was he an officer or a civilian?

lian, who was then in the habit of going to Barrone to get com-

OCATE. No one can interpret unless he be sworn.

INTERESTED PARTY. Can not Mr. Holly give his interpretation?

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. Yes. Repeat the question.

The stenographer repeated the last question.

Answer (interpreted by Mr. Holly). Lieutenant Lang was standing right of the door. The prisoner came out. He pointed his revolver and fired, and I saw the man fall with my own eyes. It was dark. I could see.

Cross-examined by COUNSEL for INTERESTED PARTY (through Mr. STINES):

72. Question. At what time did this occur?

Answer. The attack occurred at 10 o'clock, and this happened after dark; therefore I believe it was about 10.30.

73. Question. Could you recognize the interpreter that you named, Lieutenant Lang at this time?

Answer. Yes.

74. Question. Is he in this room?

Answer. No.

Reexamined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

75. Question. What is the name of the sergeant of the prison with the prisoners out at the time of the alleged shooting?

Answer. Sergeant Carilus.

76. Question. Do you know where he is now?

Answer. In Port au Prince.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine the witness and he withdrew.

The Judge advocate stated that he desires to call a witness in connection with some prior testimony at this time, because the witness is due to be called at Santo Domingo.

THOMAS J. GRANT, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered the room and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE (counsel):

1. Question. What is your name, residence, and business?

Answer. Thomas J. Grant, Port au Prince, Haiti, member of the Commercial and Industrial Bank of Haiti Co.

2. Question. How long have you been in Haiti?

Answer. Four and one-half years.

3. Question. As what?

Answer. For over four years as an officer of the gendarmerie of Haiti, and at that time in business.

4. Question. Do you know the region of Aux Cayes?

Answer. Yes.

5. Question. Have you lived there or have you been on duty in that region?

Answer. I lived and have been on duty in that region for 18 months.

6. Question. Do you know from your personal knowledge of any native killing of Haitian natives?

Answer. No.

7. Question. Do you know Mr. Harris Lifschitz personally?

Answer. Yes; very well.

8. Question. How long have you known Mr. Lifschitz?

Answer. Nearly three years.

9. Question. Have you had any conversations with Mr. Lifschitz regarding the killing of native Haitians?

Answer. Yes.

10. Question. Will you please state to the court what these conversations were?

Answer. In July, 1918, I relieved Lieutenant Barrett of the gendarmerie commanding officer of the subdistrict of Aquin, which is in the district of Aux Cayes. Just previously to my arrival there, Lieutenant Barrett was killed by a Haitian. I spoke to Mr. Lifschitz and questioned him about the circumstances. He told me that he had no knowledge of what was going on, whatsoever, as he was not present at the time it occurred, but he heard what the natives were saying about it, and he told me that.

11. Question. Did Mr. Lifschitz make a report to you as commanding officer of the district regarding the beating of a native?

Answer. Yes; he reported to me that some gendarmes under my command had beaten and killed a native woman. He gave me her name, which I have ted the affair immediately and found that the woman was alive and beaten. I spoke to Mr. Lifschitz about this, asking him why he had a report to me. He said that he had heard the woman crying that she had been beaten, and some one had told him that she had killed one of many false reports of the same nature that Mr. Lifschitz had.

Did you make an official investigation in regard to the killing of the woman by Lieutenant Barrett?

I made no official investigation, but to satisfy my curiosity talked with everybody who was present at the time that it occurred, in addition to the officers who had been implicated in the affair.

Was an official investigation made?

In the best of my belief an official investigation was made by the officer of Aux Cayes.

Who was the commanding officer?

Mr. Vogel. An investigation was made by the local Haitian authorities, which exonerated Lieutenant Barrett from any blame in the affair. He acted only in self-defense, having been knocked down three times by his revolver.

By the Court:

How do you know the result of this investigation by the Haitian justice of the peace who drew up the procès-verbal told me parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness, if possible.

THE PROSECUTOR: a witness called by the Judge Advocate, entered and was Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE (through the interpreter):

What is your name, rank, and present station?

Augustus Toussaint.

What is your rank?

Private.

Where are you stationed now?

At Port-au-Prince.

Do you know where you were stationed in November, 1918?

At Hinche.

Were you serving in the gendarmerie at that time?

Did you ever see any Haitian prisoners shot at Hinche?

Explain the circumstances.

A prisoner was sent for for investigation. Lieutenant Lang was with him, and while speaking with him—I do not know what they were about—the prisoner was turning around and he was shot by a gendarme. He shot him with a machine gun. They picked up the prisoner and took him to Lath to be buried.

How far away was the prisoner from Lieutenant Lang when he was shot? At 15 paces.

How far were you from Lieutenant Lang when he fired? About twenty feet. How far was Lieutenant Lang from the prisoner when he was shot? At 10 paces.

Do you see Lieutenant Lang in this room?

Point him out.

The witness nodded toward Mr. Lang.)

Do you know of any other cases of prisoners being shot?

Do you remember an affidavit you made about two months ago in this case?

Can you read French?

Answer. Yes.

16. Question. Did you read over the affidavit which you signed at : did you read the affidavit which you signed at that time?

Answer. No; I signed it but I did not read it. They also asked the same time about giving electric current to prisoners, but as I did not my answer was that it was only one prisoner the lieutenant gave current so as to have him speak. This was before the Cacos uprising.

17. Question. Did you see any person applying the electric current to a prisoner—did you yourself see any person applying electric current to a prisoner?

Answer. Yes.

18. Question. Where was this?

Answer. At Hinche.

19. Question. Where did they get the electric current from?

Answer. From a wireless machine they had there.

20. Question. Who did this act?

Answer. Lieutenant Lang.

21. Question. In your affidavit which you have signed, it is stated saw Lieutenant Lang take two prisoners out of prison and shoot them. Now say you only know of one case—which is correct?

Answer. I never mentioned two prisoners—only one.

Cross-examined by COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY :

22. Question. Was the prisoner who was shot by the machine a Cacos?

Answer. He was arrested as a Cacos, but I can not say he was a Cacos when he was apprehended in the village of Hinche.

23. Question. Was he running at the time he was shot by Lieutenant Lang?

Answer. He was walking—not running.

24. Question. Did anyone present shoot at this prisoner before Lieutenant Lang fired?

Answer. No.

25. Question. Was he being led off by a gendarme when he was fired at?

Answer. Yes; a gendarme was leading him, but he was taken away by Lieutenant Lang.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. Repeat that question.

The stenographer repeated the question.

Answer. The gendarme who was leading him left him with Lieutenant Lang.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. You have not answered the question.

The stenographer repeated the same question.

Answer. No; the gendarme was standing aside.

The INTERESTED PARTY. His answer was that the gendarme was talking to the prisoner.

Interpreter HOLLY. The witness explains this way, that the gendarme led the prisoner from the prison to Lieutenant Lang when Lieutenant Lang came into conversation with the prisoner. When the prisoner was going away he was not led by the gendarme. He was fired at, and at that time the gendarme was standing off aside.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. Is that right?

The INTERESTED PARTY. Yes, sir; I understood him to say that the gendarme was standing off.

Cross-examined by COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY :

26. Question. Have you ever seen any Cacos prisoners try to escape?

Answer. No.

COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY. May I ask that the question be put to the other interpreter?

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. Yes.

The question was repeated by the stenographer and the answer was given by Interpreter Holly.

Answer. No.

27. Question. Have you ever seen any Cacos prisoners that were taken out on a working party try to escape?

Answer. No.

28. Question. Do you think that this man that was killed was trying to escape away?

Answer. I can not say, as I was 15 paces from them, but I noticed him turn back and was walking.

How many shots were fired?

I not say, as it was machine gun.

Do you believe that any shots were fired other than by the

it was only one person who fired.

sir; they were in the prison. They took them from there and and they refused to speak, and I saw them going away; but if they ran or not—in other words, trying to escape—but I know

Where was the first one that you know of shot, at the time it occurred before the prison at 8 o'clock in the night.

With what arm were they shot?

With a pistol.

Where were you when the shooting occurred?

Just standing near the hospital.

How far from the prisoner?

Not here to the gendarme caserne.

From here to that building [indicating]?

Yes; but about 36 paces.

How do you know that it was Lieutenant Lang who did the shooting; I know, because I saw Lieutenant Lang with them.

Was any other officer out there besides Lieutenant Lang?

No; he was the only one there present.

Where was your captain when the shooting occurred?

Well, he was not at Hinche then.

Explain the circumstances of the shooting of the second pris-soner spoken of.

The first prisoner was shot before the prison; the second one was refused to talk, and he was conducted to the road going to Lath, where he was shot.

Who shot him?

Lieutenant Lang.

What time of the day was this?

About 6 o'clock p. m.

Where were you at the time the shooting occurred?

Just at the corner of the street.

How far from the prisoner were you?

Not here to the palace—a good distance—from here to the palace.

How far from Lieutenant Lang were you?

At a distance to the office over there—from the gendarme headquarters. How do you know Lieutenant Lang did the shooting, then?

Because he is the only one that always ordered prisoners to speak, and he refused then he shot them.

Did you see him shoot this second prisoner?

Yes; he was on horseback at the corner of the street, and I saw with him he shot the prisoner.

Was it light or dark at that time?

It was just getting dark.

With what weapon was the shooting done?

With his pistol.

Explain the circumstances of the third man who was killed.

The Cacos' attack was about 10 o'clock p. m. They stopped their man. He released the prisoner and put him outside and told him

I heard the machine gun go "blooie," and that night nobody was walking around there and I saw the prisoner lying, and I saw

1. Were you in front of the prison at that time, after the shooting?
 Yes; at the office.

1. Were you in the office when this machine-gun fire occurred?

Yes; I was in the office.

1. Could you see who fired the machine gun from the office?

When he was going to the prison I saw the machine gun on his when he returned from the prison I also saw the machine gun rider. After the firing I went there myself and there I saw the the ground.

33. Question. You say you stayed awake all night?

Answer. Yes; I did not sleep at any time that night.

34. Question. Were any other prisoners killed on that same night?

Cado?

Answer. After five days—

35. Question. No; answer the question I asked you.

Answer. No.

36. Question. Would it be possible for four or five prisoners to be outside of the prison door without your knowing about it on the same night?

Answer. They might have shot different other prisoners. As I went to see about this prisoner in question I did not pay any attention to the others as it was a little dark.

Interpreter HOLLY. There is a shade of difference in what he says and the interpreter says. The witness says that it was possible—that it was possible—that it was possible to shoot others on the same evening—he does not know that the thing occurred, because, after going to see who was killed, or look at the body, he went away, because it was getting dark. The point is, he said it was possible.

37. Question. Where did you go when you left the body?

Answer. I went to the office.

38. Question. How far is the office from the door to the prison yard?

Answer. From here to the palm tree [indicating].

39. Question. If four or five shots had been fired right close to the door would you not have heard them when you were in the office?

Answer. All that night they were firing, but I can not state the prisoners were firing.

40. Question. Were any shots fired close to the prison or barracks during the battle?

Answer. No.

41. Question. Explain the circumstances of the killing of the fourth prisoner.

Answer. Cado is the fourth one.

42. Question. Explain the circumstances of the killing of the fifth prisoner.

Answer. A Cacos was captured. He was a chief of division in the revolutionary army. He was caught with arms in his possession. Lieutenant Lang asked him to talk and took him to prison, and took him a second time and ordered him to speak. I saw when he took the Cacos out, but I can not say if he ran; but I saw he fired and the Cacos fell.

43. Question. Where was this?

By counsel for interested party: May I ask the other interpreter to give an interpretation of that?

Mr. HOLLY. The witness says there was a Cacos caught, and this Cacos was a chief of division—in command of a revolutionary division. He was brought to prison and Lieutenant Lang was examining him—questioning him—after he was brought to prison. Lieutenant Lang came the second time and had him brought to question him again. The witness saw the prisoner going away, but he did not swear that the prisoner was trying to escape, when he heard a shot fired, and, looking, he saw that the prisoner had fallen.

44. Question. Who fired the shot?

Answer. Lieutenant Lang.

45. Question. Did you see him fire it?

Answer. Yes.

46. Question. What was the distance between the prisoner and Lieutenant Lang when this shot was fired?

Answer. This prisoner was running away from Lieutenant Lang, and, aiming him, and Lieutenant Lang fired at him.

47. Question. What time of the day was this?

Answer. That was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

48. Question. Was the prisoner under guard at the time he was taken to prison?

Answer. No.

49. Question. Did you personally see any other cases of killing prisoners?

Answer. No.

50. Question. Do you remember signing an affidavit in regard to the matter in which you charged Lieutenant Lang with shooting five prisoners?

Answer. Yes; at the cape.

51. Question. Do you know what was in that affidavit that you signed?

ey told me what was in it.

1. What did they tell you was in it?

was questioned about what I knew or saw Lieutenant Lang was of doing. I told them that I saw Lieutenant Lang capture two cos—with arms in their possession. He ordered them to speak. I told them he shot them before the prison.

1. By whom were they fired?

s; by, it was by a gendarme. I do not know his name. If you want to know the whole thing, there was firing by the gendarme, who fired at the man when this man went across the plaza.

examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. What was the date of this occurrence?

s; I remember, the first week or 10 days; the first half, I should not know. I do not remember the exact date.

1. What year?

18.

1. How far was the Haitian from Lieutenant Lang at the time Lieutenant Lang fired?

s; would say, sir, approximately 150 yards—140 or 150 yards.

1. How far away were you from Lieutenant Lang when the shooting should say approximately 250 feet.

1. Where was this?

s; Hinche, sir.

1. What time of the day was it?

s; the afternoon, sir. I do not remember the exact time, but I was in the late afternoon, about 5 o'clock.

11. Question. Did this shooting excite your curiosity at all to find out what it was about?

Answer. Yes, sir.

12. Question. What did you do about it?

Answer. Why, when I saw the shooting, I saw a gendarme shoot. I will say twice, I do not remember exactly. It was twice that I remember he shot at this prisoner, and I started to walk over toward the house. I was before—as I came out of the office there in Hinche I saw a gendarme shoot a man. I did not know then this was—whether he was a prisoner or not. I crossed the plaza, and I saw Lieutenant Lang standing in front of the house where I also lived, close to the office. I saw this man break and run across the plaza, and I remember of two shots being fired. I could not say if there were any more, but I remember two shots were fired. As they were fired, I was still walking toward the house, or toward Lieutenant Lang—as I saw Lieutenant Lange was walking toward me when the first shot was fired. The shots were fired—the two that I remember of—Lieutenant Lang ran toward the house, which was between himself and I, and we always had a machine gun on the porch. He took this machine gun and shot this man, that I afterwards learned was a prisoner.

Examined by the COURT:

13. Question. Do you know the name of the prisoner you saw shot?

Answer. No, sir; I do not.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness, and he withdrew.

EUCHER JEAN, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered and was sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE (through the interpreter):

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Eucher Jean, sergeant of the gendarmerie of Haiti, stationed at Cape Haitien.

2. Question. Do you know Mr. Freeman Lang, formerly a lieutenant in the gendarmerie?

Answer. Yes, sir.

3. Question. Do you see him here in the court room?

Answer. Yes [pointing to Mr. Lang].

4. Question. Where were you serving in November of 1918?

Answer. At Hinche.

5. Question. Did you ever see any person executed there?

Answer. The only prisoner whom I saw executed by Lieutenant Lang was the Cacos known as Teka. This occurred on November 4. Lieutenant Lang while home sent for this prisoner and was interrogating him. At that time I was inside of the gendarmerie station, and a few minutes afterwards I heard shots fired. I went out and saw it was the prisoner that was shot. The distance was about 15 paces from the house of Lieutenant Lang, between the prisoner and the house.

6. Question. Who told you Lieutenant Lang shot the prisoner?

Answer. I was on the inside of the gendarme station. As soon as I heard the shot fired I ran out, as I am a military man, and I saw the prisoner on the ground, and the lieutenant continued firing the rest of the shots.

7. Question. What was Lieutenant Lang shooting with—what weapon?

Answer. With a machine gun.

8. Question. What time of the day was this?

Answer. It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

9. Question. Was any gendarme in charge of the prisoner when he was taken out of the prison?

Answer. I did not notice that, as I was inside of the gendarme station. It was only when the shot was fired that I ran out.

Examined by the COURT:

10. Question. How far was the prisoner from Lieutenant Lang when he shot him?

Answer. Lieutenant Lang was at his home and the prisoner was sitting at that table there sitting there, [pointing to a table about 30 feet distant].

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness, and he withdrew.

hen we left the prison, before sitting down on the road, we made a patrol of the town. We did not have enough gendarmes to go after that had attacked. We had 30 men, if I remember right—30 or 32—ammunition. Therefore, we had to stay where we were at. We telephoned Cerca-la-Source, and the message was relayed from there and by boat to Ouanaminthe to the commander of the department, asking for ammunition. We made our patrol of the town with a detail of gendarmes—three or four—then sat down in front of the barracks on the automobile cushion, and there all night. At 7 o'clock in the morning we had breakfast, after releasing the women from prison.

8. Question. Was Lieutenant Lang away from you at any time from 5 o'clock after 10 until the following morning?

Answer. No, sir.

9. Question. At what time did you send Lieutenant Lang to the other side of the town?

Answer. I should say about 6.30 or 7 o'clock.

10. Question. At what time did you meet him and in company with him at the prison?

Answer. That I should say would be about 10.15 or 10.20.

11. Question. Then between 6.30 and 10.15 or 10.20 that night did Lieutenant Lang enter the prison or the prison yard?

Answer. No, sir.

12. Question. How many months were you in the district of Hinche after the second attack?

Answer. I was not there a month. In the district of Hinche?

13. Question. Yes.

Answer. I was in the district of Hinche—that was October—very short of time. Yes; one year and one month; in fact, 13 months.

14. Question. During the time of your being detailed in the district of Hinche and prior to the second attack, was there a radio station at Hinche?

Answer. Not to my knowledge—I was stationed 30 miles from Hinche. I used to go there once in a while—not to my knowledge.

15. Question. To your knowledge, when was the radio station established there?

Answer. If I remember right, in November, 1918.

16. Question. Would it have been possible for Lieutenant Lang to have committed any atrocities at the prison that night without your knowledge?

Answer. No, sir.

Cross-examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

17. Question. While you were in command at Hinche did you keep track personally of the prisoners who were confined in the prison there?

Answer. Yes, sir.

18. Question. Were any of those prisoners ever killed?

Answer. No, sir.

19. Question. Did any of them ever escape?

Answer. Not under my charge; not while I was in charge.

20. Did any of them ever mysteriously disappear?

Answer. Not to my knowledge.

21. Question. Did any of them die while in prison?

Answer. I could not say as to that. The prison reports on file will show. I can not remember whether there were any deaths during the time I was in command or not.

22. Question. Did any case arise that made you suspicious about anything occurring through some irregularity or misconduct?

Answer. No, sir.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this case, and he withdrew.

FREEMAN LANG, the interested party, requested that he be sworn as a witness. His request was granted, and he was duly sworn, having been informed that his examination would be governed by the same rules that governed the examination of an accused who takes the stand at his own request at a trial by court-martial.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

My attention was called to the fact that there was trouble when two or three shots fired and a cry of "Halt, halt," in Creole, or French pronounced practically the same in English. I immediately gave up to the direction in which the gendarme had started with the prisoner that this man was running across the field. He had already gone 20 or 40 feet away from the gendarme. The gendarme had fired at least three times. Apparently the man had not been hit, as he was running at the same rate of speed. I hesitated a moment and then, as it was getting dark as I said before, there were woods close by, and knowing this man was a Cacos or bandit, I returned to my house, on the front porch, and drew back of the machine gun. The machine gun was already loaded and ready to fire. I aimed at the escaping man and pressed the trigger, firing it for perhaps half a second. The man immediately came down. I then ran over to where he had fallen down and found he had three bullet holes in his back and one in his head. I am quite positive he did not fire over 10 shots, as it was a very quick spurt—only one pull of the machine-gun trigger.

Seeing the man was absolutely dead I tried to identify him. No one knew exactly who he was; in fact, the gendarme thought he was called Teka. I do not know how to spell it. I could not get anyone to identify him. I then gave orders that the man be taken up on the back of the gendarme and prisoners, and his grave dug and buried.

I then walked over to the quarters of Captain Lavoie, who had just returned a few days previously from the States. He had been on leave. I told him the occurrence. He said, "All right," or words to that effect. No further comments, as I recall, were made.

I returned to my quarters and thought nothing more of the matter. I reported it to my commanding officer and did not feel that any investigation had been done anyone.

8. Question. Was any official report of this affair made to General Latorre?
Answer. That I can not say.

9. Question. When was the radio station established at Hinche?

Answer. To the best of my knowledge, it was brought out to Hinche by mules; it was perhaps 10 or 15 days after the attack on Hinche on October 15, 1918.

Cross-examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

10. Question. Did you ever shoot any other prisoners besides this man who have just testified to?

Answer. No, sir.

11. Question. What explanation have you in connection with having executed a prisoner?

Answer. I have never electrocuted anyone, prisoner or otherwise.

12. Question. Did you ever apply electric current in any shape or form to a man?

Answer. Yes, sir; at L'Attalaye, Haiti, while repairing telephone lines. I had a spirit of fun, I have taken a bucket of water and put a 50-cent piece of money in the bottom of it. A crowd of curious workmen would gather around to see the fun. I would speak to them in their own language. "If you care to pick out the 50-cent piece from the water, you may have it." One or two of the bolder ones would say, "Very well, I will try." They would put their hand in the water to take out the 50-cent piece. Other Haitians, or whoever cared to, would turn the handle of the generator. This would cause a slight shocking current to be transmitted through the water. The man's hand being in the water, he would experience a shock. If he did not mind the shock he would keep on and get the 50-cent piece. If he objected he would take his hand away and laugh, and the 50-cent piece there, and some one else would try it. That instance is the only one I have ever had any experience in shocking anyone in Haiti.

The details as to this shocking incident can be corroborated by many witnesses.

13. Question. Can you account in any way for the fact that a man come here and testified that you killed native prisoners other than with the machine gun?

an account for that by this explanation: I have been in Haiti years. I know the language and the customs of the Haitians, hill people. They are very superstitious, prone to exaggerate, tendency of telling a white man a story that they think he would believe. In regard to the testimony that has been given by various people about shooting Haitians at Hinche, I have heard them talking among themselves. This instance is discussed by them in this manner: A gendarme of Petit du Brave, who was ordered to Captain Lavoie and stayed at Lavoie's house on the night of the attack on Hinche, came the next morning out of the prison. There he saw several dead bodies of Haitians in the ground. These men had been brought there by Haitian or Haitian gendarme guards.

asked by the COURT:

1. By Haitian prisoners or as Haitian prisoners?

Haitian prisoners. They had been carried there under guard among the prisoners. They were assembled there for identification before they were to be buried. These men were all dead Cacos, actively engaged in the fight the previous evening. It is rumored by gendarmes that Petit du Brave made this remark: "What is the bodies lying before the prison like this?" Another person—it is a man—stated: "Ah, these were shot by Lieutenant Lang; he is a man, are only gendarmes; gendarmes do not know how to shoot. How can they shoot them?"

2. Explain this attitude on the part of the Haitians by the fact that they had a target range built just across the river from the town, at a distance of a mile away. At various times I would take a detail of this range and endeavor to instruct them in the art of shooting. It was very successful and were not very good shots. At several times I received their admiration of what to me were rather ordinary shots, but to them seemed excellent shots, when I would even hit the target, bull's-eye. That is the only way that I can account for such a thing as to my shooting various prisoners around Hinche, shooting them.

Examined by the COURT:

18. Question. Who told Petit Do Brave that these were men killed during the attack?

Answer. A gendarme told him so.

19. Question. Did you hear him tell him this?

Answer. Yes.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine the witness.

The judge advocate announced: In order to allow the next witness to take the stand to put him on the stand at this time, and to allow the case in which Mr. Lang is interested.

R. S. BRANDE, lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps, called by the judge advocate, entered and was duly warned that the oath he had previously taken is still binding.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. If you are the legal custodian of an official copy of the general court-martial order No. 2, dated 26 March, 1917, produce it.

(The witness produced a certified copy of the general court-martial order in question, and it was submitted to the court and by the judge advocate in evidence. There being no objection, it was so received.)

2. Question. Refer to that document and read it.

(The witness read the document, original appended, marked "Exhibit 5.")

3. Question. The document which you have read does not indicate for whose death Anthony Rogoski was tried. Have you any information that would furnish the name of the party who was killed?

Answer. Yes; from the official records of the gendarmerie it appears that Anthony Rogoski arrested a man by the name of Dieu Donne La Branche.

4. Question. To what paper are you referring, while giving your answer. To the findings of a board of investigation ordered by the gendarmerie.

5. Question. Proceed.

Answer. This man was an ex-gendarme and had been arrested. Lieutenant Rogoski of the gendarmerie, and while under arrest broke started to run down the street. He gave chase, calling on him to stop several times, and finally fired and hit La Branche. From the result of the shooting La Branche died the next day in the gendarme barracks.

ED PARTY. On October 15, 1918, I was stationed at Hinche, strict commander, Gendarmerie d'Haiti. Information had been attack by Cacos might be made on Hinche that night. Captain ict commander of Hinche, ordered me, about 6.30 p. m., to take endarmes and to proceed with them to the junction of the two ing into Hinche near the large cemetery just outside of Hinche. l to take up a position overlooking these two roads and to stay attack took place or until further orders.

with Charlemagne, the Cacos leader, and every effort was made to keep him from coming in contact with anyone. Any person confined in cell No. 1 was unable to see anything that took place outside of the prison.

Evidence that has been submitted to the court shows that Adolphe was very bitter toward the district and subdistrict commander of Hinche. He claimed that he had been imprisoned unjustly, and it is quite in keeping with the character of this class of Haitian that he should perjure himself in order to harm some one who was at that time the subdistrict commander at Hinche.

Regarding the statements of Meratus Toussaint, I would like to refer attention to the fact that evidence submitted shows that there was no electric current established at Hinche until at least 10 days after the attack on the night of 1918, this being at least three months after the date on which I was of applying electrical current to a native. I have already informed the court that I did within the last year, at L'Attalaye, use a small telephone to tease some native workmen by putting a coin in a bucket of water, while this may have been indiscreet on my part, no possible harm could come from it. I can quite readily see how an exaggerated report of a current might grow into a rumor that I had used electrical current, and that these natives do not understand—on a prisoner, and how it was upon in this case as an opportunity to discredit me. While in the prison at Hinche I did not at any time apply electrical current to anyone. It has been shown that no electrical device existed at Hinche from which I could have taken a current of sufficient potentiality to harm anyone.

As department records of the gendarmerie of Haiti will show, at the time Meratus Toussaint was confined in prison for illegal killing of prisoners. It is therefore not unlikely that he would not hesitate to perjure himself in order to harm some one who in carrying out his lawful duty had confined this man to prison.

Relative to the testimony of Petit do Brave, a gendarme ordered to the night of the attack was stationed in the quarters of the district commander. These quarters are on the other side of the town, out of sight of the barracks, and the prison. At about daylight the morning after the attack at Hinche, prisoners were sent under gendarme guard to assemble the bodies of the Cacos who had been killed during the engagement the night of 1918. These bodies were brought before the prison door and assembled. They were inspected and counted; they were then buried.

Evidence submitted will show that Petit do Brave, the gendarme ordered to the night of the attack, had been stationed in the district commander's quarters all night of 1918. The next morning he saw these dead bodies, and that remarks somewhat following took place. Petit do Brave asked:

"What is all this; what are these dead bodies?" Another gendarme ordered to reply: "Why, don't you know? These are the men shot by Lieutenant."

There was no firing after the battle, which ended about 10.05 p. m. of 1918. There was no machine gun at Hinche at this time.

Having been in Haiti for more than five years, I have learned the language and most of their habits. I have learned that some of the Haitians, when questioned, will try to tell a story that they think would like to hear. They will exaggerate and perjure themselves as a result of thought. This has been proven innumerable times in the courts and investigations held by various officers of the gendarmerie and Marine Corps. In view of these facts, it is very readily seen how a man of the type of Adolphe, who considered that he had been unjustly imprisoned, should spread a rumor that he might hear and from that manufacture a story that he would endeavor to harm some one he disliked.

Acting true to Haitian form, Petit do Brave, a man who had not been in the office, barracks, or prison on the night of the attack, came the next morning to see the dead bodies of the Cacos. The person who made the remark that he had killed the men thought he was speaking the truth and paying a compliment. At that time I held a sharpshooter's medal in the Marine Corps and upon several occasions I had taken the gendarmes to the rifle range and endeavored to instruct them in shooting. The gendarmes were very proud of their skill and they realized it; they could seldom hit the target, much less the man, and when I demonstrated to them that it could be done, they considered me a fool. This accounts for the gendarme's remark that I had killed them, meaning that I had been the only one who would have been likely to kill them.

ing the engagement. Petit do Brave, not knowing of these circumstances upon his imagination, and invented various tales to account at he had been told that I had shot the men.

to impress upon the minds of the court the circumstances related the assembling of the dead Cacos killed in action, in one group, prison. I honestly believe that the reports and stories that have in affair are due solely to this cause; particularly so, as the Haitian engaged in an engagement, is never much in evidence as a an attack.

rst week in November, 1918, I was subdistrict commander at and I was informed that there had been a chief of division of the with a rifle and 132 rounds of ammunition, and that he was in red him brought, with a gendarme guard, to my house, so I could Cacos. The gendarme guard brought the Cacos prisoner to the my house; this porch faces the prison, and is across the plaza a ut 200 yards. It was nearing dusk. I asked the prisoner several hen told the gendarme guard, in his native tongue, to return the prison and confine him. The prisoner must have heard me say arme guard. The gendarme then ordered the prisoner to precede gendarme, walking behind the prisoner, they proceeded in the prison, for a distance of about 100 yards. I had started toward gendarmerie, taking a route at right angles to that taken by the the prisoner. At about this time I heard the shout: "Halte la!" I then two or three shots fired.

turning toward the prison I saw the Cacos prisoner running and was firing at him. There were thick woods behind and on two prison. Apparently the prisoner had not been struck, as he was e woods. It was clear that some action would have to be taken the escape of this dangerous and important prisoner. I turned to my front porch. There was a Lewis machine gun on my front been there for 10 days or more. It was left there day and night s ready for use, as the town of Hinche was exposed and attacks at any time. Dropping behind this machine gun I sighted on the er and fired one quick spurt of less than 10 shots. The prisoner d upon inspection it was found that he was dead. He was buried rd known as Latt. I immediately proceeded to the quarters of e, who was then the district commander of Hinche, and reported im.

Please relate what you know.

ile the election for magistrate was going on—

Examined by the COURT:

5. Question. At what place?

Answer. Aquin. While the election was going on in Aquin for me there was a disturbance between the crowd and the gendarmes. I, Barrett was at the voting place, not far from the gendarme barracks. He saw the disturbance he went out in the street. While crossing the place he was assaulted by four or five persons. One of them had a revolver while the others were beating him on the back. It was then he drew his revolver and shot the man. When the man fell dead the others ran. It was a case of self defense.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

6. Question. How far away were you from Lieutenant Barrett when he was killed?

Answer. I was right with him, you see. We went out together to the voting place to the gendarme barracks. We were crossing together the place. Of course he was just four or five steps in front of me.

7. Question. Do you know the name of the Haitian who was killed?

Answer. Well, I can not remember his name now.

8. Question. How long ago was this?

Answer. 1917, I believe.

Examined by the COURT:

9. Question. Do you know why these persons attacked Lieutenant Barrett?

Answer. No; I can not say; I don't know.

10. Question. Was it the person who was assaulting him in front of him who was killed?

Answer. Yes, sir. The case was taken up by the Haitian justice and the procès verbal has been issued accordingly.

11. Question. Do you know the result of the inquiry by the Haitian justice?

Answer. Yes.

12. Question. What was the result?

Answer. The result was that they said it was a case of self-defense.

13. Question. Were you present at the decision of the court?

Answer. No.

14. Question. When did the court make the decision?

Answer. Well, I know the court made a decision, but I was not present when it was taken.

15. Question. How do you know what the decision was?

Answer. Well, everybody knows it in Aquin.

16. Question. From rumor, then?

Answer. From rumor; yes, sir.

(None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine the witness and he withdrew.)

The judge advocate announced: I have no further testimony to bring before the court at this time and can not now state when I will be able to examine any other witnesses, if any.

The COURT. That being the case, the court will adjourn to await the call of the president of the court.

The court then, at 11 o'clock a. m., adjourned to await the call of the president.

The court was cleared.

The president of the court announced that the court desired the judge advocate to define the procedure of the court, and requested him to define precisely—

First. His understanding of the scope of the present inquiry;

Second. The suitable and adequate methods to be followed; and Third. How best the court may acquire the necessary information and to formulate its conclusions concerning the general conduct of our armed forces.

VOCATE. Expressing my opinion as to the specific questions asked, I desire first to refer to page 257, Naval Courts hereon it is stated:

The scope of the inquiry can only be determined by reference to the precept. Whatever is not specifically or by implication found within the four corners of the precept is without the inquiry, and any attempt made to inquire into matters not coming within the precept is extrajudicial, and the members of the court are to inquire as individuals only, without any legal authority, but the authority which they possess as a court of inquiry.

of inquiry has, while acting within the scope of the precept, powers in the ability to affect the rights and interests of individuals. The precept should be rather strictly construed. The affirmative in any case always lies with the court.

In the above opinion in view, I now refer to the original precept itself and the amendment thereto which the convening authority has since added. It requires the court "to inquire into the question of the conduct of the members of the United States Naval service in Haiti since * * *

This direction is very broad, but it is followed with a restriction with a view to determining whether any unjustifiable homicides have been committed by any of such personnel, whether any other unjustifiable acts of violence have been perpetrated against any of the citizens or any unjustifiable damage or destruction of their property has anything to be inquired into by the court is the question of unjustifiable acts which may have been committed by any of the personnel in accordance with the general rules of interpretation which are in the present instance, the other unjustifiable acts of oppression should be considered to be such acts as are of a very grave nature. Offenses, such as might properly be tried by a deck court, or punished by the officers' authority, are not, in my opinion, indicated by the precept inquired into by the court in connection with such felonious acts as homicides.

Then, is to inquire into the question as to whether such grave acts have been committed by any of the personnel in question. The answer thereto is derived from the precept:

"If the court finds that any of the above-mentioned unjustifiable acts have been committed" the court is required further to report as to the degree of culpability attached to each and every person immediately or mediately responsible for such unjustifiable acts. In order that the court may make such report, it is included within the scope of its inquiry the duty of obtaining the names of the responsible parties. Particular attention is invited to the fact that the further inquiry is to take place only in case some one or more of the above-mentioned unjustifiable acts are found by the court to have been committed. As soon as the court finds that some such acts have been committed, it is manifestly impossible to attempt to find a responsible party. The principle of corpus delicti applies here. In such offenses as unjustifiable acts of arson it is necessary to furnish reasonably satisfactory evidence of the burning before evidence can be introduced to show that the act was criminal.

It is not necessary to prove the corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt. The court must have some belief in the existence of the act before it enters into the question as to whether there be an actor, much less the question of determining degrees of responsibility among various persons for an act. The court does not believe was ever committed.

In paragraph 2 of the precept, the court is directed to include in its conclusions as to whether "practically indiscriminate killing of natives has been going on for some time." In order to arrive at its conclusions, it is to infer that the precept authorizes inquiry into whether natives have been killed, the number and the manner of their killing, as well as the cause.

The amendment to the precept further requires the court to give its conclusions "as to the general conduct of the personnel of the naval arm of Haiti since 28th July, 1915." This latter requirement also would require the court to inquire into the general conduct of the personnel in order to obtain matter on which to base its conclusions. I have reserved to myself the privilege of inviting your attention to the wording of this amendment which clearly indicates that in paragraph 1 of the precept, no inquiry into the general conduct of the personnel in question was directed, but only an inquiry in connection with determining whether the mentioned unjustifiable acts had been committed.

Concluding my answer to the first question, there is no doubt in my mind that the court would be without any legal justification in attempting to enlarge the scope of the present inquiry beyond what is directed in the precept. As individuals we might think that other matters should be inquired into or we might surmise that the convening authority would like to have information as to other facts, or we might imagine that the convening authority does not intend to have such a broad inquiry as above outlined. We have, however, to base our conclusions on anything except the language of the precept itself, and in construing that language the construction should be as liberal as to disregard the ordinary meaning of the words and phrases.

Coming now to the second question: The methods to be followed in conducting an inquiry are covered in part by paragraph 505. Naval Courts-martial, page 260, wherein are defined the duties of the judge advocate. Particular attention is invited to subparagraph (g), in which it is stated:

"In general he is the prosecutor of the case and is responsible for bringing out all the facts."

Parties to the inquiry necessarily have the right to bring out facts, and the judge advocate ordinarily leaves to them the burden of presenting their own witnesses and introducing their own evidence. If, however, there is reason to believe that the facts will not truly be brought before the court, the judge advocate may assist any interested party with his defense.

For the information of the court I might state here that in performing my duty as judge advocate, I have been and am still endeavoring to trace the sources the various rumors which are afloat regarding matters covered by the precept. Any person whom I have found that claims to have first-hand knowledge of any alleged unjustifiable acts as referred to in the precept, brought before the court and placed upon the witness stand. While not intending to try causes out of court, I have not brought people in as witnesses admitting to be true everything they claimed, there could in law be no question of their being able acts, but where it was a question of fact, I have not attempted to pass any judgment in the matter. An incident in point is the case of a witness who first told me he knew of unjustifiable acts and who later denied such acts. He was placed upon the witness stand for the court to judge his testimony. I am endeavoring to place before the court everything which possibly comes into evidence of unjustifiable acts having been committed. I may add to my above-expressed opinion that it is not a suitable method to allow an inquiry into the question of responsibility until the corpus delicti is proved.

In this connection I respectfully request that the court may infer at any time they have sufficient evidence of an unjustifiable act to warrant taking inquiry as to the parties responsible for that act.

Any charge which is important enough to be brought in this court should have presumptive proof at least back of it. Charges made on rumor or on mere hearsay and gossip are not other than slanderous, and I am sure that those who propagate and to those who disseminate them. In attempting to bring witnesses before this court I have used every means to locate and produce those who claimed to be able to give testimony as to facts. I am assemble mere scandalmongers and afford them an opportunity to stand, under the guise of giving testimony, stories which they antiate by their own knowledge or the sworn testimony of any person. While following the outlined procedure, every concrete carefully followed up and the testimony and other evidence has e placed before the court for its finding of facts.

v to the third question: The question of the general conduct of of the naval service that has performed duty in Haiti since July best be judged by the comparison of conditions in Haiti prior to n and since. It is not so much a question of this man's opinion ; opinion. That personnel should be judged by their work. Did ernal peace before the occupation, or did she have any prospects : without the assistance of our forces; are conditions in that reter today; was the former method of government ever one in the ne masses or was it a method of allowing the favored few to fat- isfortunes of the many; has our intervention improved prior con- it respect; are our officers and men interested in the welfare of eople as a whole or are they indifferent to their welfare; has the nel protected the industrious and well behaved and brought to il doer, or do the reverse that process?

: propositions these questions are too involved and cover too wide settled by the testimony of a few persons. The conduct of our y be judged, in some small part, by the fact that you have evi- me few of them have committed crimes. As to the other, the he overshadowing part, the judgment must be based on other than nduct of these men must be judged by what they have achieved the consideration always in mind of the condition of the ground menced to cultivate it and the tools they had to work with. ie nature of an ordinary court in many respects, it might occur : historical data and general observations and the like are not which the court can form any conclusion—why not procure the ony of witnesses? It would, of course, be opinion testimony, but that?

e lies with the judge advocate. Take the case of the officer who ole for the destruction of the notorious Charlemagne and his pow- f insurgents. His superior officers recommended him for a medal the President of the United States awarded that medal. Some iter, whose name I forget, says that officer did a shameful thing, e contrary, the President publishes to the naval service as heroic of the highest honor. Shall the judge advocate call the writer and t, both of whom know of the case by hearsay only, and record testimony for the judgment of the court?

d go on. We could spend a few years in Haiti calling one after e natives until a majority had been obtained one way or the other n as to what the Haitians think of the conduct of our forces. Then on calling the various individuals who have served in Haiti and opinion of their own conduct and the conduct of those with whom

s and the crew of a wrecked ship can be assembled before a court ad asked individually or collectively if they have any complaint to the conduct of any officer or man during the time of danger and is way the court may obtain sworn testimony as to the conduct of ad of the crew; not so with the officers (the forces of the occupation . 1915), and the crew (the citizens of Haiti). The judge advocate also admits, his inability to perform the duty for the court of assem- witnesses.

ole to assemble the whole of the witnesses in question, or even any minority of them, the judge advocate is forced to conclude that the uthority did not intend that any attempt to do so would be made. h authority of law does not require the performance of impossibili- above assumption be correct, we are forced to the conclusion that g authority relied upon the known ability, the long service and ex- l the high character of the members of this court, which qualifica- enable them to appreciate conditions of the service in Haiti, and eir general knowledge and observations, reinforced by their special situation, they would form their conclusions.

(The president of the court announced that the court concurred in the opinion of the judge advocate as to the scope of the present inquiry and the methods to be followed in pursuing the inquiry.)

(The court then, at 11 a. m., adjourned to await the call of the president.)

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

BOARD ROOM, Port au Prince, Haïti.
November 2.

The court met at 11 a. m., pursuant to call of the president.

Present: All the members, the judge advocate, and parties to the case, except Mr. Lang).

The record of the proceedings of the sixteenth day was read and approved.

The judge advocate announced: The record of the proceedings of the seventeenth day has not yet been completely written up, and it will be necessary to postpone reading the same until the next meeting of the court.

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

LOUIS CUKELA, second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Second Lieutenant Louis Cukela, United States Marine Corps, stationed at Maïssade, Republic of Haiti.

2. Question. Did you ever burn down any houses belonging to the Haïtians?

Answer. Yes, sir; two.

3. Question. Give the place and date where the burning occurred?

Answer. It is a question of my diary, sir.

4. Question. You can state as nearly as you can recollect the place?

Answer. In December, 1919.

5. Question. Where?

Answer. At a section of Rivier Canot.

6. Question. Why did you burn the houses?

Answer. Because the houses, or the roof of the houses, contained small arms ammunition, which I personally saw, 45:70 caliber ammunition, the same as rifle ammunition.

7. Question. Why did you burn down the houses in place of searching for the ammunition and removing that?

Answer. At that time I did not have enough time to spend in the search, because my orders told me to proceed farther to another section at a later time, which I could not spare in fooling around.

8. Question. How do you know there was ammunition in the houses?

Answer. Because I found it personally.

9. Question. Was there any ammunition in the houses which you personally found?

Answer. I beg pardon—was there ammunition—

10. Question. Besides what you personally found?

Answer. Yes, sir.

11. Question. How do you know?

Answer. When I put the houses afire, I was forced to retire with me about 300 yards from the place while the ammunition was exploding.

12. Question. Were these houses located in a section where active operations were going on, or otherwise?

Answer. Yes, sir.

13. Question. What kind of houses were the ones burned?

Answer. The two houses that I burned in that locality were the houses belonging to Cadeus Belgrade.

14. Question. What kind of construction were the houses?

Answer. The houses were typical Haïtian cays, covered with thatch.

15. Question. What do you mean by "mystery houses"?

Answer. When I entered in the house I found a native knife stuck in the center of the floor with a table with many different rocks—mystery rocks and several Roman Catholic images, with Hebrew images attached to them. I am more than sure that these houses were mystery houses because I found a voodoo book on the table, a book which deals on spiritualism, superstitions, and different voodoo rites.

n. Were the houses used as dwelling places by any persons?

y, sir.

n. Did they have any domestic utensils in them?

o, sir.

n. Why did you not fully explain all the circumstances regarding the houses when you testified before the military commission? Why, because I was unofficially told by one of the members of the mission to not go so far in detail. That was the very cause that g is not explained thoroughly, which necessitates, now, for me to ie parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness, Irew.

OSTERMAN, major, United States Marine Corps, a witness called by vocate, entered and was duly sworn.

ned by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Iward A. Osterman, major, United States Marine Corps, attached g with the constabulary detachment, Port au Prince, Haiti.

1. What duty were you performing around December, 1919?

rom the 1st of December to the 23d of December I was in camps in the field at—troops in the field in the district of Mirebalais.

1. Was Second Lieut. Louis Cekula serving under your command?

e was.

1. Do you recall the burning of two native houses by Lieutenant do.

1. Acting in accordance with instructions which he may have n you or superior authority, was he going beyond his duty in houses in case he had reasonable ground to believe that any- nealed therein, and he had other duties to perform that required e location of the houses as soon as practicable?

1 the case in question I consider that Lieutenant Cekula was fully destroying the houses. His mission was such that it would not lay unless the houses had been of a more substantial construction, ider that he should have searched the houses. But where, as I case, his mission was urgent and the houses of the usual rural I consider that he was justified in destroying the houses in order e ammunition.

1. Have you any knowledge as to the value of the houses or the ones burned?

1. Was it any offense for a Haitian in the district in which you ant Cekula were operating to have arms or ammunition in his

es. On numerous occasions I sent officers with interpreters to the population of the various habitations and villages in the district of Mirebalais, to inform the people that any person who gave aid or ammunition to the bandits or in their behalf was giving aid to the bandits and as unfriendly to the Administration of the Haitian Government. This with other propaganda was made throughout the entire district.

8. Question. Do you know anything of any person belonging to Cadeus Belgrade, having been connected with the parties?

Answer. I recall that some horses were confiscated by the troops and turned in to the Marine Corps quartermaster at Mirebalais. I received instructions to the effect that whenever animals were confiscated from those who were arrested for other crimes or from those who were arrested for other crimes, the animals were to be turned in to the quartermaster. We found that the bandit leaders had large numbers of animals which they had confiscated from the real owners and had been turned in to the Marine Corps. The real owners would appear and identify these animals by their papers and brands. When the animals were properly identified, the owners they were always turned over to them.

9. Question. Was it necessary for officers, acting under your orders, to seize property and turn it in, as you have described, or was it a sort of formal investigation as to the character of the property, or did they have to act on their own initiative in order to comply with the requirements of the situation?

Answer. On account of the large territory which it was necessary to cover, the comparatively few officers and men available, it was necessary, and almost a rule, that officers were required to go on patrol for two or three weeks at a time, and it was therefore necessary for them to act on their own initiative, although a report of any such action was made to the commanding officer of the troops in the field.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine the witnesses and he withdrew.

(The court then, at 11.40 a. m., adjourned to await the call of the next day.)

NINETEENTH DAY.

Board of Inquiry.

Port au Prince, Haiti, November 19, 1934.

The court met at 10 a. m., pursuant to call of the president.

Present: All the members and parties to the inquiry (except Mr. L. J. B. Interested party).

No witnesses not otherwise connected with the inquiry were present.

The records of the proceedings of the 17th day and the 18th day were read and approved, that part of the proceedings of the 17th day, which was the matter where the court was closed, being read in closed court.

Sergt. Doras Lee Williams, United States Marine Corps, an interpreter, entered and with the permission of the court, introduced Maj. Edward J. Williams, United States Marine Corps, as his counsel, and Capt. Patrick J. Williams, gendarmerie d'Haiti, as his assistant counsel.

Simeon Gabo, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered and was warned that the oath which he had previously taken was still binding.

The testimony given by the witness on the fifteenth day of the inquiry was read by the judge advocate.

Cross examined by COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY (through the interpreter.)

37. Question. You stated in your testimony that the town, meaning Malssade, in the Republic of Haiti, was attacked on the date on which Jean met his death. What did the inhabitants of the town do during the attack?

Answer. They came to the bureau of the gendarmerie and slept there.

38. Question. How many of them came to the bureau?

Answer. Many of them.

39. Question. Was Gagnier Jean one of these persons?

Answer. No.

40. Question. Is it not true that most of the inhabitants left the town during this attack and ran into the bushes?

Answer. Yes.

When Gagnier Jean was brought to the bureau, who brought sergeant Carlius.

Carlius Absolu?

Carlius Absolu.

Was Carlius Absolu present during the alleged beating?

During the beating which you state took place?

Was Sergt. Sandolvilus Francisco present during the time the took place?

He was not present. He was in the village, but not present.

Did you notice whether or not Gagnier Jean had a blanket or on his stomach at this time?

When they went for him he had fever; he was sick with fever.
 suit.

Please repeat the question.

Supper repeated the question.)

State whether or not he had a blanket or bandage or any cloth the time he was brought to the bureau.

He did not notice. He had a towel around his neck.

At about what time did you leave the bureau?

At the time I was there.

Were you on duty the entire night?

Yes; I was on guard.

Did you remain awake and on duty the entire night?

Yes; I took duty from 6 to 10. I was relieved afterwards.

You stated that you were on duty the entire night in answer to question, and now you state that you were relieved at 10 o'clock.
 At what time did you leave the bureau?

Left inside the office.

At what time did you go to sleep?

At 10 o'clock.

When you were on post at the bureau, what was the extent of in other words, in your orders for that post, what area did you patrolled—go and come before the office.

Do you mean that you were walking back and forth outside the door?

Outside of the door.

Is there a wall built around the barracks?

Yes; there is a wall around the barracks.

Is it not true that the sentinel is ordinarily posted outside of

On the outside of the wall?

About how high is this wall?

High [indicating about 3 feet].

Where were you during the alleged beating—outside the wall or in the office?

Outside.

Do you know whether or not Gagnier Jean had been wounded on the town?

He was not wounded.

How do you know he was not wounded?

Because he was in the village—inside the village at all times.

Did you examine him to determine whether or not he had been wounded only like that, but I can not say if he was wounded.

On the night in question when Lieutenant Williams returned to about 10.45 p. m., did or did you not challenge him?
 He was at the office—

We are talking about the same night; not the next night.

He was standing in the street and Lieutenant Williams passed in the back of the yard.

What is the answer?

Answer. He was standing in the street and Lieutenant Williams was in the rear of the yard.

67. Question. Did you have any conversation with Lieutenant Williams at this time?

Answer. He entered the gendarmerie office by the rear and I saw him.

68. Question. Do you not recall that he asked you whether everything was all right or not at the bureau and you replied yes?

Answer. Not me.

69. Question. Did you see the judge de pais of Maïssade at any time during the evening?

Answer. Yes; the judge de pais fought with us against the Cacoon and slept at the office.

70. Question. Was the judge de pais present during this alleged beating?

Answer. No one could approach the office at that time.

71. Question. Why not?

Answer. The lieutenant did not want anybody to approach.

Reexamined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

72. Question. How many persons slept in the bureau that night during the fight?

Answer. Many people—many persons.

73. Question. How many rooms are there in the bureau?

Answer. Three rooms.

74. Question. How many persons slept in the same room with you?

Answer. Nine gendarmes.

75. Question. Did the beating of Gagnier Jean occur while you were on post or after you came off post at 10 o'clock?

Answer. It was while I was on post as sentry, and at 6 o'clock I was beating him—up until 8 o'clock.

76. Question. Did the beating last about two hours?

Answer. Yes; he beat him up and afterwards beat him again. He stopped and beat him again.

77. Question. Do I understand correctly that you were walking past near the wall, while these various beatings occurred?

Answer. Yes.

78. Question. Did you actually see any of the blows struck?

Answer. Yes.

79. Question. Did you look into the bureau through a window or through a door?

Answer. Through a door.

80. Question. Was the door open or closed?

Answer. Open.

81. Could any person passing along the street look through the door?

Answer. Yes; even the cries of this man anybody could hear.

82. Question. Was there a light burning in the room where the beating took place?

Answer. Yes.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine the witness and he withdrew.

SANDOVILUS FRANCISCO, a witness called by the judge advocate, was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Sandovilus Francisco, sergeant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

2. Question. Where are you stationed?

Answer. Chabin.

3. Question. Do you know former Lieut. Doras Williams?

Answer. Yes.

4. Question. Is he here in the court room?

Answer. Yes.

5. Question. Point him out.

(The witness pointed to the interested party.)

6. Question. Where were you serving in March, 1919?

Answer. Maïssade.

7. Question. How do you know it was March you were serving there?

as all the time I was at Maissade.

Do you recall an attack by the Cacos on Maissade?

Now a man named Gagnier Jean in Maissade?

; I know him.

Where was he during the fight with the Cacos at Maissade?

During the attack I can not say where he was, but I guess—

I do not want your guess; state only what you know.

I do not know where he was, because during the attack I was busy.

Did you see Gagnier Jean after the attack?

After the attack I did not see him; only I saw him at 6 o'clock.

Where were you at 6 o'clock, when you saw him?

Was in the office.

What office?

Office of the gendarmerie.

Where was Mr. Gagnier?

Went home.

Could you see from the bureau to Mr. Gagnier's home?

When they sent for him is when I saw him.

Where was he when you first saw him?

Was inside the office.

In the same room with you?

What happened in the office that concerned Mr. Gagnier?

While in the office he sat on a chair.

How long a time was it during which you saw him in the office?

Was there from 6 o'clock to 7 o'clock, and at 6 o'clock I left and

At what time did Mr. Gagnier reach the office?

3 o'clock.

And what time did you leave the office?

Left the office a good time after he arrived.

Who else was in the same room with Mr. Gagnier?

Myself, the other sergeant, Carius, and two or three other gendarmes.

Was there any white man there then?

; the lieutenant was there.

What lieutenant?

Lieutenant Williams.

What happened that you saw or heard going on in the office?

Saw Lieutenant Williams speaking with Gagnier, and I turned my back to the office, and when I returned from the patrol I was told—

I do not want that; just state what you know yourself. Did any trouble between Lieutenant Williams and Mr. Gagnier?

Did you see either one of them strike the other one?

I did not see any.

Do you remember an affidavit you made in regard to the alleged Gagnier?

; I know I made an affidavit or report at Cape Haitien.

Do you remember what you said in that report or affidavit?

; what I have already stated to you.

Did you not also state in that affidavit you saw Mr. Williams strike Gagnier with a stick?

As stated in the report that when I came from patrolling I heard that he had beaten up Gagnier Jean.

Who told you that the beating had taken place?

When I came from patrol; when I arrived before the gendarmerie I saw a few people before the office and was asking of me if Gagnier was in there that I did not know anything about it, as I did not see, I did not know about it.

Examined by the interested party (counsel):

When you signed this affidavit at the Cape, did you know what you were signing?

I did not know what I signed.

You stated in your testimony that you were present in the office at 6 and 7 o'clock, approximately an hour, on the date in question. Can you state when you left the office?

Answer. I left him alive.

33. Question. Do you recall whether or not Mr. Gagnier Jean wore : about his stomach, or a blanket or other covering?

Answer. Yes; a blanket.

36. Question. Do you know whether or not he had been wounded : attack on the town?

Answer. No; I did not see that he was wounded, but I saw wh : with the blanket around him.

37. Question. Do you know what is known as a procès verbal—a : tutes a procès verbal in the Haitian courts?

Answer. Yes.

38. Question. When are these processes prepared—in what cases?

Answer. When anything occurs.

By the JUDGE ADVOCATE. May it please the court, I do not see the : of this with the testimony of the witness, if this is cross-examination : direct examination. If it is something else that counsel desires to : I think it ought to be put before the court and an explanation made : he desires to ask this witness the questions.

COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY. I would like to state for the ill : the court that in Haiti whenever a person dies or is killed a process : is prepared by the judge de pais in that community, and in that : cause of the death is set forth. In this case there was a process : pared by the city judge, signed by the officials, and I am endeavoring : that procès verbal to produce before the court.

The COURT. I think that the court desires that the interested party : as much latitude as possible in bringing out the facts.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. I simply wanted to bring out the statement : According to the law of the country the process is better evidence : than the testimony of the sergeant of gendarmes on the same : court can take judicial notice of such things, or have them proved by : evidence that they may desire. There being no dispute as to what : stated to be the law in this country with reference to the process, it is : sary for him to call the sergeant of gendarmes to prove what the : country is. If there is any doubt, we might call an expert—a lawyer : testimony on the subject.

The COURT. I understand what he is endeavoring to do is to find out : witness whether or not the law in the case was carried out.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. The best evidence would be to produce : verbal or an attested copy, and not what someone who did not make : did not have any legal duty with reference to it has to state about : the reason I object to it.

COUNSEL FOR THE INTERESTED PARTY. I was just using this witness : mony as a method of bringing it before the court, and I will withdraw : question.

Reexamined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

39. Question. Was not the declaration you signed at the Cape n : you before you signed it?

Answer. No.

Recross-examined by COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY:

40. Question. During the time you were in the office was the door : reau open or closed?

Answer. Open.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine th : and he withdrew.

ZABALON GARNIER, a witness called by the judge advocate, exte : duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE (through the interpreter):

1. Question. What is your name?

Answer. Zabalon Garnier.

2. Question. How do you spell your name?

Answer. Z-a-b-a-l-o-n G-a-r-n-i-e-r.

3. Question. What is your residence?

Answer. Gonave.

4. Question. Occupation?

between 1 and 2 o'clock.

About how long did it last?

I do not know exactly, but I believe it was at 4 o'clock?

It ended at 4 o'clock?

ended at 4.

Where were you during the attack—in what part of the town?
I was at home with my father.

Was your father in the house with you?

What did your father do during the attack?

He was sitting down at home, and as they were firing outside,
he was sitting there.

After the attack was over, where did your father go?

He immediately afterwards went to the gendarmerie office.

Did you go with him?

How long did your father remain there?

He remained there until 6 o'clock, and Lieutenant Williams told me that he was there to go, and in case he should need them he would send

What did you and your father do then, after being told that?
We went home.

How long did you remain at home then?

We remained home until 8 o'clock and then went to bed.

Did you go to sleep then?

How long did you remain asleep, about—until what hour did you wake up?

I slept until 10 o'clock, when Lieutenant Williams sent Carius for me. Carius knocked at the door, and I asked who was there, and he said that Lieutenant Williams sent for my father. My father left with Carius, and I stayed at home. But Carius told me to go back. When my father reached the office I heard him cry out: "What have I done? Why are you treating me like that? What I done? Why do you massacre me like that?"
He brought him up, and I got up on my porch and wanted to go to the office, but I was afraid to be killed, and therefore I did not go.
The next morning I was arrested by a gendarme who is downstairs. It was about 6 o'clock the next morning that I was taken to the gendarmerie office. The lieutenant asked me if my father was the elder boy. I replied no. He asked me if he had a wife. I answered yes. He said yes he would have killed me. I was kept there the next day. After three days I was released.

The Lieutenant Williams you speak of—is he in the court room?

Point him out.

The witness pointed to the interested party.)

Examined by COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY:

Did you actually see with your own eyes your father beaten?

ADVOCATE. I object to that question. He has not testified he saw it.

EXAMINING PARTY. I will withdraw that question.

Examined by COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTY:

During the attack on the town of Maissade did the cacos enter

Answer. No.

27. Question. Did you remain in your house during the attack?

Answer. Yes.

28. Question. From what direction did the Cacos enter the town?

Answer. They came from the direction of a place—I do not know the name, but I believe it is Savon Lapalais, but I can not state where they came from that direction. I do not know where the Cacos came from.

29. Question. Was there any firing in the vicinity of your house?

Answer. Yes; they were firing all around the village; I can not say before my house or the neighborhood only, but the neighborhood all around.

30. Question. Is it not true that a number of Cacos were in your office at the bureau?

Answer. No.

31. Question. Why didn't you and your father go to the gendarmerie for protection when the town was attacked?

Answer. We did not know or expect the bandits to enter the village; we would have done so, but as soon as the Cacos left we reported it to the office of the gendarmerie.

Reexamined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

32. Question. How do you know no Cacos entered the yard near your house?

Answer. If they entered my place, I would have seen them.

33. Question. Were the shutters and doors of your house closed during the attack?

Answer. The doors were half open.

34. Question. Did you not tell me yesterday, when we talked a case, that the doors and windows were all closed to keep out bullets?

Answer. Yes; the doors were closed to prevent disorder.

35. Question. Which is correct? Were the doors and windows all closed or any of them open?

Answer. All the doors were closed while we remained inside.

36. Question. Could you see out of your house during the fighting? Was firing going on, with those doors and windows closed?

Answer. Yes; while inside if anything happened in my yard I would have heard it.

37. Question. Were either you or your father struck by a bullet during the fighting?

Answer. Never.

38. Question. Do you remember that your father wore a towel around his neck when he went to the bureau?

Answer. No.

39. Question. Did he have on a coat?

Answer. Yes.

40. Question. Did he have a blanket or anything wrapped around his neck?

Answer. No; he went without that.

41. Question. Think carefully about whether he wore any sort of bandage around his neck.

Answer. He did not have anything around his neck.

Recross-examined by the INTERESTED PARTY (counsel):

42. Question. When the gendarmes drove the Cacos out of the town, did they pass your house?

Answer. No.

(None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness and he withdrew.)

(The court then, at 12 o'clock, adjourned until 9.30 a. m. on Tuesday.)

29. Question. Before you left on patrol did you hear any conversation between Lieutenant Williams and Garnier Jean?

Answer. No. I went on patrol.

30. Question. Did you see either of them strike or attempt to strike the other one?

Answer. No.

31. Question. Do you remember making a declaration at the Cape to the death of Mr. Garnier Jean?

Answer. Yes. The same declaration as I have already stated is made at Cape Haitien.

32. Question. Can you read?

Answer. Yes.

33. Question. Did you read the declaration you made before you Answer. They did not let me read it, but I was told to sign it.

34. Question. In the declaration you signed it was stated that Lieutenant Williams beat Mr. Garnier Jean and that Garnier Jean died about an hour afterwards.

Answer. It was only the next morning when I arrived from patrol the crowd told me that Garnier Jean died.

Cross-examined by the INTERESTED PARTY (counsel):

35. Question. When you left the gendarme bureau on patrol was Garnier Jean alive?

Answer. Yes; I left him sitting down.

36. Question. When the Cacos went into the town of Maisseade, in that direction did they enter with respect to the house of Mr. Garnier Jean?

39. Question. Was Garnier Jean's house in the line of fire from the barracks?

Answer. Yes.

40. What was the construction of this house of Garnier Jean's; was it possible for a rifle ball to pass through the walls of the house or not?

Answer. I do not remember if the house of Garnier Jean is built of stone wall or is a wooden house.

41. Question. What model of rifle were the gendarmes armed with at that time?

Answer. The small rifle.

42. Question. Were the walls of the house of Garnier Jean constructed of stone or the usual mud and lath construction?

Answer. I do not remember, but I know there is a lot of stone at that part of the house.

43. Question. When Garnier Jean was brought to the office, did you see whether or not he wore a towel or other cloth about his neck, or a bandage about his waist?

Answer. Yes; when he sat in the office of the gendarmes I noticed he had something wrapped around his stomach or belly, but I believe it was a woolen blanket.

Examined by the COURT:

44. Question. How long after Mr. Garnier was taken to the bureau did you leave on patrol?

Answer. As soon as he arrived at the office I left on patrol.

None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine him and he withdrew.

CARLOS ARSOLU, a witness called by the judge advocate, entered and warned that the oath previously taken by him is still binding.

No; they had me sign it.

31. What did you think the declaration said?

I did not know what it said, but they gave it to me to sign and I

32. Before the declaration was written out, did you not make any statement to some person about Garnier Jean's death?

Answer. Lieutenant Bertol asked me what I knew about the affair. I told him that Lieutenant Williams sent me to get Garnier Jean. I then turned Garnier Jean to Lieutenant Williams and I left the office. It was on my return from patrolling that I was told that Garnier Jean was killed, and I told him that all this I heard.

44. Question. Who told you that Garnier Jean was killed?

Answer. The gendarme who was at the office told me.

45. Question. What is his name?

Answer. Some gendarmes who was there at the time and who remained with me went on patrol, but I can not state which one of them.

Cross-examined by the INTERESTED PARTY (counsel):

46. Question. When the Cacos entered the town of Maissade, from what direction did they enter with respect to the house of Mr. Garnier?

Answer. They came from the rear of the house of Garnier Jean.

47. Question. Did they fire at the gendarme bureau when they entered the town?

Answer. Yes, sir; they entered the village opposite the office.

48. Question. Did the gendarmes return that fire?

Answer. Yes.

49. Question. What is the construction of Mr. Garnier's house—is it of stone or is it the usual mud and lath construction of country houses of Haiti?

By the JUDGE ADVOCATE. Why not ask him first, if he knows what it was made of and it would not then be so leading?

By COUNSEL FOR THE INTERESTED PARTY. I will withdraw the question.

50. Question. How was the house of Garnier Jean constructed—of what material?

Answer. It is a wooden house with a wall at the lower part of the house.

51. Question. Indicate the height of this wall at the base of the house.

Answer. (Witness indicated about 3 feet.)

52. Question. Do you know whether or not the rifle balls from the Cacos' rifles would penetrate these walls?

Answer. Yes; any kind of bullets would go through the house.

53. Question. Did you see the body of Garnier Jean the day following the attack?

Answer. No; I did not look at the body.

54. Question. Do you know whether or not the judge de pais prepared a procès verbal in this case?

Answer. I do not know if the judge de pais made a procès verbal. I did not see it.

55. Question. When Garnier Jean was brought to the bureau by you, did you notice whether or not he had a towel around his neck, or a blanket or anything around his stomach?

Answer. I noticed that he had a towel wrapped around his neck and a jacket.

56. Question. Repeat the question, please.

(The stenographer repeated the question.)

Answer. He had the towel wrapped around his neck.

(None of the parties to the inquiry desired further to examine this witness, and he withdrew.)

First Lieut. JULES ANDRE, gendarmerie d'Haiti, a witness called by the interested party (Sergeant Williams), entered and was duly sworn.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE (through interpreter):

Sergt. DORAS L. WILLIAMS, United States Marine Corps, the interested party requested that he be sworn as a witness. His request was granted, and he was duly sworn, having been informed by the president that his examination would be governed by the same rules as govern the examination of an accused person who takes the stand at his own request in a trial by court-martial.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Sergt. Doras L. Williams, stationed at Quantico, Va.

2. Question. Are you the Doras L. Williams who has been mentioned in the testimony as Lieutenant Williams of the gendarmerie?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Examined by the INTERESTED PARTY (counsel):

3. Question. What duty were you performing during the month of February, 1919?

Answer. Second Lieutenant, gendarmerie d'Haiti.

4. Question. Where were you stationed?

Answer. Maissade, Haiti.

5. Question. During the time you were stationed at Maissade, did you know one Garnier Jean, a citizen of Maissade?

Answer. Yes, sir.

6. Question. Did he come under your notice in any unusual manner during the month of February, and if so, state the circumstances?

Answer. On the 14th of February the town was attacked by the bandits, the bandits attacked from the rear of his house. The Cacos were in the barracks, and the gendarmes were firing from the barracks and the market, which brought his house in the line of fire. I managed to get the bandits out of town with the help of the gendarmes and the natives. I proceeded after the bandits after they left town, and stayed in town until right at dark. After I returned to the town I heard a rumor that Garnier Jean was intimate with the bandits, so I sent for him. When he came to the barracks he was all wrapped up in a blanket, with a towel around his neck and one around his body. I asked him if he knew anything about the attack, and he said he did not know. He was all nervous and could not tell me anything I would ask him. It was getting dark, and I left him sitting in front of the barracks in a chair, and I went out to post an outpost of gendarmes to avoid a surprise attack at night. I did not return to the barracks until about 10.45, and passed in front of the barracks. He challenged me. I asked him if everything was all right, and he said yes. I went into my house and went to bed.

After I had been asleep the gendarme on post notified me that Garnier Jean was dead. Me being tired and overworked in chasing bandits, I told him to attend to that the next morning. The next morning they came to me and asked me what to do with him. I told them to notify the judge and do whatever he said. After that I did not bother any more.

7. Question. Do you know whether or not the judge de pais prepared a procès verbal in his case?

Answer. He did.

8. Question. Did you see this procès verbal?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Cross-examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

9. Question. Did Garnier Jean ever make a protest to the judge about a sentence which the judge made upon two inhabitants of Maissade?

Answer. I never heard of it.

10. Question. Did you ever strike Garnier Jean?

Answer. Never.

11. Question. Did you ever have any reason to suppose before the death of Garnier Jean that he was not friendly to you?

Answer. I have heard such rumors as that.

12. Question. Did you ever talk to him about it?

Answer. I never talked to him at all, sir.

13. Question. Did you ever talk to any person else about his supposed death?

Answer. No, sir; I never did.

efore giving the numbers of killed and wounded, I think it perti-ce an explanation that in the early days of 1915 and 1916 the orle were not in many fights. From March, 1918, until about July 918, the gendarmes took practically no part in the engagements uprising. It was this time when the fighting was very severe.

2. Has it been customary for the so-called Cacos or insurrectionists ot as a general rule. The chiefs generally got themselves up t deal of red—red sashes and red handkerchiefs around their d hands around their heads, and any makeshift uniforms that would

3. How about the rank and file; did they have any distinctive their hands?

hey did not; they tortured their prisoners and mutilated the dead.

5. Is that matter simply of record, or has it ever been proved that is a matter of record, and can be proved by witnesses.

—March 28, 1916, Cerca la Source was attacked and the sentry small pieces. The whole front of the barracks was covered with 1916, a messenger of ours by the name of Bellaire, an old man of e gave him a marine saddle and marine hat and a couple of buttons clothes. He was extremely proud. He was sent out to Lieutenant a message and was captured by the Cacos. He swallowed his messy took him in the woods and chopped his head off and mutilated his information I got from the murderer himself.

From the official files, June 10, 1918, at La Montagne, quoting from the report of a gendarme: "The body of a gendarme was discovered in a field about 10 yards from the road. It had been horribly mutilated with a machete and riddled with bullets from a pistol."

The JUDGE ADVOCATE announced: Does the court deem it necessary to further details of this nature in order to illustrate the question of the observation of the ordinary rules of warfare by the Cacos?

By THE COURT. The court is of opinion that the witness should be asked to enumerate the various instances.

Examined by the JUDGE ADVOCATE:

8. Question. Proceed.

Answer. In February, 1919, at Thomonde, a gendarme by the name of Justin, private Seventeenth Company, while on telephone patrol was captured by the Cacos, cut up in small pieces and the pieces distributed along the trail.

January 19, 1919, at Ti Montagne, Gendarme Fleurant, while on patrol was captured, his head cut off, heart cut out, and his body mutilated.

On February 4, 1919, Murat Osten, at Muscadey, had his head cut off and his body mutilated.

On February 4, 1919, Valpens Valemeus, a private in the Seventeenth Company, at Lascahobas, had his head cut off, his arms cut off at the elbows, and his body mutilated.

Lieutenant Muth, on April 4, outside of Mirebalais, was ambushed by the four marines and five gendarmes that were with him had to retreat for safety on account of the heavy fire. The Cacos mutilated him. He was a lieutenant in the gendarmerie, and a corporal in the Marine. They cut off his private parts, took out his heart and liver, opened up his chest and took out his intestines, and took two large strips of flesh from his back. His head, from the testimony of a prisoner, was cut open and the bullets were put in their bullets in his brains so as to give them better hitting power. His heart and liver were eaten by these people. This is from the testimony of four witnesses who were present that I heard myself.

At Bon Repos, October 8, 1919, the day before the first attack on the Prince, three engineers, Haitians, belonging to the Engineer Regiment, Haiti, by the name of Price, La Forestrie, and Panyot—they were in their house. The house was burned and Price's body was horribly mutilated. La Forestrie's head was cut off and given to a man by the name of Price of our detectives who was captured, who carried it and showed it to Charlemagne.

These atrocities have not only happened to gendarmes and the police connected with them, but on April 4, 1919, at a place called Los Polis, near Alfred Chauvert, an old man 60 years old, who was judge of the peace and magistrate at Hinche once, had his head cut off and body badly mutilated while visiting his plantation outside of Hinche. This was for the theft of beef and one horse.

October 19, 1919, at Baie Terribbe, Constant, a guide, was captured and his body cut in three pieces, head, trunk, and legs. Of the two marines who were captured, Lawrence, on November 28, 1919, was burned, and from the bodies of prisoners, was badly tortured before.

On November 4, 1919, Morris, an aviator, had his head cut off and his body badly mutilated.

There are many, many more similar instances of treatment toward the prisoners and toward their own people by the so-called Cacos, but in the limited time we have had to prepare these lists, these are simply a few of the instances. These are facts and which can be proved.

Examined by the COURT:

9. Question. Have you any records, or do you know of any records which contain a list of noncombatants, peaceful Haitians, who have been killed by the Cacos?

Answer. It would be very hard to get the names of peaceful citizens killed by the Cacos, because most of these reports are made where an inhabitant's family were murdered, on such and such a night. A patrol was sent out to discover the bodies, but in view of the scarcity—the people were staying around that part of the country very much and it would be very hard to find that out.

10. Question. To whom would these reports be made?

o the nearest gendarme post, and a patrol sent out. Of course, een many, many reports of that kind made, and bodies found. n. Have the Haitian officials any records of those instances, to lge?

ie court, the judge advocate, nor any party to the inquiry desired to re witnesses.

The judge advocate made the following oral argument.

It is a depressing duty to investigate into charges against our own but it is one of the highest duties, after all, that upon which this court has been engaged, to follow up such charges honestly and honorably, and to ridding the service of the unfit and the unworthy if such should be found, and, by means of service agencies, to keep the service clean.

Coming now directly to a consideration of the directions of the president the evidence obtained and recorded in our record of proceedings:

First. As directed, you have inquired into the conduct of the personnel of the naval service that has served in Haiti since July 28, 1915, with determining whether any unjustifiable homicides have been committed by such personnel. The evidence before the court shows two cases of unjustifiable homicides. The accused men in those cases were duly tried by a general court-martial, convicted and sentenced. The records were approved by the convening authority of this court and are on file in the department. There is another case on file in the department which might have been of unjustifiable homicide, but the actor in that case was and is insane. It has been impossible for either a court martial or this court to ascertain the true facts.

Second. You have inquired into the question as to whether other and unjustifiable acts of oppression or of violence have been committed by the personnel in question against Haitians or their property. Attendance in the record shows that some half dozen of such acts, crimes, have been committed and again the record shows that the accused were duly brought to trial, convicted, and sentenced. In those cases, the court-martial approved the sentences and the records are on file in the department.

In the cases mentioned this court could do nothing but accept the findings of the general courts-martial. The guilt of the accused has been determined in each case and the whole responsibility for the acts is fixed. Not being in the nature of a court of appeals, this court cannot reverse any of those convicted of the judicial determination of their guilt. If there should be a disagreement of findings, and a second finding would add nothing to the effect of the first finding.

There is no argument necessary as to the fact that the court must determine if unjustifiable acts to have been committed—those I have just mentioned. There is no argument needed to fix the degree of responsibility in each case. As to the names of the responsible parties, the convening authority has them; as to the question if further proceedings should be had in such cases, none is possible. This court, then, has no further duty to perform in the acts in question, further than to note them in its findings of fact. It will consider them later, possibly, in connection with reporting its conclusions to the general conduct of the personnel in question, as a whole.

Passing from the cases already settled, you are called upon to determine whether certain other alleged unjustifiable acts were committed. The case of the burning of two buildings and the impounding of some stock by Lieutenant Cekula is before the court. You will recall that Lieutenant Cekula was tried before a military commission that he burned two houses and impounded some stock. It is evident that the parties to the military commission in the department knew of the active warfare going on at the time in Haiti. Lieutenant Cekula was a witness and the commission did not realize that an officer might be expected to perform his duty. It has been well known in Haiti for some time that possession of arms and munitions in the districts infested with rebels is an offense punishable under martial law and no Haitian but even those in insurrection against the recognized Government of Haiti were tempted to keep munitions of war, openly or secretly.

The destruction of an enemy ammunition dump, together with the loss of the building in which the enemy ammunition was stored, has not heretofore been questioned as being other than a justifiable act. The value of the building in which the enemy ammunition is stored is not taken into consideration by our officers operating in Haiti is simply a matter of fact that they are excessively considerate of Haitian property.

The case is so clearly outside the inquiry into alleged unjustifiable acts that the case of temporarily taking charge of unprotected cattle to prevent them pending delivery to their rightful owners, that the judge advocate did not have considered bringing the matter before the court had it not been for his knowledge that the convening authority specially desired the matter brought. Owing to the unwarranted suspicion that has been cultivated ers, it was a matter of no difficulty for the defendant before a mission to create such a doubt of the honor of one of our officers. The acts were brought to the attention of the Secretary of the War, which raised a suspicion of his honor and even common honesty. It is a concrete case of the unfortunate results of throwing suspicion upon officers who have served or are serving in Haiti. This young officer—the most distinguished junior officer of the Marine Corps—a man who has won the very highest honors from our Government and from the Government of France, who holds a medal of honor through the War Department, who has been decorated with the Legion of Honor, the supreme honor for the soldier which the French people can bestow, this lieutenant of marines, who a few days ago was one of our adopted Americans, so happy in the satisfaction of good work well done for his Government and his corps, left the presence almost heartbroken. In spite of the assurances of his superiors that he has become an object of suspicion to his own Government, as not born in the United States and he never before knew what an American learns when first he studies American history, that he has held commissions in the military and naval service of our country, looked upon with suspicion and considered as fair targets by a number of persons in the United States; that a lifetime of sacrifice, of the service of his country, of gallant deeds performed for his countrymen, of spotless honor, the earning of the love and esteem of his superiors in the service of every rank and grade, none of these achievements of them together, serve as a shield to his reputation. He may at any time be called upon to answer the public attacks of any evil-suspecting person. In the eyes of a certain part of the public the proof that he has the ordinary decent instincts of the average American. He is the one who has to produce proof by judicial process, and the case is conspicuous, but the whole Marine Corps is, necessarily, likewise, to some degree. I emphasize the point with the hope that the court and the convening authority may find it right and proper to take the case of the young officers and enlisted men who are not yet suspected of inhumane and dishonorable acts, when it comes to the conclusion of the court and to the action of the convening authority.

The case is conspicuous, but the whole Marine Corps is, necessarily, likewise, to some degree. I emphasize the point with the hope that the court and the convening authority may find it right and proper to take the case of the young officers and enlisted men who are not yet suspected of inhumane and dishonorable acts, when it comes to the conclusion of the court and to the action of the convening authority.

The case is the one where Mr. Lang, a former marine and former member of the Marine Corps, was accused of having committed so many injustices, such as could only have been committed by a being of the devil, the kind of killings that have characterized unfortunate Haiti in its history for generations past.

Of the weight to be attached to the testimony of the various witnesses and the other cases before the court for determination it is for the court to take into consideration the degree of intelligence of the witness, whether he has any interest in the outcome of the case, whether he tends to cause him to color his testimony, whether he testifies as one telling a well-rehearsed story, and resists attempts to depart from the line of his text, or whether he simply responds to questions asked, admitting knowledge or ignorance, as the case may be, without apparent calculation as to the effect on his testimony.

Recess is an interested party, or because he shows animus in the case, or because he appears very ignorant, or exceptionally intelligent, or because he is a witness or an unwilling one, none of these things bind the judgment of the court, but they are all proper matters to be considered by the court in connection with the testimony of each and every witness. Moreover, the court is precluded from considering the general conditions of the country, the state of mind of the population, where such matters appear to explain the attitude which a witness may have indicated while on the stand.

The court, the trial lawyer, a more skillful examiner, undoubtedly would have conducted the examination of the various witnesses as to put such questions as would give them stronger relief. However, I trust to the experience of the court as to what is proper for such skill on the part of the judge advocate. It is necessary, no doubt, to ask the court to recall the testimony of Mr. Lang in reply to the accusations against him. The scene was too painful for any humane spectator in so short a time. Surrounded by the vultures who had gathered in the hope of a victim for their unclean. The white-headed vultures more disgusting than their black-headed. He faced them and told his story in simple fashion. It is true his emotion. He was too much affected to be other than natural.

Had Mr. Lang been the cold-blooded murderer he was accused. He had his heart been filled with malice and all manner of evil. The men, would have been his manner of defense? Would he have treated his accusers so gently in his reply, would he have sought to excuse any malice, or of perjury? Could an unclean heart have prompted him to do so. Him, who said of His enemies, "Forgive them, Father they know not what they do." In place of condemning him, does it not seem right and proper for the court to record that the service is proud that Mr. Lang wore the uniform of a marine?

In the case of Sergeant Williams the court must again determine as to whether a specific unjustifiable homicide was committed. What was it? What evidence was produced? The witnesses for the prosecution were all before you. If some of them were to be otherwise, it is not surprising. I did not guarantee them. I have been as surprised had I not been interviewing other alleged witnesses before and found that a few simple questions brought out the fact that they assumed the repetition of a rumor he has heard is the same as their testimony as to facts within his own knowledge, known from personal observation. The tests used to determine the weight of the testimony called for in this case, too, if the court should think there is the slightest doubt Williams being innocent of the charge against him.

It may not be relevant to a weighing of the testimony, but one of the interesting questions that are suggested by the cases that came before the court. Why are all the accused, men whose very appearance suggested the type of the upright soldier, clear-eyed and with nothing of evil stamped on their countenances?

Had the court been setting within the territorial jurisdiction of this court, there would have been a means whereby perjury committed before this court could have been properly punished, through prosecution in Federal court. For perjury committed in testifying before the court in Haiti, I know of no method of reaching the perjurer. I desire to point in explanation of my not having suggested to the court evidence against one of the witnesses. My recollection is that that witness was available for whatever further testimony there is in the record wherein unjustifiable acts are charged. I have no further comment to make in this case although the defense would deserve consideration were it considered. A defense is needed.

The specific acts which were alleged, and the only ones that even of this kind of admissible testimony for the prosecution could be found for, were brought to your judgment.

I pass now to paragraph 2 of the precept: What testimony or evidence is there in the record on which you can base a conclusion as to whether the indiscriminate killing of natives has been going on for some time. Two isolated cases of murder, of which you have evidence, do not constitute a charge. And have you any other evidence that does? There is evidence that a few hundred Haitian insurgents and bandits have been killed by the Haitian gendarmes, the latter under command of marines. Other evidence is available, but still entitled to some weight, increases the number of Haitians in action to about 2,250. The period of hostilities extends over a period of five years, with extensive warfare in the country for a considerable period.

It was impossible to procure exact and reliable evidence of the total number of Haitians in the field; they were, however, numbered by thousands. The different bands operating at various times and places. The men who our men had to meet and overcome were savages who operated free of the restraints of civilized warfare. Not only did they give no quarter to the prisoners, but with unspeakable tortures the prisoners they took, whether Haitian gendarmes; they mutilated in horrible manner the bodies of the dead on the field, as well as the bodies of those prisoners whom they killed by torture. Not only did they thus violate the laws of warfare, but also committed upon the noncombatant Haitians, old men, women, and children, the most awful crimes. For their acts, not exceeded in brutality by any of the savages at any time, they forfeited any claim to treatment as those who abide by the rules of land warfare. It would have to refuse every one of them quarter on surrendering and to execute last member of those bands. That this was not done is clear but there was no indiscriminate killing of natives who had taken to us. Time and again those natives in the field were given over to surrender, with no penalty attached. They were not only allowed to go free, but work was provided for them—many of them—and discrimination was made between the followers and their more chiefs.

to-day in Haiti, free to come and go, savages who were of those to death the wounded prisoner who fell into their hands. Do we prominent citizens of Port au Prince, of Haiti, clamoring for justice to these criminals? Do those who write in American publications matters, who claim to have full knowledge of all that has gone on to assault the marines and call for justice on them—do these, too, for them? Does it throw any light on the situation to know that parts of those assailants of the service are touched only by alleged claims, while most horrible atrocities committed on our own flesh in our own, if we be true Americans—leaves them indifferent, not content, as some of them can not entirely disguise their feeling of more marines were not victims in this savage warfare. The record only explain the discrepancy in the killed on either side. I have to say that neither the court nor the convening authority needed evidence that any enemy forces that attempt to exchange small-arm fire are bound to suffer much heavier casualties than the marines. A brigade of marines proved that when they first met the best infantry command had to offer, if it ever needed proof.

it, there was not a single article in any American publication that men for their straight shooting then. It was only when their down Haitian savages that condemnation followed. There can not against it, however, the evidence in the record being conclusive in arms against the Haitian Government were shot down in it. As to whether there was shooting after resistance ceased, the one surrendered immediately or shortly after combat had ceased to the number killed in action is entitled to your consideration. proper to consider whether there would have been such large number, natives who had been in the field more than once, if our had a habit of indiscriminate killing.

attempt to cover the question of the general conduct of the per naval service in Haiti since July 28, 1915. All data on file in it on the subject has been before you; you commenced and have in special study of the subject matter from the day the court to. As I have previously stated, my opinion is that you are not to the bare facts recorded in the record of the proceedings in force conclusions for the convening authority. It would be presumptuous attempt to review the activities of the service in Haiti for your if the court otherwise reaches a conclusion that the conduct of Haiti has been excellent, the question arises why have appar writers—and some of those who have written of Haitian matters which—conveyed the idea that they believed there have been many homicides and indiscriminate killings by our men? A partial answer be that of the writers there were authors who were not soldiers who are not authors. The author, hearing men speak of "bumpers," thinks he hears of unjustifiable killings. He does not know language: He does not know that soldiers refer to those who have in action—his own comrades as well as the enemy—as having been

The soldier, intending to refer to certain individuals as being on of having committed unjustifiable acts, and not knowing the authors, unintentionally uses language which to the reading public disgraces actions to the whole Marine Corps and particularly marines, officers and men, serving in Haiti.

partial explanation is the manner of reporting matters which the it have. I might mention the incident of the Haitian who came to command of gendarmes in Port au Prince and complained not received the full value for a horse which had been taken for uses by a gendarme officer. His proper procedure was to make his district commander, but he went over his head and reported to the department commander in Port au Prince. He was received very cordially, his statement taken down, and he was assured that an investigation would be commenced immediately; and if he had not received fair value for his arrangements would be made to pay him the difference. After being pleased with the interview; and leaving the department commander's office over to the headquarters of the gendarmerie. Without stating that he had made a report before to the department commander, he reported the complaint to the assistant chief of the gendarmerie. Again he was assured that an investigation would be made from the data taken down, which he took. From there he went to the office of the brigade commander. When he was told what had happened before, he again made the same report. He was received courteously and enjoying his visit, he next proceeded to the interior of Haiti, where he lodged the same complaint. While at the department commander received the report he had written to the district commander ordering an investigation. That letter had been in his office before the department commander received an order from the headquarters to make an investigation. The next morning the department commander received instructions from the brigade commander to make an investigation of the alleged unjustifiable act. Later on, the same day the department commander received, through the chief of the gendarmerie, a letter from the secretary of the interior inviting attention to the case; that a full investigation would be made and justice done.

A person making a casual investigation of this incident would find there were numerous cases of unjustifiable acts. If he had gone to the interior, to brigade headquarters, gendarmerie headquarters, department headquarters, in each place he would have heard of the same thing without full payment being made. That might explain how the stories became enlarged and wound up.

A matter that has confused some minds in considering the situation in Haiti: They assume that the United States exercises military government in Haiti; that, consequently, every governmental act in Haiti is the act of the approval of, the United States military representatives in Haiti. If that were true, the scope of this inquiry would be greatly enlarged. The situation in question is based neither on law or on fact. In law and in fact the United States has a right to and does influence the recognized government of Haiti to some extent, as well as assist it. It is incorrect, however, to charge the officers of the occupation with any alleged acts of oppression towards the people on the part of the Haitian government.

The matter of the corvée is a case in point. Corvée is forced labor, quite similar to "road work" in rural communities in the United States. The officers of the naval forces in Haiti had anything to do in enforcing the law respecting corvée, except some of those detailed to duty under the United States Government. Even the latter were only in part responsible for the enforcement of the law. The local officials—Haitians—were the ones who enforced and handled the matter of collecting the laborers. It appears that the enforcement was made by the chief of the gendarmerie to avoid abuse and oppression in the enforcement of the law. If the Haitian officials, or the Haitian people, utilized corvée for oppression and abused their authority, it is not a matter which this court can inquire. The American officers have neither the right to appoint or remove Haitian officials, and in the discipline of the Haitian government the chief thereof is responsible only to the President of Haiti. As the Marine Corps he is responsible for his personal acts to the Navy. While it is without the scope of this inquiry, the court undoubtedly knows the efforts that have been made by the marines in charge of the gendarmerie to state of discipline and to eradicate their Haitian habits from their fellow Haitians. It is well known that strong measures to discipline have been employed in the gendarmerie and that several examples have been taken place where gendarmes have been convicted of serious offenses against their own people.

In apparent contradiction to my statement that the Government of Haiti is not, in fact, under the control of the occupation, is the testimony of the President of Haiti. I will not enter at length on a discussion of the matter attached to his testimony. The court has heard the testimony of witnesses. It may be of value to the court in considering the weight to be attached to his testimony to ask this question: If testimony coming from a source is entitled to such weight, how much weight shall we give to testimony coming from lower sources in the same country?

subject of what kind of government exists in Haiti, another witness may be confused in mind. General Barnett testified that "the issue of martial law with a military governor in command." We may not have Haiti in mind, because he was testifying in regard to matters of court needs no testimony to enlighten it in this connection, since official notice of the existence of a government recognized by the

The status of our forces has also been clearly defined in an opinion of the Judge Advocate General, which opinion has been approved by the Navy. Possibly the witness knew the facts in the case, or meaning for the words he used, which he could explain, if it was important enough to recall him to stand for that purpose.

Professional politicians of Haiti have always set themselves against the occupation. It is an historical fact and needs no proof at this time. Men who have been and still are active in politics have had one mind, one thing only they strive for; one thing only will content them, the public treasury. And it is evidence of their inefficiency that few of them have, ever been able to get away with any considerable loot from the public treasury. Incidental to the main object is the use of power to destroy personal enemies and to acquire loot from the public treasury.

In the foregoing to lead up to this: If the professional politicians in Haiti, it must be that the occupation is giving Haiti a more stable government. If the politicians who now hold office support the occupation heartily, and only those out of office complained of it, it is simply a case of the "ins" and the "outs." But, with a few exceptions, all the professional politicians denounce the occupation. They are dissatisfied, since they get little more than their official that crimes our people might commit against the better class of people, to the peasants—those without the benefit of schooling), would not conceivably equal in effect and in their atrocious nature have been committed against them by the lower class—the professional politician. Yet these same professional politicians, these Haitians, are the ones who spread the improbable tales against the officers, which are thereafter repeated in the press of the United States who are easily deceived, to use a gentle phrase.

Officers of scandal had hunted for concrete cases as faithfully and as have the responsible officers who have served in Haiti, they probably have been instrumental in bringing to justice one or two individuals who would have been clearly convicted, and necessarily so, that charges are slanders and nothing else.

Christian country; we make war as a Christian country should. The Navy issued orders to the naval forces in Haiti to exercise restraint in dealing with the Haitians, even those conducting a campaign against those forces which in accordance with law and treaty were preserving order in that country. was finished, all parties thereto withdrawing.

Having thoroughly inquired into all the facts and circumstances of the allegations contained in the precept and having considered the evidence, finds as follows:

FINDING OF FACTS.

Finds that two unjustifiable homicides have been committed, one of the personnel of the United States Naval Service which has occurred since July 28, 1915, and that 16 other serious acts of violence perpetrated against citizens of Haiti during the same period by United States personnel.

Finds further that these offenses were all isolated acts of individual in every case the responsible party was duly brought to trial by a court-martial, convicted and sentenced.

3. The court has found no evidence of the commission of any otherifiable homicides or other serious unjustifiable acts of oppression or against any of the citizens of Haiti or unjustifiable damage or destruction of their property caused by any of the personnel in question.

4. In view of the fact that the only unjustifiable acts found by the court have been committed are those wherein disciplinary action has been taken and where no further proceedings could be had in the matter, the court has not deemed it necessary to report further upon the question of culpability.

CONCLUSIONS.

Referring to paragraph 2 of the precept, it is the conclusion of the court that there have been no proper grounds for the statement that "practically no criminate killing of natives has been going on for some time," as stated in a letter from Brig. Gen. George Barnett, United States Marine Corps, to John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps.

Referring to the amendment to the precept, calling for the conduct of the court as to the general conduct of the personnel of the naval service, since July 28, 1915, the court does not consider that the small number of isolated crimes or offenses that have been committed by a few individuals in the service during the period in question are entitled to any considerable weight in forming a conclusion as to the general conduct of such personnel. It is inevitable that some offenses would be committed. However, considering the conditions of service in Haiti, it is remarkable that the offenses were so few in number and that they all may be chargeable to the ordinary defects of human character, such defects as result in the commission of similar offenses in the United States and elsewhere in the best regulated communities.

The general conduct of our troops of occupation can be fairly judged by the results of that occupation.

Now, for the first time in more than 100 years, tranquility and order of life and property may be said to prevail in Haiti.

The Haitian people themselves welcomed the coming of our men and are willing to have them depart.

The establishment and maintenance of tranquil conditions and order of life and property all over the Republic of Haiti has been a long, arduous and dangerous and thankless task. That task our marines have performed with fidelity and great gallantry.

The court can not refrain from recording its opinion of much, and of the most serious part, of the reflections which have been made upon the men who have served in Haiti.

The outstanding characteristic of those officers, from the brigade down, has been their sympathetic attitude toward every step that would result in a betterment of the country and to improvement in the physical and moral conditions of the population.

With slender resources and inadequate administrative authority, the court has accomplished much, where anything more than suppression of organized crime seemed impossible.

The above remarks apply with particular force to those officers and men of the Marine Corps who have been serving as officers of the court in Haiti.

After a careful study of the matters in issue, based not only on the record in the court but, also, other original and reliable sources of information, the court's own observations while in Haiti, the court regards the charges which have been published as ill considered, regrettable and thoroughly unwarranted reflections on a portion of the United States Marine Corps. The performance of difficult, dangerous, and delicate duty in Haiti in a manner that has resulted in the suppression of organized crime, instead of calling for adverse criticism, is entitled to the highest commendation.

The record of the proceedings of this twenty-first day of the inquiry has been read and approved, and the court having finished the inquiry, then, at 11 a. m., adjourned to await the action of the convening authority.

It is believed that only about two weeks have been expended in the preparation of these two reports, and while a longer time would have resulted in more complete and, possibly, more information, the information contained in the reports are believed to be accurate facts.

Neither dated nor marked the letters "secret" or "confidential," but they are for your part for you.

I requested that you carefully read over paragraph 274 in order to see if that it is the exact material you desired to be inserted.

I did not prepare these reports with any idea of molding them for any purpose but simply to set forth what was in the Marine Corps files, records,

Gen. George Barnett, United States Marine Corps.

Secretary of the Navy, via the major general commandant.

Report on affairs in the Republic of Haiti, June, 1915, to June 30,

In accordance with your oral orders the following report, covering the activities of the marines in the Republic of Haiti from June, 1915, to June 30, 1915, on information secured from the official files, records, and histories of the United States Marine Corps, is submitted.

Operation sweeping over the Republic of Haiti in 1915, the U. S. S. Albatross (flagship of Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, commanding the force) and the U. S. S. Eagle landed a force at Cape Haitien, Republic of Haiti, to protect American and other foreign lives and property. The Government of the Republic of Haiti being overthrown on July 27, 1915, the U. S. S. Washington, on July 26, 1915, proceeded to Port au Prince, leaving the U. S. S. Eagle at Cape Haitien to protect American and other foreign lives upon arrival at Port au Prince on July 27, 1915. Rear Admiral Caperton immediately assumed control of the situation.

On July 27, 1915, while the U. S. S. Washington was en route Cape Haitien, Port au Prince, Rear Admiral Caperton sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy:

Spatech from Port au Prince reports a revolutionary faction at Port au Prince Tuesday morning overthrown Guillaume government. Revolutionary faction now controlling Government officials, including Guillaume, have taken refuge in Dominican legation. Leader of revolution not yet known.

Legation at Port au Prince reports outgoing Government shot prisoners, including ex-President Zamor, and a large number of wounded in flight. Latest cablegram from American legation at Port au Prince as follows: 'French legation threatened and forced entry at Port au Prince purpose taking out President. English chargé d'affaires and French chargé d'affaires cabled for ships. Situation very grave.'

Port au Prince at present quiet, but growing uneasy. General Blot received in Port au Prince stating revolutionists had control city and asked for aid. This message signed by Delva, Robin, Etienne, and Delencourt, Withdrawn detachment from shore and am proceeding with Washington to Port au Prince. Am leaving Eagle to tend situation Cape Haitien. Have company of marines, naval station, Guantanamo Bay, stand by to embark on Jason for expeditionary service in Haiti, unless otherwise ordered. The Jason will use this company reinforce Washington's battalion if situation requires.

4. On July 28, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton dispatched the following telegram to the Secretary of the Navy:

"Dominican Legation violated Tuesday; General Oscar, chief of armament force, removed and killed. At about 10.30 a. m. this morning French Legation invaded by mob of about 60 Haitians, better class. President forced removed from upstairs room and killed at legation gate: cut in pieces and paraded about town. No government or authority. Many rival leaders in town. Am landing force in city for purpose of preventing rioting and for protection foreigners' lives and property and order. Have directed naval station, Guantanamo Bay, to send company to Port au Prince. Account large area city will require regiment of United States at once for policing and patrolling."

5. At this time the U. S. S. Washington, in addition to the regular detachment of 67 enlisted men, carried the Twelfth company of marines, strength of 96 enlisted men under command of Capt. Giles Bishop, Jr., Lieut. Julian P. Willcox being the junior company officer. Capt. George Van Orden, in addition to commanding the marine detachment of the U. S. S. Washington, was the cruiser squadron marine officer on the staff of Rear Admiral Caperton and senior marine officer present. Second Lieut. Lester S. Wass, junior marine officer on board the U. S. S. Washington.

6. Seventy-seven enlisted men of the Twenty-fourth Company of marines, under command of Capt. William G. Fay, Jr., stationed at the marine naval station, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, embarked on board the U. S. S. Jason 7 p. m. July 28, 1915, sailed at 10 p. m. the same date, arrived and disembarked at Port au Prince 4 p. m. July 29, 1915.

7. The following is an extract from a communication received by the general commandant July 30, 1915, from the Chief of Naval Operations, Department, concerning the Twenty-fourth Company:

"On the 28th instant the commandant of the naval station, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, was directed to send all available marines at that station on board the U. S. S. Jason to Port au Prince. The order was issued by the department at 10 o'clock, and the Jason sailed at 10 o'clock the same evening. The department appreciates the promptness of the execution of this order."

8. The major general commandant quoted the above in a letter to Captain William G. Fay, the second paragraph of the letter reading as follows:

"This office is much gratified at receiving such a communication from the department, and congratulates you upon the efficiency displayed by your command when tested."

9. At 3 p. m. July 28, 1915, the Acting Secretary of the Navy sent the following message:

"State Department desires that American forces be landed Port au Prince, Haiti, that American and foreign interests be protected; that representatives of France be informed this intention; informed that their interests will be protected, and that they be requested not land. In acting this request, use your knowledge present condition Port au Prince and act at discretion. Department has ordered Jason with marines Guantanamo Bay proceed to Port au Prince. If more forces absolutely necessary wire immediately."

10. Under orders of the Navy Department, and in cooperation with the Department, Rear Admiral Caperton landed a provisional regiment of marines, under command of Capt. George Van Orden, United States Marine Corps, at Port au Prince, on the afternoon of July 28, 1915, and occupied the city. The First Battalion was formed with three companies of bluejackets, was under the command of Lieut. Fred H. Poteet, while the Second Battalion, composed of two companies of marines, was commanded by Capt. Giles Bishop, Jr., Second Lieutenant Willcox commanded the First (Twelfth Marine Company and Second Lieutenant Wass the Second (Washington's marine detachment) Company of Captain Bishop's battalion.

11. The landing was made in ship's boats at Bizoton, which is just east of the Haitian Navy Yard and about 2½ miles to the southeast of Port au Prince. The force entered the city from the south at about dusk and by midnight the occupation was complete and the force disposed to afford protection to life and property. No resistance was encountered except some sniping at the marines of the First Battalion, which fire was returned, resulting in 2 Haitians being killed and 1 wounded.

ration is described in the following radiogram sent by Rear Admiral to the Secretary of the Navy on July 28, 1915:

at Port au Prince, decided on after consulting with American representatives, French minister, and British chargé d'affaires. Informed police and three others, who seemed to be leaders ashore, of my mind and protect lives and property and preserve order. They are landing, but said they could not guarantee peaceful entering, all they could to explain our intentions to populace and prevent and would cooperate with us. Des Cartes (French warship) excluded; no foreign men-of-war in harbor excepting Washington at present immediate landing necessary. Landing made at Bizoton with 100 of marines, three companies of seamen at 5.50 p. m. U. S. S. conditions Cape Haitien quiet. Eagle has landed 20 men Cape Haitien French consulate for fear attack on refugees there. Landing at French consul."

In the morning of July 29, 1915. Rear Admiral Caperton sent message to the commander in chief:

Force has entered Port au Prince and bivouacked for night at northern part of city. Guard placed at legation. No serious

Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, dated 1915, contains the following excellent statement of facts condensed up to July 31, 1915:

Appearing imminent in Haitian affairs during the latter part of Rear Admiral Caperton, commander of the Cruiser Squadron, at the State Department, was ordered with the U. S. S. Washington to Port au Prince. Learning, on July 27, that a revolutionary faction had overthrown the government and palace at Port au Prince, overthrowing the government, the admiral withdrew the marines he had landed at Port au Prince, leaving the U. S. S. Eagle in charge of the situation. It appeared that about 70 political prisoners, President Zamor, had been executed, and that President Guillaumet's cabinet had taken refuge in the French and Dominican legations at Port au Prince. Rear Admiral Caperton found that the French Legations had been violated by a mob of about 600 men, that President Guillaume had been slain at the gate of the legation and his body cut in pieces and paraded about the town. His authority was found to exist in the city and the admiral thereupon, as always, with the Department of State, immediately sent a force into the city for the purpose of preventing further rioting and destruction of foreign life and property. Such revolutionary authority was sent and agreed to cooperate with the admiral to this end. Marines were brought from Guantanamo Bay (Twenty-fourth Commandment). There was but slight resistance to the landing, and the forces were welcomed by the masses of the Haitian people.

On the 28th of July a committee of Haitians was formed who agreed to disarm soldiers and civilians and to place all arms in the palace under the supervision of delegates met and endeavored to elect a president. On the 29th of July a disorderly faction of the Haitians made an attack on the forces at Port au Prince. The attack was repulsed, but two Americans, Gompers and Cason S. Whitehurst, were killed. On the 30th of July the French cruiser Des Cartes arrived at Port au Prince and because of their legation, landed a guard."

Annual report of the Major General Commandant, dated October 1915, Secretary of the Navy, contains the following paragraph:

3. Owing to disturbances in Haiti, the commander of the Cruiser Squadron landed a force of marines and sailors at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien. The force of marines consisted of the Twelfth Company and the Twenty-fourth Company of the Washington. This was reinforced the next day by the Twenty-fourth Company from Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, a total of about 100 men.

On the late of July 17, 1916, the "Commander Cruiser Force, United States Fleet," addressed the following letter to the Secretary of the Navy:

Reinquishing command of the cruiser force, Atlantic Fleet, I express my appreciation of the valuable services which have been rendered by the trying conditions encountered in Haiti and Santo Domingo.

mingo, by Captain Van Orden, United States Marine Corps, in his capacity as a squadron marine officer on my staff. The quality of his work should be peculiarly fitted therefor by natural ability and thorough training. Several weeks, during which there was only one line aid on my staff, he performed duties outside the ordinary scope of a marine officer.

"2. Captain Van Orden was in command of the provisional regiment of marines and bluejackets, which took the city of Port au Prince, Haiti, July, 1915. The Commander Cruiser Force desires especially to commend him for the excellent planning and equally excellent execution of this task. Nothing but the best of generalship, seconded by the loyal and efficient cooperation of all members of this regiment, could have effected the great loss of life, the occupation, at dusk, of this city, filled as it was by unfriendly citizens and soldiery. Its accomplishment reflects great credit on the whole naval service.

"3. It is recommended that, for his part in this taking of Port au Prince, the department address a letter of commendation to Captain Van Orden, and append a copy thereof to his record."

17. On January 17, 1916, the commander, cruiser squadron, wrote the following letter to the Secretary of the Navy (Operations):

"1. The commander cruiser squadron desires to commend the good order and the discipline displayed by the officers and men of the Twelfth Company of Marines on the occasion of the occupation of Port au Prince, Haiti.

"2. On this occasion this company was a part of a battalion commanded by Capt. Giles Bishop, Marine Corps. The company itself was directed by the command of First Lieut. Julian P. Willcox, Marine Corps. I am following from the report of the commander of the landing force, Captain Van Orden, Marine Corps:

"For more than an hour and a half, while the light faded to darkness, the company was endangered by occasional shots from snipers, but did not suffer a single shot, although they disarmed a large number of Haitian soldiers. They took possession of the arrondissement. The calmness and excellent discipline of the section commanded by Sergt. John E. Reynolds are particularly noteworthy, as this section was placed in the most trying position."

"3. I request that a copy of this letter be attached to the service record of Capt. Giles Bishop, Marine Corps; First Lieut. Julian P. Willcox, Marine Corps; and Sergt. John E. Reynolds, Marine Corps, and to the office of the Twelfth Company in the major general commandant's office."

18. The Secretary of the Navy placed the following indorsement on the letter in forwarding it to the major general commandant:

"The department takes pleasure in forwarding the attached highly satisfactory report of the services of the Twelfth Company of Marines."

19. About 9.30 o'clock, Friday morning, July 30, 1915, Col. John A. L. acting commandant of the Marine Corps during the absence of Major General Barnett, was directed by Admiral William S. Benson, Secretary of the Navy, to embark an expeditionary force of 500 men on the Connecticut at Philadelphia, by 8 a. m. the following day. July 31, Colonel Lefebvre selected five companies of the Second Regiment, United States Navy, from the navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa., for this duty.

20. Telegrams were at once sent to all officers on leave, directing them to report immediately to Philadelphia. Orders were prepared in the form of a letter to the brigade commander to embark the Seventh, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Twentieth Companies, fully equipped for shore service in the Philippines. Telegrams were sent to Col. Eli K. Cole, at Annapolis; Lieut. Col. Leif E. Moses, at New York; Lieut. Col. William C. Dawson, A. P. M., at New York; Maj. Louis M. Gulick, at the Marine Barracks, Navy Yard, Washington; and other officers to proceed immediately to Philadelphia to join the Twelfth Regiment not later than 8 a. m. the following day. Lieut. Col. W. Neville, the former commanding officer of the Second Regiment, had been detached from that regiment preliminary to being assigned to the command of the American Legation Guard at Peking, China. Orders were also sent to the New York Barracks to send a detachment to augment the Twelfth Regiment, and to the Norfolk Barracks to have one officer and 125 men embark on the U. S. S. Connecticut as she came down the coast. Arrangements were made for the loading of 30,000 rations, hospital stores, ammunition, machine guns, full expeditionary equipment, etc., on board the Connecticut.

21. At 8 a. m., Saturday, July 31, 1915, Colonel Cole arrived at the navy yard Philadelphia, and found his regiment completely equipped and board the vessel, where all regimental stores and equipment had loaded. The U. S. S. Connecticut sailed from Philadelphia at late, and the following morning at 5.30 stopped off the Chesapeake embarked the detachment from Norfolk. The U. S. S. Connecticut at Port au Prince, Haiti, on August 4, 1915, and the marines were disembarked and all stores landed.

On July 31, 1915 Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, the brigade commander, the sailing of the Second Regiment on board the U. S. S. Connecticut the major general commandant, stated in part:

that the depot, the Second Regiment headquarters, and my staff congratulated on their work—Captain Putnam especially, in his caring quartermaster of the First Regiment and brigade paymaster. Satisfactory to have such hearty and frictionless cooperation in one's work.

Colonel Ostermann was acting in the threefold capacity, aid, brigade post adjutant. Lieutenant Colonel Neville was without adjutant and required assistance.

Colonel arrived this morning to find his regiment on the dock, ready to board. Colonel Neville turned over the command, leaving nothing to do until after the departure of the ship."

The annual report of the major general commandant, dated October 6, 1915, is the following:

On July 30 the department directed that about 500 additional marines be sent to Port au Prince via the Connecticut. In less than 24 hours five companies of the Second Regiment (528 enlisted men) embarked with a full outfit board the Connecticut, and that vessel sailed for Port au Prince. Upon its arrival at its destination the marines were landed."

The prompt embarkation of the Second Regiment was commended in the report of the Navy Department, dated August 4, 1915:

The department is gratified to note the promptness of the execution of its order that a regiment of 500 marines embark on board the U. S. S. Connecticut for duty at Port au Prince. The department appreciates the management and teamwork that made it possible for a force of this size to be fully equipped in less than 24 hours from the time the orders were issued."

On July 31, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Navy Department that the situation at Port au Prince still unsettled but quiet during the day.

He was informed by the French minister that he received a dispatch from the French government stating that the French Embassy at Washington had been directed to inform the United States Government that France considered it necessary to land a legion guard at Port au Prince for national honor. The French minister repeated his conviction that we were able to protect life and property and assured me that he would confine his guard to the legion and not allow them to carry arms outside of the legion. He wishes to assure me that he does not intend in any way to interfere with my actions."

The Navy Department, from dispatches received to-day, evidently thinks that no de facto government exists at Port au Prince. No de facto government exists. All government functions are at present carried on by a committee practically under my direction."

Rear Admiral Caperton in this message also informed the department that he reported heavy firing off Cape Haitien and that Bobo intended to attempt to enter Cape Haitien; that United States forces might be required to occupy Cape Haitien; and to expect a request for another regiment."

The secretary of the Navy on July 31, 1915, informed Rear Admiral Caperton that he had no objection to landing of small guard of French troops to guard the situation."

On August 1, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Navy Department that if a regiment of marines is demanded by conditions at Port au Prince that a possible delay."

As described above, the Second Regiment of marines was dispatched on board the U. S. S. Connecticut at Port au Prince on August 4, and Rear Admiral Caperton informed the department on August 1, 1915:

"Port au Prince quiet during night except for ~~some~~ Mission, where mob about 12 men broke in and ~~several~~ Arms continued to be found. Until large force ~~arrived~~ reduce danger due presence these arms and ~~thereby~~ ~~was~~

31. In a later message on August 1, 1915, Bear ~~ARMED~~ ~~ARMED~~ ~~ARMED~~ the department as follows:

"Control Port au Prince without difficulty. ~~City~~ unsettled. Haitian soldiers said to be disarmed and retain organization, and I believe many have arms. ~~Inspection~~ inspection for arms and seizing many. ~~Have~~ Have for ~~murdered~~ in numbers during night. Wesleyan Mission ~~mother~~ murdered prisoner in jail was secreted therein. ~~price~~ in price, poorer classes without food and many ~~conditions~~ conditions justify issuing food under direction ~~humanity~~ humanity and greatly control populace."

32. On August 2, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton issued the following statement as follows:

33. In forwarding the above message Admiral Fletcher said: "If there is possibility that northern army of Hainan is at Port au Prince national question and attack our interests, the department consider the advisability of providing our forces with adequate forces to meet such an eventuality."

34. Rear Admiral Caperton on August 2, 1915, informed the French Minister that the "Des Cartes" (French warship) landed 1000 French troops at the French Consulate in Constantinople. The French Minister called this morning to thank me and the Government for protection afforded his legation by our landing.

35. Later on August 2, Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the President that "Professional soldiers called Cacos are largely responsible for the large number of Haitian revolutionists. The Cacos are bands under irresponsible and lawless chiefs, who side with the greatest inducement, and only nominally recognize the Haitians fear the Cacos and they practically control the country now in Port au Prince, about 1,500 Cacos retaining arms believed to have hidden arms and ammunition, but this message also contained the information that the demand for arms had been demanded by the Cacos and Congress. The demand was on the point of complying; that no other government in Haiti is not possible until Caco hands are broken, power broken," and that "the majority of the population are well disposed and will welcome disbanding Cacos and their leaders." Rear Admiral Caperton also insistently requested the additional

35. On August 3, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Board that:

"Last night found squads of native soldiers apparently unarmed" -- over the city. Challenged everybody and demanded counter-attack. Rise to uneasiness. With my present force can successfully combat."

Rear Admiral Caperton further reported in this same message that he believed he was "successful in this except from soldiers. Men who won the revolution fear action of the United States may result from securing to them result of overthrow of government. Other of all classes glad United States forces here to prevent this very arrival marines on Connecticut I will be able to prevent outbreak and security to foreigners living in outskirts who are clamoring for requests are being granted. Situation Cape Hatien unchanged.

36. Later on the 31, Rear Admiral Caperton reported:
"Believe time has come for settlement Haitian question; but for this - and in order that settlement may be permanent and government be and revolution may be ceased, must break up Caco hands. Must be - quell disturbance other points. Disturbances reported Les Cayes and J.-
and for these reasons, if "United States desires to settle Haitian q.- imperative that additional regiment of marines be sent immediately.

ernment of Vilbrun Guillaume was overthrown by General Delva, although there were 1,500 government troops in Port au Prince. Delva was acting in Bobo's interests. General Delva then proclaimed by revolutionary committee. Revolutionary committee at first ally under my direction, but now frequently give orders without regard and act more independently. This is unsatisfactory, but I must agents for the direction of affairs, or else must assume entire military control, which is undesirable at present.

Congress is in session, it has elective power only, there being no. Upon the election of a President, Congress acquires legislative power and the revolutionary committee loses all authority. Jealousy between military committee and Congress exists. While it elects a President, it desires my protection. The congressmen were practically appointed by President, and are not representative of the people. Killing and disorder are usually the result of elections.

Proposed by prominent Haitians that a provisional government be formed, composed of President and ministers to replace the revolutionary committee. Provisional government to proceed immediately to come to an agreement with the United States, to order a new election, dissolve the Congress, and the United States to maintain order and peace during the transition.

Many recommendations, but favor no faction and indicate preference for order. I make no promises except that order will be maintained and all Haitians will be protected."

U. S. S. Connecticut with the Second Regiment of marines on board Port au Prince on August 4, 1915.

Admiral Caperton on August 4 forwarded the following message from the U. S. S. Eagle at Cape Haitien to the department:

"Armed troops are now out of town. Bobo's troops attempted to enter town but were chased to the woods by the Eagle's 6-pounder guns, and are now informed that if they come close they will be fired upon. Bobo's troops are at Ives in Cape Haitien and I will see about committee of inquiry. There are about 800 troops in the vicinity."

Following radiogram was sent by Rear Admiral Caperton to the department August 4, 1915:

"Cape Haitien with Pacifique Nord Alexis and some troops. Some troops left Cape Haitien when Blot's troops from country entered 6 a. m. Wednesday. There have now left Cape Haitien. Nashville has landed and taken over the city. Quiet at Cape Haitien at present."

Following radiogram dated August 4, 1915, Admiral Fletcher approved Caperton's recommendation for an additional regiment of marines and stated that:

"In view of the fact that armed forces have already been landed in Port au Prince, and of the opinion that an expeditionary force of at least 1,000 additional troops should be sent there to provide against contingencies such as may arise on the part of Haitians outside of the city."

August 4, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the department:

"Port au Prince quiet. Regiment of marines ashore; stores and equipment landed. Blot left Cape Haitien for Monte Cristi, Santo Domingo, and Gonaïves. No further resistance to Bobo in north. Bobo's troops marching on Port au Prince due to arrive in about six days. Bobo promises disarmament on arrival Port au Prince. Cape Haitien quiet. Outbreaks reported at Miragoane, Jacmel, Haiti, Peti Riviere de Nippe in addition to these reported. Revolutionary committee at my order telegraphed all these places order must be restored; have reason believe this will be accomplished."

Admiral Caperton reported on August 5 that at 4 p. m. Thursday a detachment of marines and one company bluejackets occupied Fort National, Port au Prince, without firing a shot; that disturbances were reported in Gonaïves forming with threats of looting the customhouse; that he had sent on U. S. S. Oscarola and sent her to Gonaïves; and that Port au Prince quiet.

August 5, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported:

"Port au Prince quiet; committee safely formed but looking to Zamor or Bobo for support. Bobo wants control city; has about 2,000 soldiers in vicinity. Soldiers have hidden arms. Nashville outposts allowed Bobo soldiers to enter disarming; 450 former Blot soldiers refugees; bishop's palace occupied. United States forces insufficient maintain palace and patrol city."

44. On August 5, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported:

"Fourteen cannon of various kinds, 450 rifles, 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition in Fort National when occupied. Some unrest and agitation Port au Prince taking extra precautions to-night. No further news Cape Haitien. Sailed with commission 3 p. m. Thursday. At request, church authorities au Prince through chargé d'affaires and in view of unsettled conditions Haitien I authorized passage of about 16 Sisters of St. Joseph from Haitien to Port au Prince via Jason. Bobo and Bouamand on Jason."

45. On August 5, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported as follows department:

"The Haitian Congress to-day issued a bulletin that on Sunday it will elect a president, but at my request it has postponed the election. The time election is inopportune. Menos, the Haitian minister at Washington, if here would be elected by Congress, I am told, but in his absence I have been informed that Dartiguenave, now president of the senate, is the candidate to be elected. He, I have heard from many sources, is a man of personal patriotism, and ability. He has never been connected with any revolution and is anxious for Haitian regeneration. He realizes that Haiti must accept any terms demanded by the United States, and he professes to be ready to use all his influence with Haitian Congress to have Haiti agree to such terms. Should he be elected he must be sustained by the protection of the United States."

"This condition applies to anyone who may be elected. The only other candidate is General Bobo, who is said to be a man of patriotism and intellect. His friends maintain that he would work solely for his country's good. Only fear of Cacos would elect General Bobo, and if he were elected a revolution against him would undoubtedly break out unless the United States prevented it."

"All classes except the Cacos express great relief at the presence of American troops, as Americans afford the only hope of relief from government terror. It is universally believed here that should the American Government withdraw, the Government will lapse into complete anarchy. The United States must, in my opinion, elect to remain in Haiti until the native Government is self-sufficient and until the people are educated to respect and abide by the laws."

"There would be complete machinery for all Government functions. The President be elected now. Progress toward good government could be commenced with protection and influence by the United States. At the same time, except as directed by me, there is no central government and the Haitian people are anxious to have a President elected. Haitians also are present that the continuance of their independence may not be jeopardized by the United States."

46. On August 6, 1915, Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, the brigadier general, stationed at the marine barracks, navy yard, Philadelphia, received the following personal orders, signed by the Acting Secretary of the Navy:

"Proceed via U. S. S. Tennessee to Port au Prince, report on the status of the cruiser squadron temporary duty in command First Brigade United States Marines and other United States naval forces on shore in Haiti."

47. On this same date telegraphic orders were issued to the brigadier general reading in part as follows:

"Embark brigade headquarters, Third Company (signal company) First Regiment (less Second Company), fully armed and equipped for transportation Haiti temporary foreign-shore service which is ready to receive troops."

48. All leaves of absence of officers were revoked, and the First Brigade reinforced by a detachment of 75 men from Norfolk and several officers. The following day, the 7th, the expeditionary force was ready to embark. The Tennessee arrived at the navy yard, Philadelphia, from New York at 9 a. m., Monday, the 9th. All stores were loaded and the troops had breakfast at 8 a. m., the 10th, at which time the Tennessee sailed for Port au Prince. Upon arrival, on August 15, 1915, all troops were disembarked and stores landed.

49. The annual report of the major general commandant, dated August 1, 1915, contains the following:

"The commander of the cruiser squadron having again requested additional force of marines, headquarters of the First Brigade, the signal" panies of the First Regiment embarked on August 10 on board C and proceeded to Haiti, arriving there on the 15th. The expedition, together with its stores, was immediately landed, and since the brigade, under the command of Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, has been in the restoration and maintenance of good order and the presence in Haiti. Its service has been conspicuously efficient."

Rear Admiral Caperton reported on August 6, 1915, as follows:

"I have orders that all Haitian soldiers in Port au Prince not living quietly. At 11 a. m. began arresting those remaining; some resistance. One is injured. Two Haitian killed. * * * Connecticut landed in Haiti on August 10 a. m. Cape Hatien quiet."

On August 7, 1915, the Acting Secretary of the Navy sent the following letter to Rear Admiral Caperton:

"Under orders for Port au Prince, with 850 marines, 35 more soldiers. Colonel Waller. Upon their arrival, will you have sufficient military control city of Port au Prince and country immediately around it which it draws its food supply?"

Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the department on August 7, 1915,

"Bobo had formally resigned the position of chief executive, disapproved his cabinet before he landed at Port au Prince, on August 7, 1915, and his generals in northern Haiti to deposit their arms with American forces. Similar promises were given by Bourand and to his supporters in the north. Rear Admiral Caperton on this date further reported that the late election of a President is clamored for by all classes of Haiti. That there were "only two serious candidates, Bobo and Dartiguenave, that "in the presence of congressmen, Dartiguenave, president-elect, stated that congressmen are agreed that Haiti must and will agree to any terms proposed by the United States, "including right of inspection, when necessary, customhouse control, and cession outright, without compensation, St. Nicholas Mole." His report contained the additional information that the Haitians "insist that no Government can stand except through the protection of the United States. Without this protection, there would be anarchy in Haiti, according to their statements. Most Haitians are in favor of the Americans will withdraw their troops."

On August 7, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the department that the commission returned from northern Haiti on August 6, 1915; that succeeded in bringing all principal leaders in north to Port au Prince, including Bourand, Bourand, and Laroche, formerly of Blot party. Only two in northern Haiti now, Bourand and Bobo. Commission received assurance from Bourand that their forces would retain present position and would not further fighting. Question disarming was left for conference with the cruiser squadron. Since return commission both generals, after on board Washington, issued orders their troops proceed Cape Hatien to disarm."

On August 7, 1915, "Bandit Chief Desgants and 11 of his men captured several miles outside Port au Prince."

On August 7, 1915, the Acting Secretary of the Navy sent the following letter to Rear Admiral Caperton:

"The Haitians to fullest extent consistent with maintaining order and the situation and issue following proclamation:

"I am directed to assure the Haitian people United States has no object in Haiti but to insure, establish, and help to maintain Haitian independence and the maintenance of a stable and firm government by the Haitian people. No concession will be given to the Haitian people in their attempts to secure independence. It is the intention to retain United States forces in Haiti only so long as it is necessary for this purpose."

On August 9, 1915, the Acting Secretary of Navy sent the following letter to Rear Admiral Caperton:

"The Haitians wish you may permit the election of a president to Haiti. The election of Dartiguenave is preferred by United States. You are to assure the Haitians that the United States has no other motive than the desire to see the Haitians have a firm and lasting government by the Haitian people and wishes them to maintain both their political and territorial integrity unimpaired. That the Haitian Government grant no territorial concessions to any foreign governments will be upon by the United States. The question of the cession of Mole will be taken up later by the Government of the United States along with the other questions to be submitted to the reorganized government with regard to its relations to the United States."

57. On August 10, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported that in answer to a question as to whether he would support the Government if Dartiguenave were elected President, General Bobo replied "that he would not assist Dartiguenave's government nor accept him if elected." On this same date Rear Admiral Caperton reported Port au Prince was quiet, except Bobo troops were causing severe disturbances in vicinity of Grand Riviere, and that none of them had arrived at Cape Haitien to surrender their arms. "Ex-Governor of about 200 under General Auguste attacked St. Marc Saturday, August 7, repulsed by forces under committee of safety. Auguste and four followers killed."

58. On August 11, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported as follows:

"In conjunction with chargé d'affaires informed senators and deputies elected and presidential candidates of intentions and policies United States Government as set forth by Secretary of State in cable message of August 10 last night. Senators and deputies cordial. Election will be held tomorrow. Passed quietly Port au Prince, but considerable uneasiness and demonstrations, due approaching elections and desperate attitude Bobo and Zamor factions. Revolutionary committee issued orders dissolving Congress and attempted seal doors Chamber Deputies; anticipate their action tomorrow. Force to Chamber of Deputies and informed committee their action without authority. For this reason and account hostile and disturbing influence Bobo and Zamor factions have dissolved revolutionary committee and now they have no further authority Port au Prince and would be considered public enemies of United States of America if they attempted give orders or further menace United States policies. Have taken extra precautions against disorder during election; have placed Castine and Eagle at Port au Prince with landed men from them to reinforce landing force. Have assumed control of telegraph office. Petigoave quiet. Connecticut to-day held conference with ex-Bobo forces relative surrender arms at Cape Haitien."

59. On August 12, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Navy Department that on account of the disturbing actions of Bobo and Zamor at Cape Haitien and the inability to form civil government with neutral cause of their fear of the factions he was compelled to establish a provisional government at Cape Haitien with Commander Olmstead as military governor.

60. On August 12, 1915, Dartiguenave was elected President of the Republic of Haiti, Rear Admiral Caperton reporting the incident to the Secretary of the Navy in the following words:

"Day passed without disorder Port au Prince. Votes for President passed by Congress as follows: Dartiguenave, 94; Chauvin, 14; Thezan, 4; 1 blank. Dartiguenave was declared elected midst enthusiasm and immediately took oath of office. Following election Dartiguenave spoke, and never been chief any faction, band, or group, and that he will govern for benefit of Haiti, according to constitution and laws. He afterwards expressed appreciation of American forces, which he stated had made possible his free from intimidation. At 3 p. m. salute 21 guns was fired at Fort National and Haitian flag hoisted. Am continuing precautions against disturbances."

61. On August 13, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy directed Rear Admiral Caperton to exercise extreme caution concerning the firing of a salute to the Haitian flag since the Haitian Government "has not yet been recognized by the United States and will not be except upon certain conditions." Rear Admiral Caperton was further directed that "It is expected that the representative of the State Department to have carried through the Government's plan." Rear Admiral Caperton replied that "No national salute have been fired by American ships or forces in Haiti. I permitted them to enter and fire salute and hoist their flag at Fort National in accordance with time-honored custom in Haiti after election of President. I have not furnished military government of this city and consequently have not hoisted States flag on shore."

62. A slight disturbance occurred during the night of August 14-15 in the northern part of Port au Prince when a patrol was fired upon.

63. The U. S. S. Tennessee, with Colonel Waller, the First Regiment of Marines on board, arrived at Port au Prince on August 15, 1915.

64. On August 16, 1915, Colonel Waller sent the following message to the major general commandant:

command of naval force on shore Haiti this date. Colonel Cole commanded First Regiment. Colonel Kane commands Second Regiment headquarters and First Battalion sailed on Tennessee to Cape Haitien. Brigade headquarters Second Battalion, First and Third Company stationed Port au Prince."

August 17, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported that the population was hostile to the government of Dartiguenave and were ready to take any party; that the Cacos troops outside of Cape Haitien were in a state of incredulous relative terms submission offered by me and are now have occupied without resistance Leogane with one company of the First secure Port au Prince and food supply for town."

August 17, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported that he had sent one and one battalion of the First Regiment to Cape Haitien with a detachment of the Connecticut at that place. This report contains further information that the U. S. S. Eagle was on important duty between Leogane and Maragoane in support of a detachment of the First and pending American and foreign interests in that theater. Rear Admiral Caperton concluded his report with the statement that the United States "can not afford hamper me by reduction of my force if I have Haitian difficulties at this time."

The U. S. S. Castine landed one company of marines and assumed control of the town at 10 a. m., August 17, 1915. St. Marc was occupied in order to protect Port au Prince and to guard the food supply for that city.

August 18, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy directed Rear Admiral Caperton as follows:

"In accordance with the desires of the State Department, you are directed to take possession of the following customhouses: Jacmel, Aux Cayes, Jerimle, Petit Goave, Port au Prince. St. Marc, Gonaives, Port de Paix,

You will use the funds that are collected for organizing and maintaining an efficient constabulary for conducting such temporary public duty as may be required to afford immediate relief to the discharged soldiers and starving civilians by giving them employment and finally for the support of the Dartiguenave government."

August 20, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported that "Some disturbances in Port au Prince last night, many rifles still in hands of populace."

August 21, 1915, the major general commandant issued orders for the First Battalion stationed at Annapolis, Md., to "embark the battalion, and equipped both as Artillery and as Infantry, on board the Tennessee for passage to Port au Prince, Haiti."

August 22, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported that Cape Haitien was quiet, that minor disorders occurred in Port au Prince, a few shots were fired on the outskirts of the town, and that arms, machine guns, and ammunition continued to be found in Port au Prince.

August 23, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported: "Nashville visited Port de Paix with marine officers; purpose making reconnaissance to-day. Port de Paix very unsettled, but no troops there. No government troops."

"Will occupy Port de Paix Wednesday or Thursday."

Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the Navy Department on August 25, 1915, "Conditions Port au Prince uneasy, our patrols in town fired on by the Cacos." That the Nineteenth Company of marines arrived off Port au Prince they landed without opposition. This report also stated that: "The marine officers on reconnaissance duty at Miragoane Tuesday." "There were slight disorders at Cape Haitien on August 28, 1915, and shot being fired on by snipers."

August 30, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton ordered the Twelfth Company of marines to proceed on board the U. S. S. Eagle to Petit Goave and Miragoane to protect these ports for the purpose of protecting life and property and maintaining order. These orders were obeyed on August 31, 1915.

August 31, 1915, the Seventh Company of marines arrived off Gonaives, occupied that town and assumed charge of customs without opposition. This of course was accomplished under orders from Rear Admiral Caperton.

August 31, 1915, the Tennessee arrived in Port au Prince and landed the First Artillery Battalion, and the First and Ninth Companies, and moved to Cape Haitien where the Thirtieth Company was landed on August 31, 1915. The annual report of the Major General Commandant, dated October 6, 1915, contains the following information concerning the Artillery Battalion.

"Additional marines having been further requested the Artillery Battalion consisting of three companies of an enlisted strength of 318 men, and twelve 3-inch landing guns and two 4.7-inch heavy field guns, sailed on the Tennessee on August 26, 1915, for Port au Prince. The battalion joined the First Brigade on August 31, 1915."

eptember 4, 1915, the situation in north Haiti became critical.
 Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the Navy Department: "In i the Cacos situation is becoming critical because of their leaders, avoring to obtain exorbitant bribes. These Cacos will not come es and surrender arms and will not disband. * * * In Cape Haitien these Cacos have again begun investing the town and are preventing market people and foodstuffs from entering."

83. On September 4, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported: "Existing of Marietta and Sixth Company of marines will leave Port Sunday afternoon to occupy Jeremie and customhouse at that place. It was occupied on September 6, 1915. On September 7, 1915, Gonaïves reported "uneasy" and much excitement existing among the natives. Three hundred Cacos under Chief Rameau were close to the town, and a detachment landed from the Castine to reinforce the Seventh Company of marines. On September 11 it was reported that there were about 400 Cacos near stopping trade from entering that town.

84. Colonel Waller left Port au Prince on September 13, 1915, for a reconnoissance at St. Marc, Gonaïves, and Cape Haitien.

85. The cruiser squadron commander continued to occupy Sacramento, with the Fourth Company and Seventeenth Company of marines. It sailed from Port au Prince, and on September 15 the Fourth Company of marines occupied Aux Cayes, and on the next day Jacmel was occupied by the Seventh Company of marines.

86. On September 16, 1915, the United States-Haitian treaty was signed by Rear Admiral Caperton reporting to the Secretary of the Navy as follows:

"Treaty signed by plenipotentiary of United States and Haiti at Port-au-Prince, Thursday."

87. Rear Admiral Caperton reported on September 17, 1915, that he had been informed by the charge d'affaires that the United States had been informed by the Haitian Government, he had fired the national salute of 21 guns in honor of the President.

88. On September 18, a working party engaged in repairing a water tank at Varigosa, near Cape Haitien, was fired on by Cacos. The fire was returned, and one Caco was killed and several wounded. The Castine landed to support the marines. On the same date shots were exchanged between the Castine and Cacos, near Gonaïves, Rear Admiral Caperton reporting as follows:

"Mounted marines patrol, 8 men and 1 officer, encountered 75 Cacos near Gonaïves, 9 a. m., Saturday. Cacos attempted to surround patrol, but shots withdrew. No casualties. Very little food comes into Gonaïves."

89. On September 21, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

"Conditions that town (Gonaïves) relative to food and water are intolerable as to require immediate action. Therefore directed reconnoissance to Ennery in same manner as was done at Cape Haitien. We learned of preparations for opening railroad, they started firing at destroying railroad tracks one-half to 1½ miles outside of Gonaïves. A detachment of 24 marines immediately proceeded along railroad, where they encountered Cacos from behind barricades across railroad opened fire on our troops at 100 yards distance. Fire was returned by our troops, and Cacos were driven back into bushes for 1½ miles. No casualties our force. One chief and 5 Cacos were killed and 1 chief wounded. Sniping from bushes to east of town at intervals. * * *"

90. On September 21, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton reported that Colonel Waller had returned from his reconnoissance and inspection trip to Ennery, Haiti. Colonel Waller reported the Cacos hostile. "On September 21, 1915, three squads of marines, two machine guns, and wrecking material, under the command of Colonel Waller, opened railroad to Grand Riviere without difficulty. Cacos were excited, but offered no resistance."

91. Maj. Smedley D. Butler, with a detachment of marines and a detachment of engineers, left Gonaïves at 10 a. m., September 23, 1915, for Ennery, and by 4 p. m. the detachment had advanced 10 miles. Major Butler arrived at Ennery on September 24, 1915, and then returned to Gonaïves. At this time a detachment of marines was patrolling a 9-mile circuit around Gonaïves.

92. Major Butler took command of the forces at Gonaïves on September 25, 1915. These forces were the Seventh Company and the marine detachment from the Castine, total of 5 officers and 104 enlisted men. On this same day Major Butler ordered General Rameau not to interfere with food and water supplies with railroad and telephone lines, or disturb the peace. In the afternoon Major Butler took a detachment of marines to a point outside of Ennery where the Cacos had set fire to the railroad track, and, as Major Butler reported, the Cacos "had the impudence and misfortune to fire on our troops. Fire was returned and the outlaws were chased to the bushes. St."

the night. On September 21, 1915, a detachment of Major Butler's 1st to La Pierre to repair the water main. On the same date Major Butler's detachment to Portaux, had a skirmish about a mile outside the city limits, the skirmish continuing intermittently for about 3 miles, the detachment returning to Portaux. At Portaux Major Butler talked with General Ennery, turning him again as described above. The detachment then returned to the city. On the morning of September 22 a detachment of marines and returned the fire, and, taking possession of General Rameaux, to the outpost of the marines, where he promised Major Butler to his forces. A later conference was held, at which Captain Carter, Major Butler, and Rameaux were present. On September 23 the detachment left for Ennery with a detachment, reaching there the 24th. The detachment reached on the return trip, on September 25, 1915, without report, dated October 7, 1915, Colonel Waller commended Major Butler as follows:

Butler in this case displayed his usual energy and judgment. I gave orders to carry out the work to Portaux in three days, then proceed to accomplish the first part in two days. The instructions not to be delayed upon were carried out to the letter. * * *

On September 25, 1915, previous instructions from the commander cruiser had been received, the marines under Col. Eli K. Cole, at Cape Haitien, being ordered to march to Haut du Cap, the first patrol being sent to Haut du Cap 3 miles to the south of Cape Haitien. This patrol received orders that "It is desired that our forces do not start an action with the Cacos forces encountered should be informed that we do not propose to use force unless they interfere with and attack our forces, in which case we will use force." After reaching Haut du Cap and completing the reconnaissance return march was taken up. Just as the rear point cleared the Haitians began shouting, and the patrol was halted and faced the Cacos. The incident passed without any hostilities, and the patrol returned to Cape Haitien without further incident.

The next afternoon, September 25, another detachment of marines made a march to Petite Anse, about 3 miles to the southeast of Cape Haitien, under the same orders concerning neutrality as the first patrol. Colonel Cole's detachment company from the Connecticut to cover the outpost while this detachment completed its mission without op-positions were issued on September 25 by Colonel Cole that two detachments go out the next morning. One under Capt. Frederick A. Barker, with five squads of the Connecticut's marine detachment, to march to Portaux, thence to Plain du Nord, there to halt until about 2 p. m., when to return to Haut du Cap, join Capt. Chandler Campbell with a detachment of the Thirteenth Company, the combined command then to return to Cape Haitien. Captain Campbell, with two officers and six squads of the Thirteenth Company, is ordered to march to Haut du Cap, Madelaine, and Carrefour, and to remain at Haut du Cap, to remain there until the arrival of Captain Barker's detachment. Both of these patrols received the same instructions regarding neutrality as given the patrol mentioned in paragraph 94. At 8 a. m. on September 26 it was received that the attitude of the Haitians was hostile and that they would be opposed. Colonel Cole directed them to "go ahead." At 10 a. m. word was heard from the direction of Haut du Cap and First Lieutenant Campbell, with three squads, was sent to reinforce Captain Barker. Lieutenant Campbell's detachment was fired upon at a point about three-quarters of a mile from Haut du Cap and two marines were wounded. Further reinforcements were sent. Captain Barker's detachment, practically surrounded by Cacos, returned to Haut du Cap without opposition. Upon leaving Haut du Cap for Portaux the detachment was fired into from all sides, and four marines were killed—Frank J. Brandle, Vincent Gage, Bernard C. Glassner, and one private. Expecting reinforcements and a junction with Campbell's company, Captain Barker held his position. The detachment in Campbell's company was fired into from the rear on the way to Haut du Cap, and four marines were wounded. The Haitians killed in these actions were

160. Total casualties to the marines in these engagements were 10. On the return of Colonel Cole to Cape Haitien on the night of 26th he had a consultation with the senior naval officer present, to march to Quartier Morin the next morning and either attack and drive the Cansu place, their headquarters, or if they did not stand to occupy that town. troops.

98. Field order No. 8, dated September 27, 1915, contained the instructions for this operation. The advance guard was composed of the Eleventh Infantry, under Captain Hooker; the main body, under Captain Low, was made up of the Fifth, Twenty-third, and Thirteenth Companies, while the rear guard, under Captain Barker, consisted of the Connecticut's marine detachment. The advance guard reached Quartier Morin about 10.45 a. m. About this time a shot was fired by the column's rear guard. The town was entered and occupied with little resistance. One Haitian was killed during these operations.

99. On September 28, 1915, a reconnaissance was made to Plain de N to Haut du Cap over the same route that had been covered when the : : fired upon, but no resistance or hostilities were encountered.

100. These operations are described by Rear Admiral Caperton in the following radiograms to the Secretary of the Navy:

"Yesterday forenoon sent patrol to Haut du Cap. Afternoon sent patrol to Anse. Both patrols passed Cacos outposts, whose commanders waited until communication could be held with Caco chief, but no opportunity was encountered when patrol pushed on. To-day at 6 a. m. sent out two patrols, each 20 men each, first to Plain du Nord via Haut du Cap; second to Haut du Cap via Petit Anse and Carrefour Detrous. Patrol ordered to push through to the offensive action, but to defend themselves if attacked. First patrol pushed out Caco outposts, but went on. About 8.30 a. m. firing became general. Patrol at Haut du Cap, both patrols engaged. Colonel Cole with marines sent to assist first patrol, and remainder of Connecticut's landing force landed. About 11 a. m. second patrol returned Cape Haitien. Colonel Cole, with other patrol, remained at Haut du Cap. Firing continued at that time. Two men killed; counted 40 dead Cacos on Haut du Cap road. The purpose of these patrols necessary to insure free entry of food and supplies to Cape Haitien and not considered in nature of offensive operations. Colonel Williams left Port au Prince to-night on board Eagle for Cape Haitien.

"Cape Haitien quiet. Colonel Cole and all forces returned from Cap at 6 p. m. Have cleaned out village Haut du Cap, respecting property. Caco chiefs informed yesterday that patrol would be sent with no hostile or offensive intents. Will continue operations tomorrow. Estimated losses Cacos not less than 50 killed.

"Colonel Cole and troops returned at 3 p. m. They went to Quar and remained there one hour and half. No opposition encountered. One Caco chief who fired rear guard and was killed. No troops countered."

101. Word having been received that bandits and Cacos were robbing and pillaging the town of Petite Riviere, Colonel Wainwright, Capt. R. O. Underwood to take half a company, mounted, and proceeded to the town and protect the people. The detachment left St. Marc on September 1, 1915. An engagement with the Cacos took place and Sergt. John J. Platt killed almost instantly, being shot in the right eye. Three Cacos were killed and nine wounded. The detachment left Petite Riviere on September 3, 1915, the remains of Sergeant Platt and arrived at St. Marc the same day. In his report Captain Underwood made the following statement: "Along the route in returning the inhabitants turned out everywhere to express their regret at the loss of the marine. To show their gratitude the women of the village carried the corpse for some distance chanting a native hymn." Captain Platt and Gunnery-Sergt. T. J. McNulty were highly commended by the General Commandant and the Acting Secretary of the Navy in a letter of September 13, 1915, stated as follows:

"The department congratulates the forces engaged in the above operations at Petite Riviere for their prompt and decisive action on mission."

102. Pvt. Matthew I. Liptak was accidentally drowned at Jeremie on September 28, 1915. A detachment of marines under Sergt. Edward C. Thompson went to bring in the body was fired upon by town roughs and Sergeant was killed.

103. Colonel Waller on October 1, 1915, met the hostile Cucos at Morin. An agreement was drawn up and signed by both sides to the part that the Cucos would disarm immediately, turn in all arms and join to United States forces, go to their homes and not interfere with the United States forces.

r orders of Colonel Waller, Major Butler with his detachment Le Trou to Grand Riviere and Bahon; thence toward Grosse Roche. r's radiographic report to Colonel Cole at Cape Haitien of this re- is as follows:

at Le Valliere 11 a. m., 26th. After dark, evening of 24th, while as crossing river in deep ravine suddenly fired upon by about 400 hes 100 yards from ford; one horse killed. Fought our way forward tion and remained there for night surrounded by Cacos who kept up but poorly aimed fire. We returned fire only when necessary to ctual advances toward us. Owing to our good position no men or ed during night. At daybreak, three squads in charge of Captain Upshur, Lieutenant Ostermann, and Sergeant Daly, which had been our positions during the night, advanced in three different directions and knocking hell out of the Cacos and chasing them in all directions. Cacos killed and 10 wounded; this number verified. Many more Private Fredericks slight flesh wound left arm. Upshur and Ostermann, advancing from two directions captured Dipitie with a total of 13 marine garrison to flight. Demolished and burned fort, all three squads' houses from which fire had been coming. Swept clear the district a mile of all Cacos. Lieutenant Miller fired 60 rounds from machine reported several casualties in addition to total of 18. At 8.30 a. m. advance to Grosse Roche; at 10.30 a. m. isolated sniping commenced on our flanks and rear, ranges from 1,200 to 600 yards; impossible to snipers, tried to shoot them; sniping continued in intervals until No casualties on our side. Reached Grosse Roche at 1 p. m. Small party of Cacos, entirely deserted as was all country through which we passed. Continued advance toward La Valliere at 5 p. m.; heavy rain storm caused rise of 12 feet in 30 minutes. Continuous march along river until 6 p. m. when we made further progress impossible; lost two horses and two donkeys. The animals saved only by good luck and hard work. Remained for night on left bank after making repairs to outfits, continued advance to La Valliere at 11 a. m., 26th. Men and animals have had no rest for 55 hours; have walked foot over mountains and rough trails 40 miles in two days on the 26th. Rations will only last until night of 27th. General Apollon reports that east of La Valliere quiet. Our operations indicate all active Cacos are bounded by Ste. Suzanne—Grand Riviere—Bahon—Grosse Roche—La Valliere. Country mentioned alive with hostile Cacos and desire to commence operations against them at as early a date as possible. Have decided further advance eastward useless and will return to Fort Liberte evening of 27th. At 11 a. m., 24th, passed within 2,500 yards on an air line from Fort Capois, located on the east mountain peak in vicinity; probable location due east from Ste. Suzanne. This march has been most difficult, but officers and men in splendid behavior throughout admirable beyond description. Request that you give opportunity to take command of operations against Cacos in the future mentioned."

111. For conspicuous gallantry during the engagement incident to the capture of Fort Dipitie, Capt. William P. Upshur, Capt. Edward A. Ostermann, and Gunnery-Sergeant Daniel Daly were awarded the medal of honor; Sergeant receiving his medal for heroic work at the capture of this fort at Riviere, on November 17, 1915. General Order, No. 139, August 27, 1916, announcing to the service the award of these medals of honor, reads as follows:

"Captain William P. Upshur, Marine Corps, for conspicuous gallantry during the engagement incident to the capture of Fort Dipitie, October 24, 1915."

"Captain Edward A. Ostermann, United States Marine Corps (Lieutenant), for conspicuous gallantry during the engagement incident to the capture of Fort Dipitie."

The following is also quoted from the report of the commandant, United States Marine Corps:

"On October 22, 1915, Captain Upshur, First Lieutenant Ostermann, Lieutenant Miller, Assistant Surgeon Borden, and 35 enlisted men of the 14th Company of Marines, all mounted, left Fort Liberte, Haiti, for reconnaissance. After dark on the evening of October 24, while crossing a deep ravine, the detachment was suddenly fired upon from the rear by about 400 Cacos concealed in bushes about 100 yards from fort. The detachment fought its way forward to a good position, which it held during the night, although subjected to a continuous fire from the rear. At daybreak, the marines in three squads commanded by Captain Upshur, Lieutenant Ostermann and Gunnery-Sergeant Daly, advanced in three directions surprising and scattering the Cacos in all directions. The detachment commander commented on the gallantry displayed by the men of this detachment in the following language:

"The action of the 35 men in the attack made upon them during the night of October 24 can not be commended too highly. It is true that they were in pitch darkness, surrounded by 10 times their number and for their lives, but the manner in which they fought during that night, the steady, cool discipline that prevented demoralization, is remarkable. One squad failed, not one man of the party would have lived to tell assault upon the enemy, made in three different directions and because as the light permitted them to see, was splendid. It meant utter annihilation. It succeeded, thanks to the splendid examples of officers and noncommissioned officers, supported by the men. Ustermann, advancing from two directions, captured Fort Dipitie of 13 marines, putting garrison to flight. Demolished and burned the squads burned all houses from which fire had been coming. Therefore, that Capt. William P. Upshur, First Lieut. Edward A. and Gunnery Sergt. Daniel Daly should be given medals of honor for their engagement and the work of the following day."

noted that Gunnery Sergt. Daniel Daly is mentioned by the conspicuous gallantry at both Fort Dipitie and Fort Riviere.

el Waller left Port au Prince on October 27, 1915, aboard the Cape Haitien to conduct the necessary operations to subdue the was accompanied by his chief of staff, Lieut. Col. Charles G. Long. Cape Haitien, the plans for the operation were somewhat accelerated continued attacks on the marines at Bajon and the sniping at seen Grande Riviere and Bajon. The plan adopted was based upon made by Major Butler after his reconnaissance. While the the operations were anticipated or foreseen by the expeditionary the general and detailed plans were largely those of Major Butler given the command of the mobile column for the proper execution, although headquarters of the expeditionary force were moved to kept in touch with him. On October 29, 1915, Colonel Waller in Admiral Caperton: "All reports show gathering of Cacos at neighborhood; much discontent due to Government appointment men to office in north."

October 29, 1915, in a letter to the commanding officer of the district Haiti, the expeditionary commander set forth the disposition of ratory to a movement against rebels in the vicinity of Fort Capel Waller's headquarters were stated to be at Le Trou and those ole at Grande Riviere.

the morning of November 2, at about daybreak, the Cacos surrounded the town of Le Trou, but were driven back with a loss of 32 killed 20 minutes' fighting. Small columns were sent out in four directions the Cacos and several more were killed in these encounters. sent that many Cacos were in the plains, so it was decided to drive the mountains before attacking Capois, and therefore the movement until November 5. On November 4 Major Butler moved from Suzanne. On the march up the column was attacked by Cacos. was repulsed with ease, the Cacos losing six or seven men killed, General" St. Julian.

November 5, 1915, Captain Campbell sent the following report to Her and Cole: "Captured Fort Capois at 11.15 this morning; no had with me Lieutenants Osterman, Thrasher, Clark, Emory, Tor Boone, Ensign Snelling, detachments from Thirteenth, Nineteenth, third Companies. Will wire details as soon as written." On the Captain Campbell made the following more detailed report:

up at 4.45 a. m.; Lieutenants Clarke, Torrey, Ensign Snelling, one five squads, taking trail approaching fort from southeast; myself, Ostermann, Thrasher, Emory, Doctor Boone, one machine gun, taking trail approaching from west. We were fired on when yards from the fort and had to clear several hills; at the same time navy from Clarke's detachment, which was also clearing approaches. Progress was difficult as trails were very steep and we were from both the fort and outposts. We drove in all outposts and at 8 on 200 yards from the fort. Clarke was in very much the same opposite side of fort; we were planning to take fort by assault lived word that Butler had been sighted. I got in touch with told him we would wait for them to close up. About this time posed on our right, coming from direction of Ste. Suzanne and Caraw about 50 coming over the hills; our rear guard was in good possibly took care of these. Firing between our advance party and the continuous, but they were firing through bamboo, and would not sing out of the way of their shots. At 10.45 a. m. the fort started and I saw Caco jump parapet followed by another one; charged in but a heavy fog rolled in from the north, obstructing our view in all directions. When we got to the fort the Cacos had all escaped. The parapet of the fort was of stone, so our machine guns and rifles had little effect on it. There was evidence of blood in many places, but no wounded; the garrison all escaped to the north in general direction of Suzanne. Captain Upshur and Fifteenth Company came in about an hour later, coming over same trail we had taken; Major Butler arriving an hour later, stating that they had sighted the escaping Cacos ahead of them. I can not speak too highly of both officers and men with me under fire for four hours, all orders were promptly carried out and advance was steadily pushed on. Captain Low and the First Company in charge of fort, Major Butler returning to Ste. Suzanne, and I to South Mountain."

116. On November 7, 1915, a patrol destroyed a bamboo rampart 3 miles east of Capois. On November 8 Major Butler, with Captain Upshur, attacked Fort Selon, 5 miles northeast from Capois. On November 9 Waller reported to Rear Admiral Caperton as follows: "Fort Selon captured yesterday. Cacos fled at sight of our men. All houses in the town now displaying white flags, and people say they have had enough. No fighting, and leaders have fled. Will clean up to westward of railroad at Ranquitte. Band of 15 bandits trapped near Grande Riviere, 2 killed, 3 wounded. Visited Limonade to-day; everything quiet; satisfied the Cacos crushed was more than aggregation of ordinary brigands. The march have average 15 miles a day for nine days, are half as nails, and nothing."

117. Three squads of marines surprised a band of outlaws who had been hiding 2 miles west of the town and killed at least two and wounded 3. On November 10 six squads of marines, while out in an attempt to capture "General" Norde, ran into a Caco outpost and killed two of the enemy. The detachment destroyed a trench fort and Caco camp at Carecol, but failed to capture Norde. On the same date a detachment, under Major Butler, was fired at by Cacos near Limonade. On November 12, a detachment of marines, a band of 10 armed Cacos, killing at least 3 and wounding 6 more. First Lieutenant Ostermann, who was wounded near Bahon on November 11, 1915, was sent to the hospital at Norfolk via the Hector on November 13.

118. Fort Riviere was captured on November 17, 1915, the message from Cole to Colonel Waller containing the following description:

"Capture of Fort Riviere effected by four columns. Campbell's company; Barker, marine detachment Connecticut; Low, Fifth company; Caughey, seaman company from Connecticut and automatic machine gun company from Twenty-third company. All companies were in their positions specified, and Butler, with Low's company, made the assault supported by the other companies. Hand-to-hand conflict in fort lasted 10 minutes. The detachment killed there and 22 jumped parapet, but all were killed by fire from machine guns, all avenues of escape being blocked. Forty-seven rifles and 100 pounds of ammunition found in fort after capture. Fort of mortar and brick of substantial construction. The fact that this fort was taken without a siege on our side speaks worlds for the ability and good judgment of all concerned. Have sent to the Cape for dynamite to destroy fort as a final destruction, by blowing up, will have great moral effect. All quiet in the town, people returning to town."

119. General order No. 319, August 25, 1917, announces the award of honor to certain officers and enlisted men for gallantry in capturing Fort Riviere. The general order reads in part as follows:

"The department takes pleasure in announcing to the service the award of medals of honor to the following-named officers of the Marine Corps and enlisted men of the Marine Corps, for conspicuous gallantry in the capture of the enemy in Haiti in 1915."

Lieut. Col. Smedley D. Butler, United States Marine Corps (then 1st Lieut.), for conspicuous bravery during the attack on Fort Riviere, November 17, 1915.
Gunnery Sergt. Daniel Daly, United States Marine Corps, for conspicuous gallantry during the engagements incident to the capture of Fort Riviere, November 17, 1915.

First Sergt. Ross L. Iams, United States Marine Corps (then 1st Lieut.), for conspicuous coolness and bravery in entering Fort Riviere at the head of the attacking force when such action on his part seemed almost certain in his being killed or wounded.

uel Gross, United States Marine Corps (then private), for cool-very in entering Fort Riviere immediately behind Sergt. Iams when on his part seemed almost certain to result in his being killed or nection, the following report of the commandant of the Marine ted:

umber 17, 1915, it was planned to attack Fort Riviere, Haiti, with a up of detachments from the Fifth, Thirteenth, and Twenty-third and the marine detachment and sailors from the Connecticut.

was an old French bastion fort, about 200 feet on the side, with of brick and stone, the walls being loopholed. The original en-een on the northern side, but had been blocked, a small breach in wall being used in its stead. As this breach in the wall was the e to the fort, it was naturally covered by the defenders on the ing passage through it into the fort a most hazardous undertaking ng men. Notwithstanding the fact that the fire of the Cacos was assing through this hole in the wall, Sergt. Ross L. Iams, Fifth hesitatingly jumped through, closely followed by Pvt. Samuel e Twenty-third Company. A mêlée then ensued inside of the fort minutes, the Cacos fighting desperately with rifles, clubs, stones, which several jumped from the walls in an effort to escape but the automatic guns of the Fifth Company and by the Thirteenth lvancing to the attack.

Sergt. Daniel Daly, Fifteenth Company, during the operations was ispicuous figure among the enlisted personnel."

oss L. Iams, Fifth Company, is recommended for a medal of honor and bravery in entering Fort Riviere at the head of the attacking uch action on his part seemed almost certain to result in his being inded.

uel Gross, Twenty-third Company, to receive a medal of honor for and bravery in entering Fort Riviere immediately behind Sergt.
uch action on his part seemed almost certain to result in his being unded.

ed that Maj. Smedley D. Butler be given a medal of honor for his bravery during the assault on Fort Riviere. Two men entered n, doing so to prevent him from being the first. Theirs was devo-while his action was devotion to duty. The assault inside the fort 23 men with the knowledge that no quarter would be given them."
ovember 18, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy, referring to the report re of Fort Riviere by Rear Admiral Caperton, sent the following aphrased as follows, to that officer: "The department appreciates displayed and excellent work done. The department desires that be suspended in view of the heavy losses received by the Haitians agements in order to prevent further loss of life." On November Waller informed Colonel Cole at Cape Haitien that "department suspend offensive movements. Continue necessary patrolling for habitants and security of our own people. Loss of life on both voided if possible. Mission to Hinche to be a peaceful one, and all vements to be avoided." (See pars. 131, 142, 144.)

s report, dated January 10, 1916, to the commander cruiser squad-Waller gave the following definition of a Caco:

be explained that the Cacos have been the controlling element in all

They were purchased by first one candidate and then another.
contract with one man, they, having put him in power, would immetheir services to the next aspirant to unseat the first."

e report mentioned in the preceding paragraph Colonel Waller compersonnel of the Navy serving with him, and also certain marine e following words:

ng, I wish to invite the attention of the squadron commander and al commandant to the good work done by Col. Eli K. Cole during ovement. I have sent him a letter of thanks and congratulation, ed.

also to invite special attention to the admirable work done by R. Horton, acting quartermaster, Marine Corps, in charge of all his department worked without hitch or delay, although the diffigreat.

"Lieut. Col. Charles G. Long was chief of staff, and a very valuable addition to any operation. Always calm, happy, and efficient, he is a balance wheel anywhere."

123. Rear Admiral Caperton, on November 19, 1915, sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy, summing up the work accomplished in north Haiti:

"Operations against Cacos bandits in north Haiti during last year has resulted in dispersion Cacos, capturing many of their strongholds, large quantities of arms and ammunition, and bringing peace throughout Cacos country. This area is included within line Cap-Haitien, San Raphael, Pignon, Carice, Mont Organise, Ouanaminthe, Massacre River, and Cape Haitien. This area is now patrolled by our forces, is now peaceful, and country people are now busy with their work. Our patrols are also at present operating from Port de Paix, from Ennery, St. Michel, Marmalade, Plaisance, and Poteau, from Port de Paix for distance of eight miles to south and from St. Marc through the Valley. These areas are quiet."

"This last movement of Cacos appears to have been revolutionary against present Government as well as brigand. While petty brigandage may continue from time to time, yet it is hoped no more such organized or revolutionary activities will occur."

124. When the Connecticut sailed from Port au Prince on December 1, 1915, to rejoin the battleship squadron the commander, cruiser squadron, gave in part as follows: "Commander cruiser squadron takes this opportunity to express his appreciation of excellent service and support rendered by commanding officer, officers, and crew of Connecticut to the cruiser squadron during campaign of last four months in Haiti."

125. In addition to those casualties already mentioned, Pvt. W. L. was wounded in the knee in a skirmish with Cacos near La Trinité on December 2, 1915. The operations in December, 1915, consisted of several skirmishes with bandits. A small skirmish occurred on December 4; on December 17 bandits and their leader were captured at Gross Roche; a skirmish on December 12, in which 1 native was killed and several wounded, occurring between Perches and Terrie Rouge; and a skirmish on December 10 between a marine patrol and a small Caco band in the vicinity of Port-au-Caco being killed.

126. On December 16, at 6 a. m., Capt. Frank F. Robard died at Port-au-Prince from concussion of the brain, resulting from a fall from his horse. At 1 p. m. the Sacramento sailed from Port au Prince carrying his remains.

127. On December 22, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton, on board the Ington, sent the following message to the department: "In view of the unsettled relations between United States and Haiti and necessitating present military control of situation until appointments of civil authorities can be made. I recommended that marine force now ashore be not reduced at this time beyond detachment of Twelfth Company."

128. In the meantime treaty negotiations had been going on, the ratification of Deputies ratifying the treaty on October 6, and the Senate ratifying it by Rear Admiral Caperton, on December 11, as having ratified it on that date by a vote of 26 to 7. The treaty was not proclaimed until May 3, 1916.

129. Col. Littleton W. T. Waller commanded the marines in Haiti from August 15, 1915, to November 10, 1916. He was succeeded by Brig. Gen. Eli K. Cole on November 22, 1916.

130. On December 31, 1915, there were 90 officers and 1,546 enlisted men of the Marine Corps on duty in the Republic of Haiti distributed in the following organizations:

---

Headquarters, First Brigade.....
Third Company (Signal).....
Artillery Battalion.....

annual report of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, dated 1915, contains the following summary of events in the Republic of Haiti, from August, 1915, to the end of the year:

August it became apparent that so many contending factions were in the effort to gain control of the Haitian Government that a peaceable establishment of order in Haiti could not be effected without the aid of the American forces. It was therefore decided to send six efficient forces to control the seacoast ports of Haiti and to maintain order, and a force of about 2,000 marines under Colonel Waller.

The courage, sacrifice, daring, and capacity of the marines—officers and soldiers of the sea have again illustrated their wonderful mobility and devotion to their former high reputation. Command was assumed of the ports in Haiti: Cape Haitien, Port de Paix, Gonaives, St. Marc, Jacmel, Petit Goave, Miragoane, Jeremie, Les Cayes, and Jacmel. The Cacos in the neighborhood of Cape Haitien and Gonaives, have been more or less openly hostile and have attempted to prevent the American forces from reaching either of these cities. In the effort to permit the free operation of the American forces to come in conflict with the Cacos, and during these conflicts several Americans have been killed and there have been some casualties among the Cacos. The American forces have at no time taken offensive action against any of the Cacos, but have only returned the fire of attacking forces.

On August 12 Dartiguenave was elected President of Haiti, and he immediately took the oath of office. He has cooperated with the American forces in the effort to establish peace and order in Haiti. A treaty was ratified on August 15 by the Haitian Congress, and it is hoped Haiti will soon be established on a firm basis and that at an early date a large proportion of the American forces can be withdrawn.

In connection with the administration of the revenues, the naval pay officers are utilizing their well-known capacity, and in the improvement of health and sanitation the naval surgeons are doing the same thorough work as when called to serve at home or abroad."

Another part of the above-mentioned report the Secretary of the Navy says:

"In connection with Haitian affairs, which came with the assassination of the President, Guillaume, on July 27, demanded immediate and energetic action on the part of the Navy to protect American and foreign lives and property and to restore order throughout that distressed country. Our cruisers were ordered to Haitian ports and armed guards landed. Later, an expeditionary force of about 2,000 marines was sent to complete the occupation of all open ports. A strong force is still in Haiti in effective control of the situation. Conditions on the island have constantly improved, and the newly formed Government has received all needed support toward establishing itself upon a firm basis."

On January 30 a. m. January 5, 1916, the Caserne Barracks at Port au Prince, where the marines were quartered, was fired upon by a small body of Haitians. Immediately thereafter the provost marshal's building was fired upon and the senate building, and three marines returned the fire. A second fire at another point was also made on the provost marshal's building, and a provost officer was fired on several times. All disturbances were suppressed within an hour, one Haitian being killed, a few wounded, and Corp. Vedor, of the marines, was slightly wounded in the foot. Sixteen Haitians and men of bad character were arrested and many rifles were confiscated. Apparently the disturbance was of a political nature, directed against the Haitian government and American occupation. The movement was headed by ex-Senator Bourand for President, the President to be assassinated. On January 5, 1916, Col. Littleton W. T. Waller sent Maj. Robert H. Waller with two squads of marines and a machine gun on a special train to Port au Prince where they secured a gasoline launch and proceeded up the lake Lajas. At about 11.50 a. m. they met Mizrael Codio and two others, a party, and took them back to Port au Prince. Joseph Josephs, supposed to have been killed at Fort Riviere, was apprehended in North Haiti on January 5, 1916.

On January 31 the flag of the cruiser squadron was shifted to the U. S. S.

136. The treaty between the United States and Haiti, providing for the organization of the Haitian constabulary, was ratified by the United States on February 28, 1916. The treaty provided for the Haitian gendarmes to be described later in this report.

137. At 1 a. m., March 6, 1916, the constabulary at St. Michel, commanded by a Haitian sergeant, was attacked by a band of natives and driven to the sea. Marines were dispatched to the locality, quieted the disturbance, dispersed several of the band, and a new detachment of gendarmes under the command of a sergeant were placed on duty in St. Michel.

138. On March 9, a small patrol was fired on between Le Trou and Le Cap. About this date a small skirmish occurred between the gendarmes and the Cacos at Acul Samedi. The Cacos attacked Ranquette on March 11, but were driven off, and on the same date there was a little trouble at St. Michel.

139. Rear Admiral Caperton on March 13, 1916, reported that the shore forces in Haiti amounted to not more than 1,700 enlisted men and that it was not considered practicable to maintain military control of the country with a smaller force, and that the strength could not be reduced to a single unit without greatly prejudicing the control and prestige of the United States in Haiti. On March 11, the Secretary of the Navy had sent Rear Admiral Caperton a radio which is paraphrased as follows: "Relinquish military control which you are now exercising in Haiti; nor, without further instructions, put end to martial law as now in force."

140. Outlaws attacked Caracol about March 16, but were driven off by the gendarmerie.

141. On March 24, about 17 Haitian prisoners escaped from the gendarmes at Fort Liberte, two being killed while escaping. The escape was made through a hole cut in and under the wall.

142. Navy Department General Order No. 197, March 25, 1916, contains the following commendation from the Department of State:

"The department has received with gratification a letter from the Department of State, dated March 4, 1916, transmitting a copy of a letter addressed by that department on the same date to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, a paragraph of which reads: 'I can not too strongly recommend that officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States be made available for service in Haiti, not only because I am convinced that the purpose of the treaty may be most advantageously carried to successful completion by them, but particularly on account of the fact that by their excellent behavior and co-operation they have gained the confidence and esteem of the Government and people of Haiti, toward whom this Government has now assumed great responsibilities and obligations.' The department takes much pleasure in extending through the medium of this general order, its warm appreciation of the excellent services recently rendered in Haiti by the officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps."

143. About March 28, 1916, the station at Cerca la Source was attacked by an armed force of bandits from all sides at once. Pvt. Ducas of the gendarmerie was sentry on post, and was killed by the first shot fired. He was then mutilated with machetes. With the assistance of one of the bandits, Serg. Aubrey M. Haley beat off an attack on this town, killing three of the bandits. On June 9, 1916, Haley was promoted to sergeant and recommended by the major general commandant. At the time of this attack, he was a corporal in the Marine Corps, and an acting sergeant of the gendarmerie. This same band retreated to Castellieur and attacked the gendarmes under Acting Lieut. of Gendarmes Luther O. Collier. With one gendarme successfully defended the barracks, killing four of the bandits. About March 29, the Cacos attacked gendarmes at Le Mielle, at Cerca la Source, and at Acul Samedi.

144. On March 30, 1916, the Secretary of the Navy addressed the following letter to Col. Littleton W. T. Waller:

"1. The following communication addressed to the Secretary of the Navy by Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, commander cruiser squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, dated January 3, 1916, is quoted for your information: '1. While the work of the Navy in Haiti is not yet completed, the commander cruiser squadron believes it to be sufficiently advanced to merit the department's attention to the excellent and effective services rendered by Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps in this work.'" el Waller, during the operations of October and November in with the expeditionary force of marines and the seamen from the actively crushed all armed resistance against the American occupation of the Haitian government, and has maintained peace and order in all country.

el Waller has most efficiently and willingly supported me in and negotiations in Haiti, and his bearing and conduct throughout has added distinction to his already long and efficient service to the United States.

The Department heartily commends your conduct and services with the forces in Haiti and congratulates you upon the success attending the execution of this letter will be filed with your official record."

The Major General Commandant, in forwarding a copy of the above letter of Rear Admiral Caperton to Colonel Waller, wrote the following:

I enclose herewith a copy of a letter from the commander of the cruiser Albatross, the Secretary of the Navy, dated January 3, 1916, commending in the most excellent and efficient services rendered by you in Haiti in command of the expeditionary force.

The letter referred to gives me great pleasure, and I congratulate you on the success of and addition to your high reputation for capacity and efficient positions. Your record reflects luster on the Marine Corps, and the commendation of the commander of the cruiser squadron will give satisfaction to all members thereof.

Copies of this letter and of the inclosure have been filed with your file.

Incidents between bandits and the marines or gendarmes occurred at Port au Prince on April 1; on April 10 between Terrier Rouge and Camp Napp near Fort Liberte on April 11; near Terrier Rouge on April 12; a skirmish on April 16; and about May 1 a skirmish near Port au Prince between the United States and the Republic of Haiti was reported on May 3, 1916.

On May 31, 1916, Croix de Bouquet was attacked by Cacos under

First Lieut. John Dixon with five gendarmes made a good run against great odds, killing 12 Cacos without casualties to themselves. One Greelish was wounded in the arm in action. About this date other prisoners escaped from prison at Port au Prince. About June 1 American forces reoccupied Croix de Bouquet, Pont Bedet, and Thomastown—these reverses Codio fled toward the Dominican border with the United States gendarmes in pursuit. About June 7 the Americans overtook his band at Fond Parisien. Codio, Mettallus, and nine other Cacos were captured. The Americans then continued in pursuit of Herard and Rameau, who had fled from Codio. They were captured by gendarmes a few miles from Mirebalais. About June 7 Colonel Waller, in reporting upon these incidents stated in part: "People in Province opposed to revolution and reform." One gendarme was wounded in action with Cacos at Port au Prince on June 22.

The House of Representatives approved in June, 1916, authorized the service of the Haitian gendarmerie, which had already been completely organized by the command of Maj. Smedley D. Butler.

Incidents between bandits and marines or gendarmes took place near Port au Prince on June 28; near Paratise on July 4; at Capotille on July 5. Pvt. John J. United States Marine Corps, was killed in action with bandits at Port au Prince on July 10. Skirmish on July 15 at Carice and Bahon. On July 15, Francois Gauvin fired at American sentry from ambush at Port au Prince and was chased by marines and gendarmes and killed.

On July 18, 1916, Rear Admiral Caperton reported to the Secretary of the Navy: "This morning turned over command of the cruiser Albatross to the command of the cruiser Albatross." Rear Admiral Caperton had served continuously in command of the cruiser Albatross from the beginning of these Haitian troubles until July 18, 1916, when he was relieved by Rear Admiral Charles F. Pond.

Incidents between gendarmes and Cacos occurred at Bayaha on July 26; at Culdespins about July 26; another on July 27 at Savanna; another at Culdespins on July 30; another at Mount Capitan on July 30; another at Mount Hodals on July 31, in which Private Braughmann was wounded in cheek from rock splinter caused by a bullet; about August 24, 1916, two patrols of gendarmes encountered a band of 12 bandits and captured 3.

153. The agreement between the United States and the Republic of Haiti concerning the organization of the Haitian gendarmerie was signed August 24, 1916, and on the same date the major general commandant and brigade commander, First Brigade, United States Marine Corps, Porto Rico, transferred all officers and enlisted men on duty with the Haitian constabulary from the Marine Corps organizations to which they were attached to the constabulary detachment, and on September 1, 1916, reported to the United States as of that date detaching all gendarmerie officers from the United States as of August 31, 1916.

154. In the latter part of August, 1916, systematic operations were conducted on a large scale to capture Celidano Pantallon, Colonel Walker, and orders to capture him if possible.

155. Following is an extract from a Department of State communication dated September 28, 1916, to the Navy Department:

"It is the opinion of this department that the time has not yet arrived for the withdrawal of the naval forces now in that country and the termination of martial law. Until such time as the gendarmerie has proven itself efficient in all emergencies and the internal peace of Haiti is thereby assured it is the desire of this department that the present status be continued."

156. Pvt. George M. Meier, Sixteenth Company, was stabbed and killed at Cape Haitien on September 29, 1916.

157. On October 9, 1916, the major general commandant reported to the Bureau of Navigation that the strength of the expeditionary force in Haiti was 979 enlisted men and recommended that it be reduced to 500 enlisted men. On October 21, 1916, the American minister in Haiti reported that experience had proven that any apparent reduction in the forces of occupation of Haiti would remove the salutary restraints from the troublesome element and cause a dissipation of the feeling of security among the Government and the people, thereby endangering public peace. On November 3, 1916, the Secretary of the Navy stated that the department does not desire any material reduction in the forces in Haiti and Santo Domingo at the present time. The expeditionary force in Haiti, he stated, would not be withdrawn, and martial law would not be repealed until the gendarmerie and administrative civil position provided for the treaty were ready to assume control and assistance. On the same date the Secretary of the Navy informed the major general commandant as follows: "The department desires that no reduction in the forces ashore in Haiti and Santo Domingo be made at the present time. Favorable consideration will be given, however, to a gradual reduction in the near future of the forces in Haiti to 500 when circumstances justify such reduction."

158. About October 22, 1916, Second Lieut. Henry P. Torrey, commanding detachment of marines and gendarmes, jumped a bandit strong at Savanneaoulit, killing several bandit leaders. A brush with the bandits occurred on December 2, 1916, near Jeremie, 2 miles south of La Vega. On December 28, 1916, Desmera Vital's camp at Ranquette, 18 miles from Ouanaminthe, was surprised at daylight by a detachment from Ouanaminthe.

159. It would be impracticable to insert in this report all the communications, statements and writings of the successful accomplishments of the United States Marine Corps in the Republic of Haiti, but the following extract from an interview with Right Rev. Charles Blayney Colmore, bishop of Porto Rico, published in the Washington Post of December 27, 1916, the Magazine of February, 1917, and the Recruiters' Bulletin of January, 1917, serve as an illustration:

"The reconstruction work of the United States marines in Haiti is one of the most thrilling and gratifying chapters in contemporary American history," said the Right Rev. Charles Blayney Colmore, bishop of Porto Rico and Haiti, who has been at the Willard for several days on his way back to Porto Rico from the convention of the Episcopal Church recently held in St. Louis.

"Americans can hardly visualize the awful squalor, suffering, and crime that existed in Haiti before its occupancy by Admiral Caperton," said the bishop, "nor realize the extent of the regenerating labors of the United States marines during the months they have been on duty there."

nes have literally taught the Haitians how to live decently. Becoming sanitation, save in the crudest and most unsatisfactory unknown; fevers and epidemics were as plentiful as revolutions, a as in vogue, and the country was the victim of continuous uprising by political scoundrels, each of whom ravaged the customs as each in turn came into short-lived power.

of the United States marines ended this sorry story. With the cility and adaptability for which the marines are noted, these its of American civilization so changed Haiti that after they had our months when I went on my annual visitation to the island I it to be the same spot. It had been improved beyond my wildest ary systems had been installed, the towns had been cleaned up, and revolutionists were working happily for living wages, and a as animating the people. The United States marines quietly were as reconstructors of a nation and efficient guardians of the Mon-and peace makers of the Americans.

 little is known of it, and the men who are doing it deserve the attitude of the Nation. It isn't a pleasant task to teach a people their duty, and their motto is 'Semper fidelis.'

work of the marines is magnificent and they provide a standard e great possibilities in Haiti. It is a country blessed with many ntages. Its people are a simple, well-meaning folk—too easily own good—but under such wise supervision as they are enjoying capable of contributing in large measure to the well-being of the and to the material prosperity of the Americans." (The Washing-umber 27, 1916.)

ember, 1916, there were 61 officers and 1,020 enlisted men of the on duty in the Republic of Haiti, distributed among the following

Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps in his annual e Secretary of the Navy, October 10, 1916, made the following te of my last report the First Brigade, consisting of the First and ents, the Artillery Battalion, and the Signal Company, under the Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, was in occupation of the Republic of as engaged in the restoration of order and the preservation of country. This brigade has carried out its mission in a signally mer. Peace has been restored; the inhabitants have returned to vocations, and business has rapidly progressed. The work of the rine Corps in Haiti was of such a successful nature as to cause artment to recommend the enactment of a law authorizing officers men to accept appointments as officers in the Haitian constabulary, ion of which was provided for in a treaty between the United aiti. This recommendation of the State Department was enacted er the command of Maj. Smedley D. Butler, United States Marine mandant. It consists approximately of 100 officers and enlisted larine Corps; 12 officers and enlisted men of the Navy, and 2,500 in gendarmes. It is expected that as Haitian citizens become qualified to serve as officers they will gradually replace the American and enlisted men who are now serving as officers of the constabulary."

161. The Chief of Naval Operations in his annual statement to the Senate of the Navy, October 12, 1916, included the following:

"The occupation of Haiti by the expeditionary force of United States Marines, which was initiated in July, 1915, still continues. The Haitian gendarmerie, under officers of the United States Marine Corps, has been organized in accordance with the treaty recently concluded between this Government and that of the Haitian Republic, and as soon as certain administrative arrangements have been satisfactorily arranged, it is contemplated that the present continued occupation of that country will cease. The present government of Haiti gives every evidence of stability and that country is now enjoying a prosperity greater than it has for many years."

162. In his annual report, dated December 1, 1916, to the President, the Secretary of the Navy made the following statements:

"In the restoration of order and the preservation of peace in the Western Republics of Haiti and Santa Domingo, the Marine Corps has rendered most valuable service. This service drafted most of the personnel of the entire corps, except that portion serving aboard ships and guarding coasts, and almost during the entire year the corps was engaged in this expeditionary work. About this time last year Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, with the First Marine Brigade, was in occupation of Haiti. Peace was restored and the tide of commerce again flowed through their natural channels. The effective work accomplished led to the organization, at the instance of the United States Government, of a Haitian constabulary, for which provision was made in the treaty between the United States and Haiti. Organized under Capt. D. Butler as commandant, this constabulary consists of 112 officers and 1,000 native Haitian gendarmes, and as Haitian citizens become qualified as officers they will gradually replace the Americans. The State Department has been generous in its commendation of the work done by the Marine Corps, which was so effective that it was possible in May to withdraw a portion of the force and transfer it to Santo Domingo, where a revolution broke out."

163. On January 21, 1917, the Major General Commandant and his staff, accompanied by a company with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, left Washington for an inspection trip of the Republic of Haiti and the Dominican Republic. Arriving at Port au Prince the party went on horseback from that city to Cap-Haitien and made a thorough inspection. During the trip the party conversed freely with the President of Haiti, members of the Haitian cabinet, the American minister, all the principal officers of the Marine Corps, the gendarmerie d'Haiti, local officials in the country, and parish judges. The party heard no complaint, but, on the contrary, heard many remarks indicating that conditions in Haiti were better than they had been for many great many years. Having completed the inspection of the Republic of Haiti the party proceeded to the Dominican Republic, but after a short stay at Puerto Plata it became necessary to abandon the trip owing to the outbreak of war with Germany, and they returned to the United States.

164. Conditions were exceptionally peaceful throughout the Republic of Haiti during the year 1917, very few actions with bandits being reported.

165. On April 16, 1917, the brigade commander reported as follows:

"The reduction of the number of marines in Haiti by two companies, in my opinion, a serious mistake. While I do not believe any serious trouble can be inaugurated, there are many people who formerly lived by the sword for government and who now are in pressing need of money, who certainly will make trouble if they felt reasonably sure of any success. The vast majority of the people of Haiti are well disposed, but very ignorant. They have the habit of obeying without any question whatever their leaders, and while we have broken to a great extent this power it takes time to start a current of unrest in a considerable portion of the population. If Haiti declares war we certainly should provide adequate protection. In my opinion the present number of marines is insufficient. It is in my mind, that we increase our influence in this island and not withdraw it, and if an attempt were made to cause trouble, although it was put down, it would retard or injure our influence here very materially. I believe there should be a sufficient number of marines here to insure the continuance of the present conditions of peace and order. While I believe e majority of the educated people of Haiti desire that Haiti the war to the extent of following the example of the United are many interests opposed to it, and to withdraw troops just at in this matter is to be settled can not but have a very unfor-

Following extracts are quoted from the consular report on Haiti, Consul John G. Terres, Port au Prince, March 20, and published in Department of Commercial Reports, Annual Series, No. 30A, May 14, reported by Brigadier General Cole:

From the United States into Haiti in 1916 were more than 130 later than in the preceding year. In 1915 they amounted to and in 1916 to $8,775,064, an increase of $4,968,392. This gain is due to continued peace throughout the country, which has enabled work and be paid for their labor.

American occupation has accomplished many things for the good and progress of the country. It has given employment to the idle laboring men and women to obtain a livelihood. It has led to great improvement in the city and also the roads leading for some distance into the country. The result should be a decided improvement in the mode of transportation which is essential. The people are entirely satisfied with their situation during the occupation and appreciate the utilities introduced into all the different sections of the island.

Unfortunately for commerce that the interior debt has not been repaid, the interest paid, this default having resulted in reducing sales of goods for 1917. Most of the bonds are held by the people, who have to pay the interest to be paid as formerly, and thereby to meet their expenses. The failure to do this has embarrassed them financially and has diminished the sale of imported goods."

Port au Prince was received in Port au Prince on May 26, 1917, that on May 26 and of outlaws had been encountered by the gendarmes at Cross Roads, midway between Valliere and St. Suzanne.

May 27, 1917, Brigadier General Cole reported that "the number of troops at present in this country is entirely inadequate in case anything happens and while I hope everything will go well it is neither advisable nor expedient to reduce our forces as has been done."

May 28, 1917, Brigadier General Cole reported that the British Legation had informed him that he was much worried over the propaganda being spread against the Americans and the changed attitude of the Americans on the part of many classes of people.

Brigadier General Cole reported May 28, 1917: "Conditions around Le Cap and Valliere to the border are reported as not good; this has come from different sources, and as Le Trou has always been the center of trouble north it will require careful watching. The reduction of troops is very unfortunate; as a matter of fact, the reduction has gone to the danger point. There is little doubt but what a considerable open antagonism of the National Assembly is due to our reduction and to a consequent belief that the United States is pressed for time a company or detachment goes its number is magnified."

May 29, 1917, Brigadier General Cole reported that he had made attempts to cause the hostile attitude, but without success, and while addressed he believed the belief of the British chargé to be caused by the fact he lived with an "alarmist."

May 17, 1917, the Haitian gendarmerie had a large review at Port au Prince in honor of the Haitians who were serving as French soldiers and on furlough. The President and cabinet, the American and French consuls and many other prominent people were present.

Following quotation from a letter addressed by President Dartigues to Brigadier General Cole on June 22, 1917, is of interest:

"I am respected by the people of my native city, I have had the good fortune to be a public man to enjoy the esteem of all, either as speaker of the Chamber of Deputies during one year or as president of the Senate of Haiti during five years.

"To arrive at the First Magistracy I certainly did not have the same fortune as those who had the command of revolutionary bands for the sole purpose of getting themselves into power by shedding the blood of their fellow citizens over the ruins of cities that they burned and then do nothing else but squander the State's revenues."

175. Under date of July 21, 1917, the brigade commander stated he had received a report from Jeremie giving many details of a situation with ramifications throughout the island, and that he had issued orders to have the matter investigated, and also that he thought that there was one chance in a thousand that the report was true.

176. On August 11, 1917, the brigade commander reported the following:

"The President, General Butler, and two members of his cabinet have gone to Furcy, to remain for some four days; I think this is about the first time a President of Haiti for many years has dared to leave the capital, and go out into the mountains without being surrounded by an army."

177. The house of Capt. John L. Doxey, at Hinche, was attacked on October 11, 1917, by about 25 cattle thieves. The sentry was on the roof and opened fire on them, and in the skirmish that ensued two natives were killed. A patrol of gendarmes under a marine officer set out in pursuit of the thieves. Disrappel, the leader, and captured Disreil, who was second in command. The brigade commander's report on this incident, under date of October 11, is as follows:

"Yesterday afternoon received a report that an attack had been made by thieves or bandits on the town of Hinche, the number of the attack being given as approximately 60. The department commander, General d'Haiti, in whose department the district of Hinche is situated, issued upon receipt of the information sent out patrols from all sections of the territory concerned. Upon receipt of the information here instructions were issued to send the patrols toward the border and to Hinche from Lascahobas as the result of a report received by telephone from Lascahobas as the result of a report from a white officer to Hinche is to the effect that at about 2.30 a. m. on the morning, October 11, a band of about 25 cattle thieves sneaked into the town of Hinche and surrounded the house of the American officer commanding the district. They were discovered by a sentry, who attacked them as they were attempting to break into the house of Captain Doxey. The latter killed two of them, as they were seen to drop, and upon the approach of other gendarmes the band took to flight, taking with them the two who had been shot. A gendarmerie patrol under white officers were sent out, overtook the band, killed the leader and captured the second in command, who is now confined in Hinche; the leader was recognized as a man of bad character named Disreil. The report stated it is believed that the thieves were cattle thieves from along and across the Santo Domingo border."

"C. O., Second Regiment, headquarters Cape Haitien, sent a detachment of men from Quanamithe along the border to the south to cooperate with the detachment of gendarmes."

"The district commander at Hinche states that he does not consider anything other than an attack of outlaws and that he believes in capturing or destroying the band without assistance. However, the whole district is being carefully and thoroughly covered by numerous detachments."

178. The following extract dated October 19, 1917, from the brigade commander's report is of peculiar interest:

"Yesterday afternoon the President, Secretary of Public Works, the gendarmerie, and myself made a trip in automobile across the mountain range which bounds the north side of the Plain of the Sac for the purpose of inspecting the road now being repaired to the north and Mirebalais. We also inspected the cavalry camp and some of the work being performed on the road toward St. Marc. While at a place called Diable, where the gang of workmen farthest advanced were at work, a group of six unusually intelligent market women came up the mountain to see the work. They were suggested to the Secretary of State for Public Works that they were women what they thought of the work being done and the conditions of the work and they stated that the work was very much appreciated by them and that they thanked God that the Americans were in Haiti."

179. On October 22, 1917, a band of bandits attacked the train at Arcahaie, but were driven off. The object of the attack apparently was to arrive at Arcahaie with money on board.

180. The brigade commander on October 28, 1917, reported as follows:

"Received a report yesterday concerning emigration from Haiti to Santo Domingo particularly from the section of the Plain of the Cul de Sac. The informant stated that it was said to him that this was due to the approach of the winter."

tem. This matter has been discussed before and upon its receipt actions to have a count made of the number of people passing the travel route between Haiti and Santo Domingo for a period of time to determine the actual outgoing and incoming of people who were passing back and forth across the border. There is no question but that some such emigration, but, in my opinion, the reports are much exaggerated and I doubt whether the corvée system has much to do with it. Much higher wages are paid in Santo Domingo than in Haiti there is a certain exodus." (See pars. 233, 234, and 274 of this letter.) The brigade commander, on November 4, 1917, reported in part as follows:

At Port au Prince 11 p. m. yesterday and joined President and his party. At 8.30 we attended high mass at the cathedral, followed by a visit to the communal office at 10.30 a. m. The President's welcome seemed very warm though it is impossible to tell whether or not a large proportion of the representative people were present. There were numerous speeches—President spoke twice and each time he came out very strongly in defense of the convention and eulogized the aid the United States had given Haiti in coming to give. He stated that the country had, under the reign of the formerly ambitious politicians, been brought to the very brink of ruin; only due to his having accepted the responsibilities of the Presidency following his election having endeavored to work with the United States and allowed Haiti to retain its independence and not to find itself alone in which Santo Domingo stands to-day; he stated that such relations between the two countries must continue in the future, and that this country was dependent upon the absolute casting out of the hands of the dead and the harmonious steering of all elements with the Government of Haiti and the United States to build up the resources and to improve the moral and educational conditions of the country. The Secretary of Public Works, who comes from Gonaïves, and who is a friend of Charles Zamor, made a strong, aggressive speech regarding the country was enjoying as the result of the presence of Americans."

On November 2, 1917, President Dartiguenave addressed the following address to General Cole:

When you are about to leave Haiti, being called to the performance of other duties, I feel under obligation to give you a testimonial of my warmest recollections that you are leaving in my mind, and I can say that you are in the minds of all Haitians among whom you have lived.

All have been able to appreciate the sincere desire that had never failed me of working effectively, in accord with all the national interests of Haiti's welfare and prosperity. This is sufficiently proven by the results of your fruitful cooperation.

And, if I am able, at this hour, to feel increasing hope of a better future for my country, I owe a large part of my satisfaction to your intelligent collaboration which has been happily seconded by the sound judgment marked your official relations with myself and with the Government.

It is an infinite satisfaction to do homage to the same, while not forgetting to express the great pleasure that I have always felt in my relations with a perfect gentleman that I have found in you.

I can offer you nothing that can better respond to my impressions, but my affectionate wishes of good health, of happiness and glory in the service of your country's service.

In the name of the Government and in my own name, I add, my dear General, my hearty thanks and the assurance of my most distinguished sen-

On December 11, 1917, an automobile was driven for the first time over the road from Gonaïves to Cape Haitien. This was the first wheeled vehicle to travel this road in 112 years. On December 18, the brigade commander reported to the major general commandant as follows: "Automobile arrived at Port au Prince, Haiti, to Cape Haitien, Haiti, yesterday." The major general commandant replied with the following radiogram: "Informal radiogram 09518 most gratifying. My sincere congratulations have been instrumental in doing this great work."

184. Captain John R. Martin died at Port au Prince, Haiti, on December 18, 1917. His funeral was held on December 18, the American Minister and representatives of the Haitian Government being among those present.

185. The brigade commander reported to the major general commander December 31, 1917, as follows:

"At 11 a. m. called officially with the brigade staff on the President and congratulated him on the one hundred and fifteenth anniversary of the independence of the Republic."

186. The military representative of the United States in Haiti in 1917 the following statement in a memorandum entitled "Relations between officials of the Haitian Government":

"The United States is carrying on in Haiti a great experiment, the object of which is a matter of national importance to the United States as the naval service is concerned, of service pride. It is, of course, a matter of doing the greatest possible work for Haiti. Nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of complete success. The thing that is for success in a higher degree than anything else is complete harmony and team work between all Americans who are in any way connected with the experiment. On the other hand, no worse thing could happen than if the Haitians get the idea that there is any lack of complete harmony between Americans who are officially here."

187. In addition to those marines mentioned by name in the foregoing paragraphs Corpl. Grover T. McNab, of the constabulary detachment, was in action with bandits at La Borgne on April 4, 1917.

188. Brig. Gen. Eli K. Cole served as brigade commander in the Republic of Haiti from November 22, 1916, to November 28, 1917, on which date he was relieved by Col. John H. Russell.

189. On July 1, 1917, there were 67 officers and 931 enlisted men of the Marine Corps on duty in the Republic of Haiti distributed among the following organizations: Headquarters, First Brigade, 7 officers, 91 enlisted men; constabulary detachment, 33 officers, 66 enlisted men; Second Brigade, 27 officers, 774 enlisted men; total, 67 officers, 931 enlisted men.

190. On December 31, 1917, there were 68 officers and 865 enlisted men of the Marine Corps on duty in the Republic of Haiti distributed among the following organizations: Headquarters, First Brigade, 9 officers, 63 enlisted men; constabulary detachment, 26 officers, 72 enlisted men; Second Brigade, 33 officers, 730 enlisted men; total, 68 officers, 865 enlisted men.

191. The major general commandant in his annual report to the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 10, 1917, made the following statement:

"The first provisional brigade of marines, in conjunction with the constabulary, has continued its efficient service in Haiti. A state of peace has been effectively maintained and the inhabitants of the country have been given an opportunity to develop its resources."

192. The Secretary of the Navy in his Annual Report to the President December 1, 1917, made the following statements:

"During the year the Marine Corps has performed excellent service in Haiti and Santo Domingo, the operations being conducted in an efficient and judicious manner. This was especially so in the suppression of the bandits in Santo Domingo. * * *

"In the business of aiding in the restoration of peaceful conditions and administration in Haiti and Santo Domingo, both in administrative and military service, officers and men of the Marine Corps have shown excellent ability and helped greatly toward the rebuilding and sanitation and wise government of these islands. During these years they have found aid and assistance in America administered through the Navy Department. To this high credit Admiral Knapp has been assigned as military representative of the United States in Haiti and head of the military government in Santo Domingo. He gives warm praise to the achievements and spirit of the Marine Corps."

193. On January 5, 1918, the President of the Republic of Haiti with the first Port au Prince in an automobile at 4 a. m. and arrived at Cape Haïtien at 7.50 p. m., making stops at Arcahaie, St. Marc, Dessalines, Gonaïves, Plaisance, and Limbe. On January 9, 1918, the presidential party left Cape Haïtien at 5.17 a. m. and arrived at Port au Prince at 8.50 p. m. On February 23, 1918, the President of Haiti, accompanied by Lieut. Col. D. Butler and others, left Port au Prince on a motor trip over the route to Mirebalais and Lascahobas. The President and party returned on the trip on February 25, 1918. The actual running time in going up to Lascahobas while the return trip consumed 3 hours and 15 minutes, due to between Lascahobas and Mirebalais.

Brigade commander's report of this first automobile trip is of interest below:

I left in automobile for Cape Haitien. About nine cars started at Port au Prince, at the same time. The leading car was driven by Colonel Butler, with the President of Haiti. A short distance from the city this car broke down and Lieutenant Colonel Butler returned to Port au Prince. I took the President in my car and continued with him on the trip, arriving there at 7.50 p. m. Stops were made on the way at Marc, Dessalines, Gonaives, Ennery, Plaisance, and Limbe.

At each stop we found the town decorated and the citizens all turned out to welcome the President. Speeches of welcome were made by the magistrat and the members of the communal council, and the President was most enthusiastic in his response. The contentment and happiness of the people, as indicated by the speeches, was not only with the present Government but with the future, for which many cheers were given. The longest stop was at Gonaives, where luncheon was served at the gendarmerie headquarters; this stop lasted for about 50 minutes. Stops at other points were from 15 to 20 minutes.

The automobiles were in very good condition and no trouble whatever was experienced during the journey except a few blow-outs.

We arrived at Cape Haitien about the same time with the exception of Colonel Butler's car, which had returned to Port au Prince, and I left with baggage, which had no lights and in consequence remained in the night at Limbe."

The brigade commander reported that on January 6, 1918, the President visited the market at 9.30 p. m., where a public ball was being held. "Amidst the applause of the people the President and magistrat each danced with one of the women present." On January 7, 1918, "at 7 a. m., I took the President and Lieutenant Colonel Butler in the regimental headquarters Ford automobile, stopping at Quartier-Morin, Limonade, Trou, Chabert, and Fort-Liberte, where the usual addresses were made. These were all decorated and great enthusiasm was shown clearly demonstrated by the contentment and happiness of the people. I was especially struck by the fact that the people all looked healthy and well fed. Many cheers for the President were given. At Quinanthe an unusually large turnout and the President showed the satisfaction of the people and greatly pleased the people who told me that he was simply delighted at their happiness and at the results which he found in the north." On January 8, 1918, the President left by special train for Grande Riviere. Upon arrival at Grande Riviere usual speeches were made and a warm welcome given the President. The following quoted letter, dated January 10, 1918, addressed by the President to the "Gen. S. D. Butler, chief of the gendarmerie of Haiti," is self-explanatory:

"My first trip in the north has been accomplished under conditions so favorable that I can not refrain from expressing my entire satisfaction and appreciation for the part you have played in this happy result. It is, in fact, the great works of reconstructing and repairing the public highways under your intelligent and energetic direction that I have been able to accomplish in a short time, to go to the north, where I have verified, to my satisfaction, the actual progress in the regions visited and the excellent condition of the inhabitants. I prophesy for my country a brilliant and a future of order and of peace.

"In giving you my most cordial congratulations, it is impossible not to mention your devoted helpers, to whom you will please convey the impression of my gratitude of my Government.

"I accept, my dear general, my deepest thanks, together with my most sincere regards."

The Acting Secretary of State expressed his appreciation of the services of Gen. Eli K. Cole in the Republic of Haiti in the following letter, January 24, 1918, to the Secretary of the Navy:

"The honor to request that your department convey to Brig. Gen. Eli K. Cole, of the United States Marine Corps, lately in command of the United States marine forces in military occupation of the island of Haiti, the thanks of the Department of State for the services he has rendered to the United States during his sojourn in Haiti, and particularly in reference to his assistance in connection with the Haitian constitution."

198. In connection with Brigadier General Cole's service in Haiti following commendation is quoted from a letter of Rear Admiral Caproni, the major general commandant on January 14, 1916:

"The commander cruiser squadron especially commends the servicing, and soldierly conduct of Col. Eli K. Cole, United States Marines, not only in these operations, but also in his handling of the situation at Port au Prince prior to the arrival of the brigade."

199. The following letter, dated March 6, 1918, from President Darrin to "Gen. S. D. Butler, chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti," is set forth:

"I feel a sincere pleasure, at the time of your return to the United States, to send you a testimony of my deep satisfaction for the cooperation and assistance you have given to the Government of Haiti, in its work of peace and order. I explain to myself and fully understand how necessary to your health and diversion after the long labors to which you have submitted yourself was your arrival in Haiti.

"I then extend my most sincere wishes that you have a good journey home, my dear General Butler, and Mrs. Butler, who is included in the wishes that I express at your intention, and chiefly that your health and greatest profit from your leave, in order that, returned to Haiti with a store of energy, you will be able to continue to lend the Government much appreciated help.

"Expressing the desire to see you return in the country, I do not regret the present circumstances which put the United States in the position of calling for all its men of merit and energy. Should these circumstances take you away from Haiti, you can be sure that the Government, and particularly, would feel a real regret to be deprived of your valuable help. It has so much helped, and that I shall keep of both you and Mrs. Butler with much agreeable remembrance.

"In these feelings, one more 'bon voyage,' my dear general, and adieu, in expression of my heartiest consideration."

200. In accepting the resignation of Col. Percy F. Archer as such chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, President Dartiguenave, on April 3, 1918, expressed himself as follows:

"While expressing my regret to see you obliged to leave my service, I address to you my liveliest congratulations on your work for peace in Haiti, the stability of my Government. The ability, regularity, and activity which you have manifested in the performance of your duties has given you a place on my memory and the memory of the country. I am happy to tell you by your conduct, so worthy of praise, you have responded to the sentiment of loyalty which characterizes the aid and assistance which His Excellency, President Wilson has lent my people to allow it to take its evolution, to become prosperous and powerful. My best wishes accompany you in the part that you have been called to furnish to the triumph of the right and liberty, the heroism for which your country is paying the sacrifice of its marvelous resources and the precious blood of its children."

201. On June 3, 1918, the brigade commander at Port au Prince received a radio from the commanding officer of the Second Regiment of marines at Port au Prince to the effect that he had received what he considered to be reliable information from two widely separated sources that plans had been made for an immediate uprising. By prompt action the brigade commander prevented a contemplated demonstration. That the action of the brigade commander is appreciated is shown by the following letter dated July 9, 1918, from the Assistant Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Navy:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your confidential letter of the 25th ultimo, in which you inclose a report from the brigade commander of the United States Marines, at Port au Prince, stating the action taken by him in a view of repressing certain anti-Government and antioccupation acts in Haiti.

"I have the honor to say in reply that the department highly appreciates the manner in which Colonel Russell handled the situation, and I shall be glad if you will be good enough so to advise him."

202. In connection with the satisfactory performance of duty in Haiti, Col. John H. Russell, the following two letters are quoted. The first, dated April 29, 1918, from the major general commandant to Colonel Russell, and the second, dated May 14, 1918, to Colonel Russell from Charles C. Eberhart, major general at large:

ing Rear Admiral Harry S. Knapp, United States Navy, Military Santo Domingo, called upon me, and during his call took occasion the excellent work you had performed during your tour in Santo Haiti. big fire on September 16, 1918. The President of Haiti warmly commended the marines for their services in the following letter, dated September 19, 1918, to the brigade commander:

"I have the honor to thank you, in the name of the Government, for the great assistance which the marines gave to the people of Port au Prince during the fire of the 16th of September instant.

"In begging you to kindly interpret and transmit to the marines my devotion during the great disaster has been greatly appreciated. In return for the Government's sincere thanks, I pray you to accept, Mr. Colonel, both the expression of my gratitude and the assurance of my high consideration."

206. The operation of the Corvee System was discontinued on October 1, 1918. (See pars. 233, 234, and 274 of this letter.)

207. The gendarmes stationed at Hinche engaged bandits under the command of Peralte in October, 1918, killing 35, but suffering fatal casualties among themselves. Additional gendarme troops immediately took to the field and captured many more bandits. Under date of October 17 and 18, 1918, the brigade commander reported this incident as follows:

"Received a report that a small band of bandits had come down from the mountains at night and fired on the town of Hinche. The gendarmes at Hinche immediately engaged with them and killed 35. Two gendarmes were killed.

"This affair conclusively proves to my mind the efficiency of the gendarmes and the security of the country in their control.

"For years, of course, it may be expected that bandits who live in the mountains east of Cerca la Source will come down into the plains for raids. In this case the leader was said to be an escaped convict, Captain Peralte. The gendarmerie are trying to round up any who may be engaged in this affair and who have escaped.

"Further information was received concerning the operation of the bandits at Hinche which was reported under date of October 17. It appears that 12 armed bandits came down from the mountains on the Haitian-Dominican border gathering in an unarmed force of civilians for the purpose of obtaining other support. Early information was received by the gendarmes at Hinche regarding this contemplated attack and this punitive and preventive force was met by the gendarmes in such a manner as it is believed to have given the bandits a lesson in the future. None of the civil population of Hinche was killed, and the only two gendarmes killed or wounded were injured by the fire of their own force. Gendarme mounted troops immediately took to the field and succeeded in capturing a number of them and killing several. It is previously reported this affair has no political or military significance and so ever and repetition of such raids by bandits hidden away in the interior frontier may be expected for some time to time."

208. The brigade commander, under date of November 11, 1918, reported the following:

"A few bandits are operating in the mountains surrounding the Hinche district, making occasional descents down on the plain. Numerous small parties, however, been sent to this district and a troop of cavalry is now operating there and it is hoped that they will soon be completely broken up."

209. The brigade commander, Col. John H. Russell, was relieved on October 7, 1918, by Brig. Gen. Albertus W. Catlin.

210. On July 1, 1918, there were 59 officers and 800 enlisted men of the Marine Corps on duty in the Republic of Haiti distributed among the following organizations:

report of the Subcommittee for Investigation of Conduct and Administration of the Navy, dated March 11, 1918, and published as Appendix A of the Report of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, dated December 18, contains the following:

that, besides taking care of new appointments in the commissioned ranks, the enlistments and the training of this additional force, the Marine Corps has attended without a hitch to its ordinary and regular duties of guarding harbors and naval stations, both in and outside of the United States. It has furnished expeditionary forces for duty in France and elsewhere outside the United States and supplied marine detachments for all battleships, cruisers, and auxiliary vessels placed in commission during existing hostilities. At the present time it has kept a force of officers and men in Haiti and Santo Domingo to maintain good order against certain insurrectionary elements amongst the natives."

In his annual report to the President, dated December 1, 1918, the Secretary of the Navy made the following statements:

"In addition to the splendid service the marines have rendered on land, on the water, and in the air in Europe they have performed their usual duties in other parts of the world."

* * In Haiti and Santo Domingo they are helping in the work of maintaining law, sanitation, and development, keeping in order the few remaining elements of insurrection. The good conditions in these islands have been largely brought about by the firm and efficient and cooperative spirit of the marines on duty."

Under the direction and guidance of naval administration, the islands have enjoyed quiet and just laws well administered, enjoyed development, prosperity, and tranquillity. The marines have not only preserved order, but have effected a measure of internal improvement."

In Santo Domingo and Haiti the people have learned that the United States policy except one of unselfish friendship and neighborliness, and good offices to secure stable conditions that will redound to the welfare of the people of these two countries, long disturbed by revolution and insurrection."

Major General Commandant in his annual report to the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 10, 1918, made the following statement:

"Haiti and Santo Domingo the work done by the marines has been a success. Generally speaking, a state of peace has been maintained in both countries. There have been a few outbreaks of bandits in Santo Domingo. The marine forces have been amply able to suppress any sudden uprisings. It may be stated that conditions have been very materially improved in both countries under military control, and the officers and men stationed there have performed their duties most satisfactorily and efficiently." "A small revolution started in the latter part of 1918, under the leadership of Charlemagne Peralte in North Haiti, continued in a small way throughout 1919, Charlemagne being killed in October, 1919, and was succeeded by Jean-Baptiste, who was also killed in April, 1920."

The patrols and the gendarmerie had numerous skirmishes with the bandits during the year 1919, and finally succeeded in breaking up the outlawry. On January 8, 1919, the brigade commander reported that for the past several months the gendarmerie patrols had several encounters with small bands and had killed all of the bandits. On February 4 a gendarme patrol, under Lieutenant, routed a band of 200 men, and on the same day it was also reported that gendarmes line-men were attacked by Cacos while repairing the line near Muscadia. On February 21 a gendarmerie detachment defeated a band of bandits north of Mirabalais, killing and wounding a number of them. On March 12 a band of about 70 Cacos were reported to have occupied the town of Bois, north of Lake Assuey, and killed two of the three gendarmes there. On March 17 a detachment of gendarmes had a running fight with a large band of Cacos north of Las Cahobas. On March 20 the marines and two gendarmes, assisted by a few inhabitants, beat the Cacos at Ronquith. On March 21 Sergt. Nicholas B. Moskoff of the detachment, was wounded in action at Dufall, dying of his wounds the next day. On March 25 Gunnery Sergt. Chester J. Abbot was wounded at Mirabalais. On March 28 Sergt. Henry C. Willis and Pvt. Roy were wounded in action, the former dying of his wounds. On April 2 Pvt. H. Grodi was wounded in action at Petit Fond. On April 4 Maj. John L. with four officers and 51 men, attacked about 500 bandits and scattered them; Major Mayer being killed in action; on the same day a patrol destroyed the camp of Charlemagne Peralte, and killed several bandits. On April 9 a band of about 75 bandits were encountered west of St. Marc while a party repairing telephone lines, Gen. Demosthenes Merinord being with them. On April 14 Captain Burks jumped bandit camp 15 miles south of St. Marc and killed several. On April 17 the gendarmes had a skirmish with the bandits at Maitland. On April 21 a marine patrol surprised a bandit chief named Benoit while he was riding his horse. On May 19 a skirmish took place between a patrol and the bandits at Terrier Rouge. On May 20 the bandits were driven off by marines at Maitland. On May 30 there was a skirmish at Narde. Skirmishes occurred on June 4, near Mirabalais; on June 13, near Bellabare; on June 19, near Cayman; on June 20, near Acul Samedi; on June 30, between St. Michel and Raphael; on July 1, at Monlin Crochu; on June 3, at Cerca la Source; on July 9, at Pignon; on July 10, at Terra Rouge, one corporal of marines being killed; on July 11, between Fort Liberte and Terrier Rouge; on July 13, between Carvajal, and at Malssade, and at Les Perches; on July 14, at Grand Bois and at Petit Fond; on July 15, at Grand Bois; on July 17, at Terra Rouge; on July 19, at La Chapelle, Pignon, Malssade, and Hinche; on July 20, at la Source; on July 22, at Saut d'Eau, Chomonde, and Fond des Orangers; on July 22, at Savanne, Grande, and Cholet; on July 24, at Pignon and Maitland; on July 25, at Laoy and Baramque; on July 26, at Norme Cranale, between Malssade and Pignon; on July 27, the camp of Chief Benoit was destroyed; on July 27, at Jacoline; on July 28, at Source Bamboo and Fond Carvajal; on July 29, at La Hoy; on July 30, at Fort Zinque; and on July 31, at Baie de la Source. Prvt. Raphael H. Grodi was wounded at Petit Fond on April 2, 1919, and Cecil H. Ames on April 7, at the same place.

218. During the month of August skirmishes were had with the bandits at the following places: Petite Riviere de l'artibonite, Saracen, Baie Terrible, Saut d'Eau, Thomassique, Malssade, St. Raphael, Cemetery Flende, Mount of Terra Rouge, Cerca Carvajal, Mirabalais, Cholet, Dessalines, Gauthier, of Guayamoc, Savanette, Madame Jole, Lermite, Baie Terrible, Las Perches, Dufalya, Malssade, Thomassique, Chapel Madame Jole, Perodon, Las Perches, Madame Jole, Ranche Antoine, Grande, Laguey, between Carvajal and la Source, Las Cahobas.

219. During the month of August one marine was wounded in action with the bandits.

220. During the month of September skirmishes were had with the bandits at the following places: La Victoire, near Mirabalais (two attacks), Caspaigne Terrible (Corporal Debelle slightly wounded), west bank of the River, Saut d'Eau, Malssade, near Hinche, near Mirabalais, Bois de la Pain, Baie Terrible, near Malssade, cattle train near Hinche, outskirts of Petite Montaigne, Laselle, Terra Rouge, Boucan Carre, Savanette, Saut d'Eau, Montaigne, Noire, Hinche-Malssade road, Ranquette, Bas de St. mos, Terra Rouge (two marines acting as gendarme officers killed, taken for bandits), near Carvajal, Malssade, Lamocet, Malssade, near Hinche, Saut d'Eau, Mirabalais, Malssade, Pignon, near Mirabalais, Hondo Valle, Bas de Saut, outside of Hinche, and La Masse.

220. A very few skirmishes occurred during the month of October. James O'Byrne was wounded in action at Mirabalais on October 11. Shots were fired in the city of Port au Prince in one of the bad storms on the same date. A four-hour fight occurred between the gendarmes and the bandits when the latter attacked Cerca Carvajal on October 25.

221. On October 30, 1919, the brigade commander reported:

"Arrangements made for a campaign against Charlemagne and it is hoped that results may be obtained therefrom in a few days.

"Bandits approached the town of Mirabalais, fired three shots, and killed off two citizens who lived well on the outskirts of the town, escaping the patrols in the fog and darkness.

patrol at Montagnes Noires struck and destroyed a bandit camp. It hit small bands of bandits at Bouoque Marie and in the section the night of October 31–November 1, 1919. Charlemagne Peralte by marines, the brigade commander's report under date of November 1, 1919, being as follows:

Details of the death of Charlemagne.

Charlemagne Peralte, with about 1,200 men, undertook to capture Grande Riviere. He then had planned the capture of Le Trou and an attack on Cape Maitland. Captain Hanneken, of the gendarmerie (sergeant, United States Marine Corps), was aware of the contemplated attack on Grande Riviere and the location of Charlemagne's headquarters during the attack and he had planned to capture or kill Charlemagne by attacking his headquarters. In his plans he carried out, the greatest secrecy was maintained and in the force of Grande Riviere was made, as it was necessary that the attack on Grande Riviere be made by the bandits.

On the night of October 31, 1919, Captain Hanneken, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, and William R. Button, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, with faces blackened, and 20 men in old, dirty civilian clothes, and one automatic rifle, took up position at the point where it had been learned Charlemagne intended to establish headquarters during the attack on Grande Riviere.

Information soon reached them that Charlemagne had changed his plans and moved some three hours away on the top of a hill.

It was known, as well as the fact that Charlemagne expected the arrival of bandits to bring him information of the capture of Grande

Cape Maitland. Hanneken had observed some 700 men advancing to an attack on Grande Riviere. He knew the attack on Grande Riviere would take place. He intended to advance with his own force and try and penetrate Charlemagne's camp to capture or kill him.

At great risk and with many narrow escapes, he and his men penetrated through six lines of outposts and at midnight attacked the camp and Charlemagne and nine other bandits. It is believed Charlemagne's camp consisted of not less than 250 men.

Charlemagne's body was taken to the Cape and properly identified."

Awards of honor were awarded to Second Lieut. Herman H. Hanneken, 1st Lieut. William R. Button, General Order No. 536 of the Navy Department, dated November 10, 1920, reading as follows:

The Navy Department takes pleasure in announcing to the service the award of the medal of honor to Herman H. Hanneken, second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, and to William R. Button, corporal, United States Marine Corps, for extraordinary heroism in the line of their profession and eminent and conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in actual conflict with the enemy near Grande Riviere, Republic of Haiti, on the night of October 31–November 1, 1919.

Information having been received at district headquarters that Charlemagne, the supreme bandit chief in the Republic of Haiti, accompanied by about 1,200 outlaw followers, had arrived in the vicinity of Capois, Haiti, with the avowed purpose of capturing and pillaging the town of Grande Riviere, permission was granted Second Lieutenant Hanneken, then

(captain, Gendarmerie d'Haiti), United States Marine Corps, and William R. Button (first lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti), United States Marine Corps, to carry into execution previously arranged plans for the capture of the bandit chief. Selecting about 20 gendarmes, all of whom were properly disguised, Hanneken and Button, on the night of October 31, took position where they might observe the movements of Charlemagne. About 700 bandits having been observed making their way toward Grande Riviere, it was decided to endeavor to capture Charlemagne in his camp. It was understood he purposed to remain and receive reports of the pending attack upon the town of Grande Riviere. After several hours' difficult mountain climbing through a country overrun by the first of the six outposts guarding Charlemagne's camp was reached. Due to the effectiveness of their disguise and aided by the darkness during the night, the challenges and examinations of the enemy at this outpost was successfully passed, as were the four succeeding outposts. The sixth outpost was the immediate guard over Charlemagne, being a few paces from the person of the bandit chief. Advancing rapidly toward Charlemagne, who apparently had been led to believe that the men approaching him were members of his band with reports from the Grande Riviere, Hanneken, armed with two revolvers, and Button, with a light Browning machine gun, were suddenly halted by two bandits who handled their rifles in a threatening manner. Believing that no further was to be lost, Hanneken promptly opened fire upon Charlemagne, and with equal promptness turned his machine gun upon the remaining bandits who were seeking cover. The surprise attack was a complete success, the dead body of Charlemagne and about 9 of his bodyguard were found in the camp. The bandits, however, continued their fire throughout the night upon the position held by Hanneken and his force, and during the night of November 1, 1919, several bands of outlaws, retreating from their unsuccessful attack upon Grande Riviere, were encountered and dispersed.

"Second Lieutenant Hanneken and Corporal Button not only demonstrated themselves by their excellent judgment and leadership but at all times placed themselves unhesitatingly in great personal danger. Their movements during the night in a thickly wooded country overrun with several hundred armed Haitian bandits. At any time during the night of October 31, November 1, 1919, the slightest hesitation or error of judgment would have cost not only their own lives but the lives of the detachment of gendarmes under their command. The successful termination of their mission will undoubtedly prove of untold value to the Republic of Haiti."

224. The brigade commander, under date of November 1, 1919, reported that he had received the news of the death of the bandit chief, Charlemagne, and that he had immediately issued general instructions to spread the news of Charlemagne's death and to increase our military activities by sending out patrols and trying to round up bandits while disheartened. The brigade commander called on me, and was very much elated over the news of Charlemagne's death.

225. Private Clarence E. Morris, of Squadron E, First Division Marine Corps, was killed by Haitians on November 4, 1919, the brigade commander's report, dated November 22, reading as follows:

"Information was received regarding the death of Private Morris (Squadron E unit). It appears that Private Morris left his plane, taking with him a Lewis air machine gun and three drums of ammunition. He obtained three natives to guide him, and later gave the machine gun to one of the natives to carry. Becoming tired, he sat down, and while in this position one of the three natives came behind and struck him with a machete, killing him. The natives then took the machine gun, his clothes, and ammunition and fled out to join the bandits. The above information was given by a bandit who recently surrendered.

"Patrols were at once sent out to the position indicated by the bandit, and the information he gave led to the recovery of the remains of Private Morris, of which by this time nothing but bones and the leather of his helmet remained. The machine gun was also recovered and about 100 rounds of ammunition."

226. The early facts concerning the incident which led to the death of Private Morris are contained in the following report of the brigade commander, under date of November 7, 1919:

"Lieutenant McFayden and Pvt. Clarence E. Morris made a forced landing last night north of Maissade. Lieutenant McFayden left Morris in the disabled plane and walked to Hinche, arriving there at 7 a. m. this morning, reporting the landing of the plane. Patrols and another plane were sent out to look for the disabled plane. The patrols first failed to find it, but the plane was located by another plane about 4 p. m. On landing it was discovered that Private Morris had left his plane, taking with him the Lewis air machine gun and three drums of ammunition. Patrols were sent out in all directions. Natives living in the vicinity and market women in the towns questioned about Private Morris, but to no avail."

227. Pvt. Harry Lawrence was killed by the Haitians on November 10, 1919, between Chapelle Nouilles and Saut d'Eau, the brigade commander's report, under date of November 30, reading as follows:

"Pvt. Harry Lawrence reported missing. Private Lawrence was operating as a patrol operating in the Mirebalais district under the command of Lieutenant Cukela. The patrol had had a skirmish with a bandit group, and a short time after Private Lawrence was discovered to be missing."

t in all directions in order to try and rescue him or obtain information about him."

November 27, 1919, the brigade commander reported that "several ved from patrols in the Mirebalais district. Struck large groups and dispersed them." On November 28 he reported: "Held a con-the commanding officer, Mirebalais district, regarding the necessary down the bandit leader Benoit Batravail. I believe it exorable at this time to capture or eliminate this man, as he is more an any of the others in his methods."

December 28, 1919, the brigade commander reported as follows: of bandit activities in the hills and patrols have been sent out in s. The military situation in spite of the small force at my command gradually improving. Numerous groups of bandits still exist and ; throughout the country. These must be harassed and finally run st difficult matter—but gradually we are working out plans for and clearing them up, keeping up at all times the most aggressive nstant patrolling, in order to try to clear up the situation as much luring the present dry season. With a larger force at my command situation could be cleared up, but the present strength will only disintegrate the bandit groups as to prevent any serious reorganism during the coming wet season."

Admiral Thomas Snowden assumed the duties of military representative of the United States in the Republic of Haiti on February 25, 1919.

June 15, 1919, the brigade commander reported as follows:

work turned over to engineer of Haiti, on authority of military ve of United States in Haiti."

President Dartiguenave, on July 14, 1919, addressed the following letter S. Williams, chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti: "

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 14, No. 857-19, by which you hat you have been recalled to serve with the United States Marine submit your resignation as an officer of the gendarmerie, to take e date of your departure.

In accepting this resignation I feel that I ought to do a deserved homage it of discipline that you have impressed upon the gendarmerie to recognize the big share you made yours in the realization of the errors that might have been committed in the accomplishment of they were unavoidable, and any thinking man could not find their here else than in the conditions of the country, which it is necessary with if one wants to arrive without long trials to the reform of l institutions. These errors are, anyhow, largely paid for, in my the general results obtained for the benefit of the Haitian society. arting from you with the deepest regret and will never forget the lations, marked with such a frank cordiality, that I have had the enjoy with you during your stay in Haiti.

I receive, General, with my wishes to go ahead in your noble career, ion of my hearty feelings."

Colonel Alexander S. Williams, United States Marine Corps, Chief of merie d'Haiti, received the following letter, dated July 17, 1919, him by President Dartiguenave:

the moving manifestations of June 23 last, when some officers and gendarmerie received the rewards deserved by their conduct and had occasion to express to you the congratulations of the Governme work that you have accomplished in Haiti, congratulations which er persons present concurred in.

I desire to give you a personal testimony of my satisfaction, and I a sword, the symbol of gallantry and energy, is what is best suitable r, the natural protector of justice and guardian of honor. With ssible pleasure I offer this one to you, hoping that in whatever counce call of duty will lead you in, it will remind you of this country, ing four years, you have stoutly helped to install that spirit of discipline, basis of all progress and civilization.

Deep, personally, be sure of it, the best remembrance of your active and of the personal relations that I had with you.

I accept, my dear General, the hearty expressions of my most disfeelings."

233. The following proclamation to the citizens of Haiti, published in Brigade Memorandum Order, No. 128, is self-explanatory; dated August 19, 1919:

"Citizens of Haiti:

"The time has come to put a stop to further bloodshed. It has become necessary to use stern measures to repress the disorders in the north. At the recent arrival of military engines we can use even sterner measures. I hope, with your help, to be able to abandon such means. I ask your cooperation and I ask you to have faith in the good intentions which the President of the United States of America entertain toward your country."

"The corvée has been done away with entirely. Work on the roads is entirely voluntary and will be paid for daily. The workmen will come and go when it pleases them; they shall be paid for the hours of work. Any injustices committed by native or American officials should be reported to American military officials and justice will be done and the offenders punished."

"It is the desire of the American people to establish security and prosperity in this country. It can not be done while the bandits burn and rob. All good inhabitants should give the greatest assistance to officers of the occupation in suppressing the bandits. All natives who have been tempted to join these thieves and bandits, masquerading under the name of Cacos, who desire to resume their peaceful farming, have but to report to the military officials, assure them of their peaceful intent and future loyalty, and a full pardon and all possible protection will be granted. This protection is impossible if the country people continue to support the bandits and the Cacos themselves Cacos."

"I personally promise you that the United States Government desires to give to the citizens of Haiti security and prosperity and the enjoyment of liberty, equality, and fraternity." (See paragraphs 180, 234, and 235 of the letter.)

234. A history of the corvée system (referred to in the preceding paragraph) in the Republic of Haiti is contained in the following quoted letter from the brigade commander, dated June 19, 1919:

"1. By the word 'corvée' is meant a system of enforced labor. In Haiti such a system has formed a part of the law for many years prior to the American occupation. It had not been enforced for some time due to the chaotic conditions prevailing as a result of the almost incessant revolutions in that country."

"2. As a consequence of this lack of enforcement of the law, the roads in Haiti outside of the towns and cities, and communication at these points by land was almost impossible."

"3. Soon after the American occupation of Haiti it was realized that the roads between the principal towns were a military necessity."

"4. By the corvée system, men living in a district were required to work on the main road or artery in that district a certain number of days during the year. The Haitian Government was without funds to employ labor for public work, or in fact, for any public work. It was heavily in debt, to the effect of some $31,000,000, and the United States was trying to rehabilitate it. The act of the United States must be to enforce law and order and develop the country throughout the land. In order to accomplish this, good roads were necessary."

"5. The gendarmerie of Haiti, which was formed soon after the American occupation, acting for the Haitian Government, resurrected and put in force this old corvée law. Great strides in road making were effected, and many months a road from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien and from Port au Prince to Ouanaminthe was opened up. The occasion of the opening of this road was made a source of great rejoicing by the Haitians and the President of the Republic of Haiti made the trip from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien and Ouanaminthe in an automobile to his great satisfaction and that of the people in all the hamlets and towns along the route. Another road was opened up between Port au Prince and Jacmel."

"6. About this time, it was brought to my notice that some dissatisfaction existed over the corvée system, and although I knew the President of the Republic was heartily in favor of this work, I decided in September of 1919 that the military necessity for the construction of roads no longer existed. I informed the chief of the Gendarmerie of Haiti to that effect, and that enforced labor on roads be stopped. The chief of the gendarmerie" that effect and road making in Haiti consequently ceased, the small funds to the Gendarmerie of Haiti for the repair of roads being not sufficient to maintain the road to Cape Haitien and Ouanaminthe, and the road to Jacmel, in a state of good repair.

It is realized that from Jacmel to Port au Prince, one has to go on a tedious trip by horse, and that now the trucks can carry cargo from Port au Prince, where they can be shipped north or that on from Cape Haitien, Gonaives, and St. Marc to Port au Prince. Maintained where heretofore it has been solely by water, the advantages are to Haiti from a commercial, as well as a military standpoint, (See paragraphs 180, 234, and 274 of this letter.)

Lt. Col. L. McCarty Little assumed command of the First Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, on July 15, 1919, relieving Brig. Gen. W. Catlin, who was on leave in the United States.

is quoted below an extract from the report of the military representative of the United States in Haiti, September 2, 1919:

General Catlin accompanied General Catlin on a visit to the advanced positions of the bandits and beyond in order to get some idea of conditions regarding the bandits. He also visited Gonaives and Cape Haitien. A report of the condition was found to exist. While the bandits were still in small bands, here and there, they were much broken up and the military was trying to obtain favorable terms of surrender from the military.

The handling of the operations by the military authorities is satisfactory and, while unsettled conditions still exist and will so exist for some time to come, matters can be said to be well in hand. The gendarmerie is rendering acceptable service in aiding the marines in policing the country and in punishing the bandits. Under existing conditions, I recommend that the present military forces be fully maintained."

On the date of September 4, 1919, Secretary of State Robert Lansing sent the following letter to the Secretary of the Navy:

The Department has received a cablegram from the American minister at Port au Prince dated August 29, 1919, in which he states that a report is prevalent at the expiration of his leave General Catlin will retire at his own request and consequently be relieved as brigade commander of the First Provisional Brigade. The minister states that if the report is true he would most urgently request the assignment of Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps, to this post as successor to General Catlin. The minister states that in his previous service there Colonel Russell has shown his ability to handle the situation in an extremely satisfactory manner and that he is familiar with the conditions in Haiti.

The information received by the minister is correct, I venture to suggest that the appointment of Colonel Russell be made, as he is in all probability the best person whom the department could send.

The Department will be glad to be advised at as early a date as you may see fit as to whether the Navy Department will find it practicable to transfer Colonel Russell to Haiti."

Colonel John H. Russell assumed command of the First Provisional Brigade in the Republic of Haiti on October 1, 1919, relieving Lieut. Col. L. McCarty Little.

On Sunday, November 16, 1919, marines who were detailed as officers of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti were decorated at Port au Prince by President L. O. G. with Haitian medaille militaire, for destroying Charlemagne and his band. A few minutes before 3 o'clock a battalion of gendarmes of the Champ de Mars. Attired in uniform similar to that of the United States marines upon whom they are modeled and by whom they are being replaced, they marched on to the parade grounds and swung into line. The party took its position with Gen. Frederic M. Wise (who relieved Gen. A. S. Williams on July 19, 1919), Gendarmerie d'Haiti (Colonel, United States Marine Corps), on President Sudre Dartiguenave's right and Gen. A. S. Williams on his right and rear. To the right and rear of this line was Col. Russell, United States Marine Corps, brigade commander, and a port staff. When the President arrived the President's march had been an excellent band of the Gendarmerie. As the President faced the band he played the rather fine strains of the Haitian national anthem brought the band to the "present arms," and all military units rendered the salute. At command they advanced and halted before the President. The four officers to be decorated: Col. James J. Meade, Gendarmerie d'Haiti and United States Marine Corps; Capt. Herman H. Hamer, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant in the Marine Corps); Second Lieut. W. Button, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (corporal in the Marine Corps); and Lieut. H. R. Woods, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant in the Marine Corps). The decorations were then presented. The decorated officers were joined by the President in taking the review. The band struck up "Semper Paratus," the marching tune sacred to the marines, and, with an easy precision and a correctness of alignment that spoke plainly of the thorough training, the battalion, led by its Marine Corps officers, passed in review. The brigade commander, under date of November 16, 1919, made the following report of this affair:

"During the afternoon medals given by the Haitian Government to officers who participated in the attack on Charlemagne's camp, and to officers of Grande Riviere were given to these officers by the President. It was after the ceremony the President invited us to a small reception at the palace. While at the palace, the President informed me that he was very much pleased on account of what had taken place during the last few days."

240. In his annual report to the President, dated December 1, 1919, the Secretary of the Navy made the following statements:

"Expeditionary forces have been maintained, as in previous years, in Haiti and Santo Domingo. While there have been some outbreaks of the gendarmerie in Haiti and the constabulary in Santo Domingo, which were officered by members of the Navy and Marine Corps, have proven of great value in maintaining peace and order.

"Under the naval administration of Haiti, the marine forces have been serving order and suppressing banditry and robbery by the criminals affected elements. Conditions have improved, and the bandits are being captured or have surrendered. The education and health of the people have improved, and the enforcement of law has been followed by progress to the industrious residents.

"Called to restore order and administer the finances of these countries close to us in geography and in interest, it is gratifying to report that we have been freed from all suggestion of selfish aims on the part of the civil and military agencies. The development of the country:

tro of the people's improvement in agriculture; the firm and kind n of justice have borne their fruit in the most prosperous years f these neighbor governments. Major General (Commandant) in his annual report to the Secretary, dated October 10, 1919, made the following statements: "In the e year expeditionary forces have been maintained, in previous n, Haiti and Santo Domingo. There have been a number of outdits in both the latter places, but three have been promptly sup-stated: previously in this report, two aviation squadrons have e each to Haiti and Santo Domingo, and these have proven very cutting and, with the assistance of the land forces, in dispersing ws by machine-gun fire and the dropping of bombs."

Let the occasion pass without making mention of the thoroughly er in which the officers and men stationed in Cuba, Haiti, and go have performed the duties assigned to them. To the majority is a bitter disappointment to be ordered to duty there when they d expected that they would get a chance to fight the Germans in act, a very large percentage of the enlisted force were men who with that sole purpose. However, with but few exceptions, they own personal feelings and wishes and performed their duties wonerous and disappointing in view of what they had expected, capable and efficient manner. Though in an inconspicuous and er, they did their part in winning the war just as much as did re fortunate enough to go to France.

Gendarmes in Haiti and the constabulary in Santo Domingo, icered by members of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of l Marine Corps stationed in those places, were in practical opera-out the year and have proven of immense value in the pacifical development of those countries.

Operations against Haitian bandits from January 1, to March, 1920, t in general in the following report dated March 10, 1920, by the ander to the military representative of the United States in Haiti:
ning on January 1, 1920, an intensive campaign against the band-d and northern Haiti was undertaken by all units in the field.
o months prior to this time the patrolling was carried on as has ore and the time was utilized more particularly in preparing a de staff organization, reorganizing the brigade, improving the ilitary conditions of the men in the field, especially at our main es, and making preparations to start more active field work at the the year.

Three accompanying maps, one for the month of December, one for f January, and one for February, illustrate graphically the work by the brigade and gendarmerie.

As a result of this work, together with the lesson received by the bandits ed to enter the city of Port au Prince and now referred to by them le," and the deportation of Germans is made apparent by the many and men who are daily surrendering.

Of the past month 2,995 have surrendered and since December 27, 0,000 "bon habitants" passes have been issued.

In order to prove their sincerity I require that all chiefs who surrender go out with one of our patrols, thus identifying themselves with us, and furthermore, I require that they shall talk with the people to induce them to stop brigandage, return to their homes, start their land, and obey the laws of their country and the occupation.
One time I have been in touch with Benoit Bistraville but I am iced that his statement that he desired to surrender was false.
k ago I gave him 10 days in which to comply with the conditions therwise my proposition would be considered canceled. Yesterday atrols struck his camp. He had about 800 men and about 50 rifles.
his band at once broke up into small groups which are now being ed by our patrols. A very important and useful bandit leader named Dominique recently surrendered at Las-has been doing excellent work for the occupation in assisting our nducing the people to return to their farms.

In a careful estimate of the situation in Haiti, I am of the opinion he past two months tremendous strides have been made toward the pacification of Haiti and with the capture, surrender, or death of Benoit. The pacification of the city will be practically complete.

"10. Of course, for some time small bands of what are really bandits will continue to roam over certain uninhabited sections, descending over sections or habitations remote from large towns to commit depredations. Such bands will gradually disappear through our patrols, and persistence of the Consul d'Agriculture and good inhabitants and the opening up of the country by the introduction of roads, etc. It must be remembered that the section in which bandit groups have been operating was, three or four days ago, many days journey from Port au Prince, could only be reached on foot, and was consequently in a state bordering on savagery.

"11. It is perhaps unnecessary to remark that the above much improved conditions has been brought about mainly by the tireless efforts of the men in the field, and the brigade headquarters staff, especially the staff as G-3 (Maj. R. L. Sheppard). Ceaseless patrolling over the trails, and following up of rumors to find perhaps nothing but disinformation, at the end, the return to camp with a rest up or perhaps a touch of rain, then out again, the strain incident to patrolling or small detached parties where one must be constantly on the qui vive and remembers the battle of 1919, where 50 armed bandits rushed the sentinel guarding his four men, have all tended to make the work a real man's work requiring of men the qualifications of good soldiers.

"12. That they have succeeded so well is due in a large measure to the skill, and enthusiasm of the officer (Lieutenant Colonel Little) who is in command of the marines and gendarmerie operating in the affected area.

243. The brigade commander under date of January 10, 1920, reports as follows:

"This was election day. The elections were communal elections. I stationed a representative of the occupation with authority not to interfere with the election in any way but to report on the results of the election law, and if necessary to preserve order.

"Port au Prince was the only city in Haiti where trouble was expected, but extraordinary precautions were taken to prevent any trouble and the result election day was one of the quietest we have had for some time. Clement Maglorie, the editor of Le Matin, and at present a member of the communal commission was elected magistrate of the commune of Port au Prince. Reports received indicate that the communal elections went quietly throughout Haiti.

"Received information that a group of bandits had arrived in northern Haiti and sent immediate instructions to start a most aggressive and active campaign against them to drive them out of northern Haiti at once, as it was of considerable importance that quiet should be maintained in Haiti."

244. On January 12, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows: "Reports, received indicate a decided improvement from a military point in the Marebais and Las Cahobas district.

"Every effort is now being exerted to capture the bandit chief Benoit. He was recently elected president by the other bandit chiefs. It is important that he should be taken, from both a military and political point.

"Large numbers of surrenders have taken place recently, including chiefs, the greater number of whom have stated that they surrendered because they considered their cause hopeless."

245. The brigade commander on January 15, 1920, reported as follows: "About 4 a. m. this date, bandits with a strength of approximately 100 attempted to enter the city of Port au Prince, first dividing into three groups. They were promptly met by marine and gendarme patrols, driving them back and pursued them to the hills, patrols at daybreak being sent westward to the Cul de Sac to work into Port au Prince, combating that section. About 10 per cent of the bandits who attempted to enter the city were killed or wounded. A chief named Solamon who led the column into the Rue de la Paix and set fire to a few shacks in this section was captured. This man was with the bandits for some time. He comes from the Belair section of Port au Prince and stated that he is the only one who could lead them against the city and that the lesson that they received was entirely unexpected and that as Port au Prince is concerned he does not believe that they would attack it again. From another man it is expected that valuable in-ined as regards the assistance and direction to this movement ain people in Port au Prince. This information I am very anxbrigade commander on February 7, 1920, made a report to the ul Commandant concerning the following incident that occurred mentioned engagement:

1."

commended that Sergt. Edward J. Daly, United States Marine ven a letter of commendation from your office for his excellent the morning of January 15, 1920.

cts are as follows: Sergeant Daly was sent with Pvt. Lencil Combs er M. McLaughlin to act as a point. Sergeant Daly saw a man in niform (one of the bandits) who beckoned to Sergeant Daly to Sergeant Daly did so and was immediately jumped by about 40 had been partially concealed by the darkness. Sergeant Daly men were completely surrounded. Private Combs was shot through dying later from his wound. Private McLaughlin's wrist was rough and Sergeant Daly was knocked down by a blow on the m a club and badly cut on the back of the right leg. He recovered using a rifle as a club fought his way out, receiving another cut on kder. The main patrol then arrived and dispersed the band.

nt Daly continued in the fight although the surgeon recommended a dressing station to have his wounds dressed.

ction commenced at about 3.40 a. m. and it was not until 6.30 a. m. ing was quiet that Sergeant Daly had his cuts attended to. When n he brought with him a native woman who had been shot in both nsisted that her wounds be attended to before he would allow the er attend to his (Daly's) wounds."

chargé d'affaires ad interim at Port au Prince reported this attack Department in the following message:

mation of my cablegram of January 16, 9 a. m., I have the honor to a group of armed bandits entered Port au Prince on the morning instant and burned one block of the city known as Belair. The e met by the marines and gendarmes and were quickly repulsed.
r patrols were sent through the outlying districts and have caplled many of the bandits who escaped at the time of the attack on e lesson has been a severe one and it is hoped that the bandit move-ceived a serious check. Although reported in my cable that the andits were about 300, subsequent reports tend to show that there ity a much greater number. On the morning following the attack false alarm given at the American Sugar Co., (Haitian American , which caused considerable excitement throughout the city, and in ch the brigade commander, Col. John H. Russell, issued an order all citizens to avoid giving false alarms under penalty of just and nishment. To-day Colonel Russell has issued a proclamation offer-l of 5,000 gourdes or $1,000 to any person giving information as to outs or causes the capture in one way or another of the supposed bandits, one Benoit Batraville. It is anticipated that the offering rd will have a beneficial effect if not resulting in the capture of his second and greater attack on the city of Port au Prince, followek made in November last, in which, it was reported 60 bandits had city, has naturally caused an unfortunate impression and would e the necessity of granting more marines to the brigade commander, frequently requested."

Department of State forwarded the above message to the Navy with the following letter:

he honor to inclose for your consideration a copy of a dispatch from l'affaires ad interim of the United States at Port au Prince report-ack made by armed bandits on Port au Prince on the morning 15 last. The chargé refers to the previous attack made in s well, and adds that an unfortunate impression has been caused attacks. He suggests that the necessity of granting additional quently requested by the brigade commander, has been shown by tances which have recently occurred. It is hoped that your depart-able to act appropriately on the suggestion of the chargé d'affaires."
Secretary of the Navy, on January 16, 1920, authorized the following he engagement at Port au Prince on January 15, 1920, to be released 1:

"The Navy Department has received the following dispatch from H. Russell, commanding the First Provisional Brigade of Marines, Port au Prince, Haiti.

"Three hundred armed bandits at Port au Prince this morning (January 15) to enter Port au Prince, dividing into three columns, joined by a few sections of Port au Prince. Promptly encountered marine and gendarmes who drove them back and pursued them. Over 50 per cent killed, many captured. Believe lesson will be sufficient to prevent repetition.

"Active patrolling with force at hand is being continued and it is notwithstanding lack of troops which necessitates practically not to entirely clear up population by end of dry season, with exception of thieving.

"Have seen President who informs me he is greatly pleased with the results." P. L. Coombs seriously wounded. Pvt. F. M. slightly wounded."

250. On February 21, 1920, the brigade commander, reported that one of the most influential bandit chiefs in central Haiti, surrendered at Cahobas. The surrender of this man was of great importance, as he was one of the few chiefs with the necessary initiative and daring to be prominent. On March 14, 1920, the brigade commander reported an attack made on Benoit Batrville's camp caused the scattering of about 300 in all, in all directions. He further reported that information received was to the effect that Benoit had only about three chiefs left, and it was stated that he had recently killed one who had been on the reporting in and surrendering. On March 27, 1920, the brigade reported that a report had been received of the surrender of Patillo, known as the minister of war under Charlemagne Perote, and who was a leading bandit chief in north Haiti.

251. The brigade commander, under date of April 4, 1920, reported an incident in which Sergt. Lawrence Muth, a lieutenant in the Gendarmerie was killed in action on April 4, 1920. The report follows:

"Received news of a fight between a small patrol of marines and led by Lieutenant Muth, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant, United States Corps), and Benoit's band on Morne Michel at daylight this morning. That this patrol on reaching the top of Morne Michel saw a few bandits of them and at once opened fire on them, but in return received a force in ambush on their flank and rear. Lieutenant Muth's first fire, shot through the stomach and then the head. Private Stone (United States Corps) was next in command; but the fire from the bandits was so close and injured his right side, with the result that upon firing it exploded, injuring his face and left eye. The two remaining marines used their rifles, but were forced to gradually retreat toward Las Cahobas, killing two bandits. Lieutenant Muth was dead, and his body was left on the mountain, but Private Stone was taken to Las Cahobas.

"Upon receiving the news at Mirebalais 21 patrols were at once sent out. The body of Lieutenant Muth was recovered that afternoon by a patrol of Lieutenant Colonel Little, and about 25 more bandits were killed. Muth is situated about two hours from Las Cahobas and is a very hard case, or five hours up a narrow trail.

"All clothing had been removed from the body of Lieutenant Muth. The body had been badly mutilated, heart cut out, and head cut off. The body had then been replaced. The head and heart had been taken away and probably eaten.

"Lieutenant Muth died a most gallant death leading his men and giving them directions as to the course to pursue.

"It appears that two bandit chiefs, Pléhotte and Louis Nord, came down from the north and joined Benoit trying to induce him to go to the north.

252. On April 11, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows: "Attended the funeral of Sergeant Muth. The President of Haiti and cabinet attended the ceremonies.

"Benoit Batrville sent five letters to residents of Hinche begging assistance. They replied informing him that he had best surrender to the country and that they would have nothing to do with him."

253. On April 15, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows:

"Left promptly, at 5 a. m. with the President, some members of his staff and aids, and the chief of the gendarmerie for Mirebalais. The President was in the car with me. The trip to Mirebalais was made without incident.

at Mirebalais the President replied in French to the addresses of the magistrate, judge de paix, etc., and then in creole addressed the market place. The day had been especially selected by me as it was a day at both Mirebalais and Las Cahobas, and the people had been anticipating the news that the President was coming, so that there would be a large attendance. The market was therefore especially large. The people showed an intense interest to a very earnest speech made by the President, who told them that Benoit Batrville was an outcast, a man of no account who even could not read or write, and yet that he aspired to the presidency.

That he—the President—had five years ago signed a convention with the United States; that he was a Haitian and loved his country; and that he had signed such a convention five times over if need be to clear up the situation in Haiti. He further told them what a great and powerful country Haiti was, and that the white officers and men now giving them aid and allowing them to pursue their work were men of the highest integrity, who were devoted to the interest of their country and fighting for the good of Haiti, and that it was necessary that the Haitians should do their part in every way. He then appealed to the women on account of their influence over the men to exert their influence to stop banditism.

His remarks were well received, and I believe had an excellent effect. At Mirebalais is Benoit's native town, and for the President to go there and talk against him must necessarily cause him to lose considerable influence.

At Mirebalais we went to Las Cahobas, and there the President addressed a particularly large and enthusiastic crowd. Returning to Mirebalais we anchored at the marine camp, and then we left for Port au Prince, our journey being accomplished in excellent time and without untoward incident.

On our return trip the President thanked me for arranging the trip for him, and he stated that he thought it would do a great deal of good, and that he felt that the real cause of trouble—or in other words, the heart of the matter—was in Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

April 17, 1920, Lieut. Col. L. McC. Little, United States Marine Corps, sent me the following letter from President Dartiguenave:

Very agreeable to me to address you my sincere thanks for the kind letter of which I was the object on your part during my excursion through Mirebalais and Las Cahobas.

It was particularly struck me in the course of this visit and most deeply in my heart; that is, that you have known how to find the secret to make the people loved by the populations placed under your protection. It could not be otherwise, for you ally in the exercise of your charge a perfect spirit with one of remarkable firmness. Following the example of Colonel L. Generals Wise and Hooker, and understanding the sufferings of these people so long exploited by those ambitious of power, you yourself to sow good about you in filling with conscience, humanity, and devotion the duties of your office to the honor of the Government and of the United States.

I receive, Colonel, with my heartiest felicitations, the assurance of my distinguished esteem."

On reports of the brigade commander, from April 17 to April 20, 1920, I received the following information: The President of Haiti, accompanied by a number of foreign affairs, the minister of public instruction, chief of the cabinet, Commander McLean, Commander Gayler, two newspaper correspondents, several aides of the President, and the brigade commander, left Port au Prince at 5 a. m. for an extended trip through north Haiti. During the trip the President made speeches in French and creole at the following places: St. Marc, Petite Riviere, Dessalines, Gonaives, Ennery, San Raphael, Maissade, and Hinche. At Hinche the President gave the brigade commander the following dispatch, which he at once sent by radio to Port au Prince:

OF STATE FOR INTERIOR.

Port au Prince:

at Hinche in good health. The population is manifesting their joy and desire to know me, and their gratitude to the occupation and the gen-darmerie for the reestablishment of peace in their region. I am gratified by the strength of all my soul and the satisfaction of a chief loving the people of his people.

PRESIDENT OF HAITI

256. On April 24, 1920, the brigade commander forwarded the following patch to the Navy Department:

"Have just completed tour of country to Hinche and return with President of Haiti. President enthusiastically received everywhere along route. Newspaper men who accompanied party declared in their papers that pacification is restored. President made excellent speeches and greatly enjoyed results of trip."

257. Additional details concerning the death and subsequent mutilation of Sergeant Muth is contained in the following report of the brigade commander dated April 20, 1920:

"An important prisoner was taken on the outskirts of Hinche the night of April 19. He was on his way in to surrender, and it is believed that he will be able to give us some valuable information. He stated that he was present at the death of the giant Muth was killed, and that Benoit went up and examined him and found that he was still living. He then took a war machete and chopped Muth's head nearly off. He then called a Dominican chief named Francigue and ordered him to completely sever the head. The brain was then taken out and the chief was made to rub it on their rifles, with the idea that it would increase the accuracy of fire and make them hit marines when they fired at them."

258. Eight marine officers were decorated with the Haitian medal of honor by the President of the Republic of Haiti on April 28, 1920. Their names are as follows:

"Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps:

"Has rendered invaluable services to the republic in organizing, as commander, the operating forces, the pacification of the disturbed regions; has on many occasions traversed these regions, thus giving to his subordinates the example of coolness, of courage, of contempt of danger. Remarkable for his military skill and energy, has during the nights of October 9, 1919, and January 15, 1920, inflicted severe lessons upon the bandits, who since that time have understood that they could not longer venture out in open country."

"Lieut. Col. McCarty Little, United States Marine Corps:

"An officer of a generous and courageous character; acquired great popularity in the regions where he had combated to reestablish order. He organized and commanded with great energy, with an activity that was beyond all expression."

"Gen. F. M. Wise, chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti:

"Being of remarkable coolness and courage, he has, in spite of the dangers and of the ambushes of unseen enemies, constantly traversed the disturbed regions to reorganize peace. He is the principal worker for the restoration of peace and in the reorganization of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti on a new basis. He has, with the help of the United States Marine Corps, united the various factions which suppressed the regrettable revolt of Cacos."

"Gen. R. S. Hooker, assistant chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti:

"He has taken an active part against the bandits in the district of the Artibonite, and the west. On more than one occasion, and in the most dangerous and greatest dangers, particularly at Hinche, personally conducted his men into the field of action. He has merited to be named the 'Savior of Hinche' by the people of that town."

"Maj. Thomas C. Turner, United States Marine Corps:

it Batrville, the supreme leader of the Cacos in Haiti, was killed detachment on May 19, 1920. On May 20, 1920, the brigade com- ported as follows: "In sharp fight between marines and bandits in ay Benoit Batrville was killed. This removes lead ng bandit chief complete pacification."

report of Capt. Jesse L. Perkins, United States Marine Corps, 20, 1920, gives the following description of the killing of Benoit 18, 1920, I left marine camp at Mirebalais, Republic of Haiti, from the regimental commander to go to Marche Canard and take econd Lieut. Edgar G. Kirkpatrick and the 28 marines who were that section, and continue the search for Benoit and his band, who sed to be in that vicinity.

tion has been received that Benoit was at Morne Mat Roseau, east anard. I found that the section had been well covered by Lieuten- rick's patrols, and he reported to me that Benoit was not in that that he received information that he was either in Grand Bois or Peine. Remembering that on two previous occasions I had ob- accurate information as to Benoit's whereabouts from one Exantus Marche Colombier, at 10 p. m., May 18, I, with Lieutenant Kirk- Sergeant Passmore, went to the caye of Exantus and asked as to bouts of Benoit's band. I was told that at noon the same day a of 200 bandits had left Morne Pierre, going in the direction of te Bois Peine, about four hours march from Marche Colombier, which information Lieutenant Kirkpatrick had received. I decided of such size could be none other than Benoit's, so I took Lieutenant Kirkpatrick and 10 marines, with Exantus's son as a guide, and entered Petite Anse at 1 a. m., May 19.

"At 6 a. m. we were discovered by an outpost of five men, who fired at us, turned and ran toward the main band farther over on the mountain. Lieutenant Kirkpatrick after the fleeing patrol, who went down near by, and with Sergeants Passmore and Taubert and Private Eutrech proceeded in the direction of the main camp as fast as we could, not being to enter the main camp and take Benoit by surprise but to have a chance to escape. As we reached the camp we were met from perhaps a dozen rifles. The camp was located among hills covered by bushes and thickets, but at the same time right on the path that passes over the mountain. The entrance to the camp was between two large rocks, one on each side of the trail, and close to it but so as to form a natural cup with a natural entrance and exit. Sergeant Passmore in the lead with a Browning automatic rifle, followed by myself and Taubert. As we entered Benoit raised his rifle and fired at us from about 10 feet. He was immediately shot down by Sergeant Passmore. The bandits were in sight, but many were firing on us from the rocks around us. Lieutenant Kirkpatrick and the other marines soon arrived at the rear of Sergeant Taubert and took up the fire with us. After about 10 minutes the entire band seemed to realize that their leader was killed, and disappeared among the rocks and did not retreat in a group as usual. We turned to examine Benoit's person, and he was in the act of rising at the time for his revolver. Hence it was necessary for Sergeant Taubert to finish him.

"Benoit had either decided to stand his ground and fight or was too tired to run. He was armed with a Springfield rifle and a Colt revolver. The body of the late Lieutenant Muth, gendarmierie d'Haiti. Benoit had cartridges in his rifle and revolver he carried about 20 rounds in a belt hanging over his shoulder. An officer's whistle and a bundle of his effects and correspondence were also found on his person. He was barefooted, wore a straw hat, and ordinary blue clothes.

"The support given me by Lieutenant Kirkpatrick and the other marines of the patrols was prompt and aggressive. Sergeants Passmore and Taubert and Private Eutrech are especially deserving of praise for the contribution shown at the beginning of the attack."

266. The following extracts from the "daily diary reports" of the brigade commander furnishes additional details of the killing of Benoit Batraville.

"May 19, 1920: At 1.30 p. m. received a report from Mirebalais that a patrol, commanded by Captain Perkins, had penetrated into the camp of Benoit Batraville, near Savanette, at 6.30 a. m., and that Benoit Batraville was killed.

"Later information confirmed the above and I at once informed the Governor of Haiti, who expressed his great delight and appreciation of our work.

"Benoit Batraville had, upon the death of Charlemagne, been duly elected by the remaining chiefs as their leader in what the bandits called a war against the Americans. He was a much more aggressive man than Charlemagne, but lacking in intelligence and leadership.

"His death, it is believed, assures complete pacification.

"May 20, 1920: Reports received show that Captain Perkins, with about 10 marines, received information from a native about noon that Benoit had recently passed and the direction he had taken. Captain Perkins at once started in pursuit and marched until the following morning, getting little or no rest when he succeeded in striking their camp. A sharp battle lasting about 15 minutes, but upon the fall of Benoit his followers, about 100, vanished.

"Received a letter from the President extending his congratulations.

267. On May 31, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows:

"Intense patrolling is being carried on in the hills in order to prevent bandits from reorganizing after the death of Benoit, and to discourage a number of small bands have been hit. The rains for the past week have been very heavy and patrol work has become most difficult."

268. On June 11, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows:

"Patrolling has been very actively carried on since the death of Benoit. Leger, a bandit chief of considerable importance, came in to Thomas nd rifles and surrendered. This is a very excellent indication. Only chiefs of any importance remain, and they have little or no initiative ence. Among them, however, is Norde, a chief from the north, who flowing, and Justine Civile, a discharged gendarme. It is my intend up these two at the earliest possible moment." June 19, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows: "I ay an active bandit chief named Castine Fede surrendered. This surtically completes the surrender, capture, or death of all of the prom-bandit chiefs. The pacification of Haiti may therefore be said to be of course patrolling will have to be vigorously continued for many order to prevent a recurrence of trouble and to gradually eliminate f thieves that live in the hill districts."

une 30, 1920, the brigade commander reported as follows: of 75 bandits were encountered between St. Michel and San Rafael. ered with some casualties, and a number of rifles and horses cape in September, 1919, the cases of Pvts. Walter E. Johnson and John J. , Jr., were forwarded to me by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, as usual in such cases, for comment as to the disciplinary involved. I read these cases over carefully, and I particularly noted the arguments of the counsel for the defense in the case of Private Johnson. First Lieut. F. L. Spear, who stated that unlawful executions of the so-called Cacos, had occurred in Haiti. I was shocked to see such a statement was the first knowledge I had had that any such thing had taken place. I immediately wrote to the brigade commander, First Provisional Brigade of Marines, Port au Prince, Haiti, under date of September 27, 1919, in which letter reads as follows:

" SEPTEMBER 27

" 'Confidential.

" 'From: The Major General Commandant.

" 'To: The Brigade Commander First Provisional Brigade, Matheux, Port au Prince, Haiti.

" 'Subject: Unlawful acts by members of the gendarmerie d'Haiti in Haiti.

" '1. It appears from the testimony in the general court-martial of Privts. Walter E. Johnson and John J. McQuilkin, Jr., Marine Corps, the argument of the counsel for the defense in the case of Private Johnson, First Lieut. F. L. Spear, that unlawful executions of Haitians, etc., have occurred in Haiti. You will issue immediately necessary instructions regarding these unlawful actions.

" '2. It appears that Sergeant Brokaw, Lieutenant of the gendarmerie, has been transferred north to the hospital, so no action can be taken in this case.

" '3. Make an investigation and submit a confidential report regarding the actions of Lieutenant Spear, as stated in his argument as counsel for the defense in the court-martial case of Private Johnson. A copy of this report is attached hereto.

" '4. Such unwarranted and unlawful actions on the part of officers or men of the Marine Corps or of the gendarmerie d'Haiti can not be justified under any circumstances.

" (GEORGE B. BROWN)

" Between that time and October 2, 1919, I read the case of Private Johnson over again, and in order to impress upon the brigade commander the necessity for a full and complete investigation I wrote him a letter, a copy of which reads as follows:

" OCTOBER 2

" 'Personal and confidential.

" 'MY DEAR COLONEL: Since you left here several things have come to my notice with reference to the affairs in Haiti, especially in relation to the actions of the gendarmes in the interior. The court-martial of one private for the killing of a native prisoner brought out a statement by his counsel that showed me that practically indiscriminate killing of natives has gone on for some time. I had General Long write you about this matter a few days ago and I wish to write a personal note to you to say that I hope you will handle the matter personally with Colonel Wise and not only attempt to correct it but absolutely correct it.

" 'I was shocked beyond expression to hear of such things and to know that it was at all possible that duty could be so badly performed by a man of your class. I know that you will take this up most seriously and I can only strongly urge upon you the necessity of going into it personally and thoroughly. At the same time I wish you would personally see to it and issue the orders that nothing is allowed to remain of the corvée system, and I am widely known throughout Haiti that this system will not be tolerated after.

" 'I want personal instructions sent to every officer and noncommissioned officer, both with the marines and the gendarmerie, that conditions such as by the evidence in the trial of the private above referred to must be corrected and such action can not be tolerated for a moment; and I want the guilty parties thoroughly sifted and the guilty parties brought to justice. I think the most startling thing of its kind that has ever taken place in the Marine Corps and I don't want anything of the kind to happen again. I think the knowledge gained only from the cases that have been brought before Long, to write to Colonel Russell, brigade commander in Haiti, and tell him that any officers or Marine Corps who had been in Haiti and were then in the United States were wanted either as witnesses or for disciplinary action if he would come I would order them back to Haiti at once. In my letter of September 27, paragraph 2, I stated that Sergeant Brokaw, lieutenant of the gendarmes, had been transferred north to a hospital, so that no action could be taken. I said this because it had been reported that Brokaw had gone to the hospital on account of insanity.”

“6. About the time that the second indorsement, dated January 12, 1920, was written General Haines stated to me that he had gone over the testimony fully, and that in his opinion there was not sufficient evidence for a conviction here, but that the testimony in whole had been sent to the brigade commander. General Haines said that he was going to write a personal letter to Colonel Russell, and asked if I had any objection to his so doing—I stated I had no objection, but that I wished a thorough investigation. General Haines said that much of the testimony was only hearsay and could not be proved, and directed that Colonel Russell forward to headquarters a report of what his opinion could be proved. A copy of this confidential letter of General Haines to Colonel Russell reads as follows:

“(DECEMBER 7, 1919)”

It is considered especially desirable to ascertain, if you can, how the records of the gendarmerie disappeared.

“As soon as the testimony here is taken it is the general's intention to send such people as may seem necessary to return to Haiti. You will be notified by radio when they start.

“The papers referred to in the first paragraph of this letter are not at headquarters, as General Lejeune has them with him. The question, however, are the ones which resulted in the investigation conducted at headquarters Marine Corps, and the testimony taken was forwarded to Colonel Russell under date of January 12.

“7. I was present at a conversation General Haines had with the Secretary of the Navy, wherein General Haines stated that in his personal letter he told Colonel Russell to hold the report until sent for from headquarters. Colonel Russell evidently did not act upon this suggestion, because on March 20 he forwarded his report in the matter.

“8. On May 3, 1920, I left Washington for the Pacific coast on an inspection, and was absent until June 9. At the time of my departure port had not been received at headquarters. Very shortly after was relieved as commandant of the Marine Corps, and up to the daily detached no report had been received.

Considering the circumstances under which Colonel Russell had to make the very poor transportation in Haiti, and the distance to be so not consider that there was any undue delay on his part. The steamer, under date of January 12, could not have reached him in the middle of January, and from that time until March 20 did an unreasonable time for the investigation.

The above report contains all the facts in the case known by me, and on the late in September, 1919, when I first became aware that affairs were in a right in Haiti every action possible was taken by headquarters for a thorough investigation. Colonel Russell acknowledged my letter of October 2, and stated in his reply that he would do everything to effect a thorough and prompt investigation. He forwarded to me the proclamation he had issued on the subject. His letter and a proclamation are attached to my original report on this subject to the general commandant of the Marine Corps. This proclamation issued by Russell shows that he took my instructions absolutely literally, and in time doing everything in his power to correct conditions. The enclosed letter and proclamation read as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, October 17, 1919.

GEORGE BARNETT,
General Commandant, United States Marine Corps,
Washington, D. C.

SIR GENERAL: I received your letter in the last mail, and am answering to assure you that I have taken up the matter you mention most and will go into it thoroughly. I am inclosing herewith a copy of an order which I have issued, as well as a proclamation. The proclamation will be published in all the newspapers in Haiti, posted in all towns, the markets to the people of each town by the magistrat (mayor). I have gotten out several other proclamations since my arrival, with a view to allaying the fears of the people regarding the bandits. Immediately upon my arrival things began popping here, right and left together with an unsatisfactory political situation kept me on General Long the other day regarding conditions here, and I have now completely cleared the plain of the Cul de Sac of bandits. At present they appear to be gathering in Honda Valley, with a view of crossing the border and going to northern Haiti or of another plain. The latter I hardly believe, as we get at them too readily in the plains.

Now making preparations to strike this band from Belladere, Las Vanette. It will be unable to cross the border, if our plans work so that get away will be forced to scatter and retreat toward the estimated that about 2,000 bandits infest the hills. They are under the leadership of Peralte, who styles himself the supreme chief. I estimate that they are armed with machetes, knives, pikes, a few pistols, and some hundred rifles. I don't believe that in all Haiti there are more than 500 rifles, if that many. They are very short of ammunition. They are armed with the Krag by tying a piece of goatskin or string around the cartridge. I have consequently issued very strict orders regarding the use of our own and gendarmerie ammunition.

The Haitians, as you no doubt know, are a very hysterical people. Rumors are circulated among them daily, that are simply ridiculous, and they believe them and completely lose their heads. They are very hard in consequence to quiet them. However, I believe I have succeeded in bucking them up. Of course, the officials seized the opportunity as much as they could out of the affair, until I sent for the President (Minister of Interior), told him plainly that the Government, instead of cooperating with me, was obstructing my work, and that I stand for it. Then things brightened up as far as the officials were concerned.

"Yesterday I accompanied the American minister in a visit to the President, with the result that one of the cabinet members, who has been a great troublemaker, has resigned, so that the political situation is also much brighter.

"As you know, General, I shall give my very best to the situation which is far from satisfactory, and with the backing that I know I have from headquarters I feel confident I can clear it up and make a respectable corps.

"With kindest regards to Mrs. Barnett and yourself.

"Very sincerely,

"11. In January, 1917, I visited Haiti in company with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. We went on horseback from Port au Prince in the north and made a thorough inspection. During our visit we conversed freely with the President of Haiti, members of his cabinet, the American minister, all the principal officers of the Marine Corps and the gendarmerie, local officials in the country, and parish priests. We heard many complaints, but, on the contrary, heard many reports which indicated that the conditions in Haiti were better than they had been for a very great many years.

"12. From what I have heard I think the original trouble in Haiti was occasioned by the manner in which the corvée system was carried out. It was understood that the corvée system itself, which is in accordance with the law, was not objected to; but the trouble was, so I have heard, that there were on certain occasions required to work under the corvée system of their own districts, which was contrary to law. I have no records of this kind were in circulation. The Secretary of the Navy at one time received reports on this same subject of corvée and we discussed the matter at that time. I never received any official report on this subject. I doubt that the commanding officer in Haiti, both of the gendarmerie and the marines, can give full information on the subject of corvée and its application.

arizing the facts recited in the above report I wish to invite the at- e Secretary of the Navy to the fact that from a military point of rations in Haiti may be divided into two periods. The first period 6, when the marines were first landed in Haiti and during which of anarchy existed in that Republic, and the second period, 1918 hich period started by a concerted attack in force by the bandits of Port au Prince. Of the total number killed during the five and s the marines have operated in Haiti considerably more than half, , were killed in the repulse of the attack on Port au Prince and operations immediately following and made necessary by this at- g the two periods mentioned a state of actual war existed, but whole time the bandits were mostly engaged in bushwhacking. tal number killed may seem large, it should be remembered that ns extended over a period of five and a half years, and I believe that operations by the marines a much larger number of natives would lled by the bandits during this time.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS Port Au Prince, Republic of Haiti, August 1919

From: The brigade commander.

To: The Major General Commandant United States Marine Corps, Headquarters, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Report of activities.

1. The undersigned arrived in Haiti on October 1, 1919.

2. On October 5, in company with the brigade adjutant, the brigade major and the chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, I started a tour of inspection of the interior of Haiti.

3. My inspection convinced me that conditions in the interior were not good, men being without clothing and supplies and other necessaries.

4. The interior of Haiti swarmed with bandits and little headway was being made to stamp out the insurrection. It was quite evident that more and intensive measures were necessary.

5. After carefully considering reports from all sources I arrived at the following estimate of the situation:

6. In the north the supreme chief, Charlemagne Peralte, had approximately 3,000 men in the field. Charlemagne further had organized a so-called government with a cabinet and ministers and had made many attempts to carry on diplomatic correspondence with foreign Governments.

7. He used well-considered propaganda throughout all Haiti to incite the Haitians against the occupation. He had a well-organized system of espionage and further was assisted by disgruntled politicians and bandits.

8. Charlemagne's object was the overthrowing of the de facto government and driving the whites out of Haiti either by force or discouragement to such an extent that they would withdraw.

9. In the south the bandits, while under control of Charlemagne, were actually under the command of Benoit Batrville, a man of little education but a hero to the Haitians on account of his lack of fear and his aggressive nature.

10. Benoit controlled about 2,500 men in the south.

11. Besides the 5,500 men actually in the field, both Charlemagne and Benoit could from time to time augment their forces by recruiting men from certain districts. From all accounts and from the number of surrenders, the number of men available to Charlemagne and Benoit to draw from was approximately 17,000.

12. Later developments have proved that Charlemagne called to his aid the German element throughout Haiti and was to a great extent supported by money furnished by them.

13. Telephone and telegraph communications were poor and uncertain being the only method of rapid communication available.

14. Roads were very poor and at a certain time of the year—during the rains—were impassable.

15. The system of supply to troops in the field was a supply in kind, particularly in the Hinche district, where men were actually without the necessities of life.

16. The number of men under my command on the 1st of October, 1919, was 1,253, distributed as follows:

igade had been reorganized in accordance with the tables of organi- April 20, 1919, and with a brigade staff, G-1, G-2, and G-3. No available for duty as chief of staff, and in consequence much of the ould naturally be performed by such an officer fell on the shoulders e adjutant. The headquarters of the Eighth Regiment was assigned s, and the Second Regiment to Cape Haitien. Excellent results have d by the reorganization of the brigade and most particularly the , G-1, G-2, and G-3 following, in a small way, the methods eme e general staff in France.

erations of the bandits had reduced cultivation to a point where e only cultivated when they were situated in the immediate vicinity of a garrisoned town, and this reduction in the normal fresh food supply made the rationing of troops in the field more difficult, and it became necessary to increase the service of supply for the troops in the field by nearly 100 per cent.

29. To accomplish this with the limited number of trucks on hand it was necessary to employ a combined supply train consisting of trucks and mules, and to use subchasers for water transportation. The advent of the rainy season made it imperative to again increase the service of supply so that the trails and roads became impassable a sufficient supply would be banked up in reserve at all supply stations to last until communication was again established. It was therefore ordered that a reserve ration for at least one month should be on hand at all supply stations. After a few days a system of supply was developed which is now being employed and which affords a plentiful supply of food, clothing and comfort at all times.

30. It was especially imperative that before any concerted or well-planned operations could be carried on a reliable and rapid system of communication must be established. Additional radio stations were established, telephones were overhauled, and everything possible done to improve the system of communications with the means available. In addition, airplanes were always at the disposal of the commanding officer of troops in the field.

31. In general, the plan of campaign consisted in dividing the theater of operations into blocks of 25 square miles each. One of these blocks was divided into block of one square mile. To accomplish this, an entire map of Haiti was made under the direction of G-2, the intelligence officer, Mr. Sheppard. This work consisted of taking the various old maps of Haiti and making corrections, and adding the different road sketches which had been made under my direction. While this map is far from accurate, it is at present the best map of central Haiti in existence. A better one is now being prepared by the intelligence section.

In addition to the patrolling during the month of all squares in the theater of operations, on the receipt of information, whether reliable or not, of the presence of a group of bandits in any subquarter a patrol was immediately sent to that section, with instructions to obtain contact and to keep it until the band scattered. At the same time other patrols were sent out in order to cut off any possible line of retreat.

33. The success of this plan became immediately apparent and before the middle of April it was almost possible to foretell the date of the collapse of the bandit operations. On two occasions groups of four to five hundred bandits, led by their chiefs, surrendered, their reason for so doing being that they had been so closely pursued that food and rest became impossible.

34. The attack on Port au Prince in January, 1920, was cleverly planned and executed when it is remembered that the attacking force had to approach the city in small and scattered bands to assemble at an exact time at a place having no method of ascertaining time except by the stars, together with the fact that most of the leaders were strangers to Port au Prince, the organization of the bandits seems beyond belief.

35. The attack was promptly met and the bandits easily driven off. At the moment that the repulse of the bandit attack was assured direct fire was given for throwing patrols through their lines and cutting off their retreat. Pursuit was maintained until all semblance of organization among the bandits was lost. This attack, referred to by the bandits as the "defeat," caused them to lose heart, and during the months of January and February 1920, many bandits surrendered.

36. It was essential that these men who surrendered be given some employment, at least until the advent of the rainy season, when they could start their gardens. To this end, with the assistance of the engineer of the train to Haiti and the engineer of Haiti, they were employed in road making. A road was started from San Raphael to London. Work on this road was continued until July, 1920, when it was stopped on account of no money being available for its continuance.

37. In addition the Haytian-American Sugar Co. employed a few of the surrendered bandits for the cultivation of their cane and placed them under the charge of their chief. The officials of this company have stated that these men are doing excellent work.

38. In the San Michel district the United West Indies Corporation employed many ex-bandits and they are working under the command of a former powerful bandit chief of the north, named Papillon (the butterfly). A few

MAPS.

54. (a) Previous to October 1, 1919, various maps which were available by different marine and gendarmerie stations were in use.

(b) For field work a hastily drawn map was printed of central Haiti, was divided into approximate 10-mile squares for reference as to location. This map was in December slightly improved and redivided into 25 squares for temporary use during the period while a more satisfactory accurate map could be completed.

(c) On January 5, 1920, a map compiled from some of the best maps of Haiti, scale R. F. 1:200000, showing northern, central, and southern Haiti, omitting the north and south peninsulas and including as many localities as could be approximately verified, was issued to all the gendarmerie stations. This map was divided into squares of 25 miles, subdivided into 25 smaller squares, and the ordinate system was designating approximate localities. A copy of this map, marked, was attached.

(d) This map was later slightly improved and reduced to R. F. 1:200000 for field use. It is far from accurate and is uncontroled, but by its use and supplemented by knowledge of terrain served the purpose for which issued. A copy attached, marked "C."

(e) It was originally intended to gradually add to and correct the sketches from the various stations, but due to the shortage of officers in the brigade and the intensive combat patrolling necessary to take a few sketches could be made. Those submitted were the work of personnel and of little value except to roughly indicate several sectional names.

(f) The reconnaissance section of brigade intelligence has planned an accurate military map of Haiti. Work on the control sheet is now being though slowly progressing, due to the absence of sufficiently trained numerous personnel, funds, and opportunity. It was hoped that could be obtained from the present survey of Haiti now in progress in the geological department, but to date none has been acquired except a few graphs, which will soon be available, of certain sections, such as the line, the Artibonite River, and two principal roads.

(g) The future of an improved military map of Haiti depends on the location of cities, towns, and critical points, from which bases by the field there can be developed a fairly accurate map, which can be used for military needs until the accurate survey of Haiti is completed three or four years hence.

(h) As previously stated, the progress of the above work is dependent on personnel, materials, equipment, and funds.

COMMUNICATIONS.

55. (a) Radio.—On October 1, 1919, radio communication consisted of stations located at Port au Prince (5 k. w.), Cape Haitien (2 k. w.), (2 k. w.), Lascahobas (1 k. w.), and Mirebalais (1 k. w.). The stations were limited in communication to Port au Prince alone. Since October 1, 1919, additional stations have been established at San Michel (Atalapha) (1 k. w.), Maissade (1 k. w.), and Thomonde (1 k. w.). The stations now occupied by marines are thus connected by wireless communication. All stations are now able to communicate with either Port au Prince, Mirebalais, and Hinche, which facilitates the operations of these stations. All of the stations are in constant operation and have given results and assistance, but severe handicap is felt through absence of ators. It has been necessary to train operators from men not trained for wireless education. No extension or special improvement contemplated except the establishment of a remote control for the Port au Prince to enable simultaneous receipt and transmittal of hone.—No purely military telephone lines of any distance were prior or subsequent to October 1, 1919. Public or Government lines existed between Port au Prince, Ennery, Cape Haitien and Cape Haitien and Ouanaminthe, Port au Prince and Lascahobas via Boquet, and Mirebalais, Port au Prince and Thomazeau, Port au Petionville, Port au Prince and Jeremie via Miragoane and Anse au Prince and Jacmel, St. Marc to Petite Riviere. The line between Ennery and Lascahobas is run through the marine brigade exchange at Port au Prince, and includes stations at the several outguards between Port au Prince and Mirebalais, viz, Hasco, Bon Repos, Pont Beudet, Calabassier, and Rouge. In Port au Prince and Cape Haitien extensive field phone lines exist, connecting offices and quarters of the brigade. During ordinary or bandit activity, telephone lines once in existence from Port au Prince to Cerca la Source via Carice, and from Cerca la Source to Thomonde via Thomassique, were destroyed by bandits and have since been repaired, it being impracticable to sufficiently patrol the line. In January, 1920, the line from Cerca la Source to Lamie, and the line to Ouanaminthe has been repaired and now is in order. In April, 1920, the headquarters made recommendations to the engineer of Haiti for the establishment of telephone lines to connect the principal gendarmerie posts in Haiti. Such an installment meant an outlay of approximately $100,000, which amount is not available. The connection, as recommended, is of no value for military reasons, and also of commercial value. A recommendation was made for the installation of telephone lines, as necessary for the military, and which called for an expenditure of approximately $6,000. It is quite possible that the latter amount may be secured, if so, work on the installation will begin as soon as practicable. The accompanying map, marked "D," shows telephonic communications lines recommended:

graph.—No change in telegraph lines that existed prior to October 1, 1919, has been made. The present lines then installed connect Port au Prince with practically all towns in the south, Cape Haitien with Ennery, and Ennery from Cape Haitien to Bahon and from St. Marc to Grande Riviere. The telegraph is entirely by native labor and, therefore, rather inaccurate for the purpose of the English language.

er.—Since October 1, 1919, the use of the three subchasers of the United States Navy have been available to the brigade, and are directly under the command of the brigade commander. These vessels are used mainly for the Cape Haitien and troops in the field of the north central section of the brigade. These means mail and occasional troops are also transported between Port au Prince and Cape Haitien. Regular scheduled trips are made once a week to Gonaives and biweekly to Cape Haitien. The class of boats have been exceedingly useful, but they are not fitted for the heavy demands made on them. A seagoing navy tug would be much more efficient for brigade duty as well as being on hand for emergency work.

ial.—The land and water flights of squadron E, marine aviation have been employed for urgent communications to the interior and to Ennery, and have rendered most efficient service in connection thereto. The field posts throughout Haiti have, since October 1, 1919, been prepared, and a variety of stations, increasing facilities of rapid communication to the effect of bringing all principal posts of the gendarmerie and marine brigade into communication within the hour of one another.

mala.—Before and subsequent to October 1, 1919, horses and mules have been extensively used for courier service between outlying posts, sub-outposts, and for the supply of troops operating in the field where trails are not practicable for motor vehicles. Since October 1, 1919, the number of field troops has required numerous animals for their present supply by pack train exists from Ennery to San Michel (plantation), to Malssade to Hinche when road conditions demand, and from Hinche to Thomonde. Also from Terra Rouge to Mirebalais, Lascahobas and outguards of the later two stations. In the north from Grande Riviere to San Michel via Dondon and San Raphael.

(g) Motor.—Since October 1, 1919, the improvement in roads and conditions have afforded development of motor vehicle communication. It is expected that in the near future further development can be made. Motor vehicle equipment has recently been augmented and now allows a ready supply of troops in the field, but sufficient reserve motorized vehicles are lacking. This method of communication is used principally from Port au Prince to Terra Rouge and frequently through to Mirebalais and Las Caobas from San Michel to Maissade and Hinche.

(h) Rail.—Railroad lines exist from Port au Prince to Les Cayes, Port au Prince to St. Marc, Gonaïves to Ennery. Also from Port au Prince to Thomazeau and from Cape Haitien to Grande Riviere. The lines from Port au Prince to Ennery and from Cape Haitien to Grande Riviere are the most extensively used by the brigade for the purpose of supply to the north central Haiti. The proposed and surveyed line from Grande Riviere to Hinche would be of great value to brigade ends and do much to supply to the interior.

(i) Map marked "D" accompanies this report and shows graphic communication lines in Haiti in use by the military.

AVIATION ACTIVITIES.

56. (a) Organization.—The squadron consists of two flights. A flight operating six HS boats and a land flight operating six land planes. The authorized strength is 12 officers and 150 enlisted men. During the period covered by this report the average has been 10½ officers and 100½ enlisted men.

(b) Equipment.—At the sea-plane base, Bizotom, about 3 miles from Port au Prince, there is a very well equipped machine shop, blacksmith shop, a storeroom, a well-equipped sick bay, and a steel banger for repair of sea-planes. All major repairs on both land and sea planes are done here. The squadron is equipped with four trucks, two Ford touring cars, two motor cycles. Another truck is en route. It also has a 35-foot motor launch, a motor sailer, and two motor dories. Two Bessonneau hangars are here and when received will be erected on the land field, Port au Prince, for the storage of land planes.

(c) Land planes.—At the beginning of the period covered by this report the squadron was equipped with five JN-6 HG airplanes. During the period covered by this report three of these planes have crashed and have been surveyed. Two crashes were due to the fault of personnel and one to material failure. In March, 1920, six DH-4B airplanes were received. Four of them have been erected and flown. Two have been held in reserve awaiting the arrival of spares. On July 1, 1920, there are on hand, serviceable, six DH-4B airplanes.

(d) Sea planes.—On October 1, 1919, the squadron had six HS-1 boats. One of these was wrecked and surveyed as the result of a forced landing in the sea, due to a rain storm. Two others have been surveyed, due to wear in the service, and using parts of them to keep other planes in commission. Three new HS-2 boats have been ordered for the squadron. None of them have been received.

(e) Landing fields.—Landing fields have been operated at the following places (see map marked "E"): Port au Prince, Mirebalais, Thomonde, Henrieville, Plignon, St. Michel, Gonaïves, Port de Paix, and Cape Haitien. Planes have landed at Cerca la Source and Jacmel. Fields are being prepared at Belledere, Las Caobas, Cerca la Source, and Aux Cayes.

(f) Sea planes have made flights to the following ports: L'Archipel, Gonaïves, Coridon, Le Mole, Le Borgne, Cape Haitien, Jeremie, and Port de Paix, to points on Lake Saumatre, and to points on Gonaïves Bay. It is practicable to make flights to nearly all points on the coast, to Cienfuegos Bay, Cuba, and to Santo Domingo city if occasion should arrive.

(g) Operations.—During this period 1,271 flights have been made, with a flying time of 849 hours and 20 minutes, with three serious crashes and no fatalities to personnel. The purpose of these flights are shown below:

Reconnaissance flights	34
Raids	10
Photographic	100
Transporting passengers	27
Transporting mail	10
Testing planes, checking up pilots, and other flights	24 reconnaissance flights were made over mountainous country inhabited with the object of locating bands of outlaws and keeping in hand ground patrols. For this purpose two planes have been stationed in the interior under the command of the regimental commander there. On reconnaissance flights line officers very often go as observers and by this obtain valuable information of the ground. The raids were made upon outlaws located in places which could not be reached by troops before they would have time to note their approach and escape. The raids were in conjunction with infantry.

Officers transported have been regimental commanders on inspection duty of these flights have been made, however, for the department of the interior for the purpose of making a photograph map of the coast line and of its interior waterways. Pictures have been completed from Port de Paix on the coast line, from Port au Prince to Las Cahobas, from Artibonite to its entrance, and from Gonaives to Ennery, St. Michel, and to Hinche. This makes a total of about 420 miles.

Officers transported have been regimental commanders on inspection duty, officers of the brigade, personnel of the signal company to interior to pair radios, sick men from interior points to the hospital at Port au Prince, officers of the gendarmerie of Haiti.

Remarks.—Since the DH-4B planes have been received and since the flights at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien have been established, flights of these important points are made in about 50 minutes. Before this it took three hours to make the flight in an HS boat. During the period before the land plane flight has been moved from Gonaives to Port au Prince this has proved to be very advantageous, in that all shop work can be done and in that it does away with an initial flight to Gonaives in a seaplane flight from there in a land plane in order to reach an interior point at Port au Prince. It will be noted in the first paragraph that the squadron has had only about one-third of its authorized enlisted strength during this period. It has been through the cheerful, capable, and hard work of the enlisted men that the squadron has been able to care for its equipment of service to the brigade.

Recommendations.—Originally this squadron consisted of one flight, with six seaplanes. The strength as noted in paragraph 1 was based on that basis. Subsequently a land flight of six airplanes was authorized without additional personnel allowed. The strength in the different grades authorized is insufficient and can not logically be divided into two flights. Therefore, recommended that the strength of this squadron be authorized flight squadron, consisting of headquarters, first flight and second flight, as shown on page 11 of Marine Corps Tables of Organization, Technical Manual, Advanced Base Force (Provisional), May, 1920, and that sufficient enlisted men be transferred to it to complete its complement.

During the entire period covering this report the work of the officers and the aviation unit has been most praiseworthy and the success that has been achieved in the intensive winter campaign of the brigade against bandits resulting in the pacification of Haiti has been in a large measure due to the complete devotion, untiring zeal, and efficiency of this unit.

Capt. Roy S. Geiger, the commanding officer, has shown in a marked ability to overcome obstacles, maintain a high state of efficiency in command, and to imbue it with a spirit of cheerfulness and energy that has been a factor in promoting its efficiency.

WORK OF MORALE.

Equipment.—In the matter of equipment considerable has been received from various sources and other purchased from funds granted and allotted to the department. The bureau of navigation, sixth division, made an allotment of $1,500 to the northern district about September or October, 1919, and in time in December, another allotment of $4,400 for all Haiti, making a total of $5,900 for the entire brigade for the fiscal year. In addition to this prior to its granting the Y. M. C. A., through its district secretary, obtained the expenditure of Y. M. C. A. funds by Chaplain Truitt in the northern district and the morale officer (acting) in the southern district up to $100 in each district. This fund was for the "health and comfort of enlisted men" and "the greater portion for the men in the outposts." This was granted in May, 1919, and continued until April 1, 1920. With these funds considerable equipment has been purchased and installed in places. A new motion-picture booth has been built at the marine barracks. Enlisted men's clubs have been built and equipped at Mirebalais, Les Cayes, marine aviation camp, Hinche, and the clubs at Cape Haitien and Port-au-Prince improved and equipment added. In the northern district $2,000 have been expended of the morale funds and in the southern district $3,000. In the latter district 23 Victrolas and Graphonolas have been received at the various posts. Two of these were purchased from morale funds, the remainder from the Y. M. C. A. funds and received as gifts from officers. About 12 are gifts. Due to the extreme difficulty in securing parts, only 1 of from 6 to 10 are not in use. Of the larger items we have on hand in the southern district 4 motion-picture machines, 6 pianos, 4 pool tables, 10 talking machines in working order, about 50 sets smaller games, and 5,000 books in fair condition. Many of the books are duplicate. In some instances there are as high as six copies of some books. Each company detachment has its own baseball equipment, furnished by the quartermaster. Vaulting buck, a trapeze, and some traveling rings are on hand and are stored and put into use as soon as a suitable place for them can be found.

(b) Athletics.—Athletics have held an important place in the morale of the post. Baseball, though not conducted on a regular schedule, has been quite popular. Since October 1, 1919, over 50 games have been played. Teams from other posts have gone to other posts for games and excited keen competition. Evenings have been devoted to boxing and wrestling. In connection with these events an entertainment was given by some of the men in the form of musical stunts and comedies, and was greatly enjoyed by all. The same have been held in the same interval with a total of 32 events, and many men participating. Considerable interest was taken in these events. Baseball was thoroughly enjoyed as long as our equipment lasted. Football and other such games have not been urged so much because of the conditions.

(c) Music.—Music has grown to occupy one of our chief forms of recreation. A post band has been organized and gives concerts during the week before the movies at the marine barracks. A few men play other instruments so that at times we have a "jazz orchestra" and furnish music for all occasions. The pianos are in use daily at each post, and afford opportunity for all who desire to keep up their talents along that line. Men form groups around the pianos and sing. At one post (Mirebalais) it was necessary to issue an order regarding the hours during which the piano might be used. It has become the custom in that place for many to set their watches by the sound of the piano—11 a. m.—when permission to use it was given. In the northern district five pianos in the northern district.

(d) Singing.—Little was done to promote singing in this district the last two months. Duty was rather hard, due to the shortage of pianos, so it was difficult to stir up sufficient interest to get everybody singing. A few months ago a piano was received at the marine barracks and since that time singing has been most successful at that place. These "sings" began with divine services held Sunday evenings at 6 o'clock, and at that time singing came to hold a prominent place. The spirit of singing has been so high until it is not at all uncommon to hear spasmodic quartets singing. A group of men might gather. At the marine barracks it is quite unusual to hear men on special duty singing at their work, keeping time to the music. Regular "sings" are held there on Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday nights before the movies. "Sings" are held at other places as well. Officers and the song leader can be present. A large percentage of those who usually go out on liberty—now stay at home for these "sings." Songs, whenever we can secure them, are taken up and learned with the men come as early as one hour before the singing begins in order to be present.

(e) Motion pictures.—Motion pictures, it is fair to state, form one of the chief forms of recreation. We have seven motion-picture machines in the operation. Three graphoscopes are out of working order at present. In some instances this is offset by the use of Standard machines, which, before we were able to purchase from morale funds, we were able to purchase from the Y. M. C. A. funds and loan for use until such a time as the graphoscopes can be repaired. Our films are furnished by the United States Navy Motion Picture Service and are of good quality. The average attendance per exhibition is about 200 at the marine barracks and less at the other posts, with the post.

pe Haitien. The plan followed at the marine barracks is to repeat in order to permit those on guard one night to see the pictures light. This has met with the approval of all and seems most satisfactory. All films for Haiti are received at Port au Prince and distributed to six places in this district having motion-picture machines, and then as soon as they are transferred to the northern district.

er entertainments.—At various times the ladies of the post at Port have arranged for and held dances at the Enlisted Men's Club.

raries.—Libraries are maintained at six different points in the southern and two in the northern district. From these points books are all other outposts requesting them. About 5,000 volumes are available in the northern district and 4,000 volumes in the southern district. Reading rooms are maintained at six different posts in the southern district. Pens, ink, and blotters are available at all times. A list of 75 were subscribed for last year for the marine barracks library. The navigation has furnished several sets of 10 periodicals each for other fund has just been received with which to buy more magazines in those already being received, and these will be sent to the outposts. s of books and magazines have been received and are all appreciated who receive them. No outpost, no matter how small it may have been, neglected in reading matter.

ucational.—From January 1, 1920, to April 22, 1920, Maj. C. S. Mc was in charge of the brigade morale work. During that time plans e for several educational classes, including a school of shorthand and hy. No typewriters have been available, and hence that part of the ill held in abeyance. The shorthand course offered by the Internarespondence Schools, and furnished by the sixth division, has been and is being followed by several men. Classes in French are organized icted by Sergt. A. Levesque, of the Sixty-third Company.

general, the morale work of this brigade is rapidly finding its place of usefulness. Our aim has been to stir up a spirit of unity, confidence in command, and to keep everybody busy at something really worth hrough the hearty cooperation of the commanding officers and their n the welfare of the men of their commands, the general morale of s of this brigade has increased quite noticeably during the last few Much has been accomplished; yet progress is never made by resting ses already attained, but rather in an increasing effort to do more been done and in a better way, using each success only as a stepping t better standard. And with this thought in mind the morale departthis brigade, with the continued cooperation of the officers in comill continue its work, striving to make each month an improvement previous one.

report on the morale work in this brigade would be complete withbute to the zeal and efficiency that has been displayed by Chaplain . Peterson. During the past few months he has been in entire charge ork, and the obvious strides that have been made during that time are is unremitting and well-directed work.

SANITARY.

As a result of constance and systematic effort there has been great ent in the general sanitary feature of all posts. In many instances to supply lumber and screening has left changes which are very desir- mpleted, but it is hoped that these difficulties will soon be removed.

SECOND REGIMENT.

ll men have been furnished cots and mattresses as well as mosquito l water is being boiled and filtered. The preparation of food is under uction of a competent cook.

St. Michel latrines have been made sanitary. The mess hall and ill soon be screened.

t Maissade the camp has been moved from the market place, where lived in very close proximity to natives, even sleeping in their huts, e outside of town, where it has been possible to institute proper arnts of quarters, mess hall, galley, etc. This is considered a vast im- nt and the camp is now a model.

t Hinche a camp outside the town has been developed into a model up.

(f) The camp at Thomonde has been moved outside of town under conditions very similar to those at Maïssade.

EIGHTH REGIMENT.

(g) At Mirebalais very encouraging improvement is noted in the camp from a place in town, where it was impossible to maintain regulations, to an ideal camp site just outside of town. Here there is drainage, and conditions are such that it is possible to eliminate all breeding places, dispose of refuse by burning every day, etc. Latrines have been made fly proof and galleys and mess halls screened. This is indeed a model camp.

(h) All outposts have been issued filters, cots, and mosquito nets. Water at camp is boiled and filtered. All men have been carefully vaccinated in all matters pertaining to venereal diseases.

(i) All these changes have also been instituted at Las Caobas. As the new camp site will not be completed until two or three weeks.

SUBCHASER ACTIVITIES.

59. (a) Subchaser No. 214.—Below is given a list of the trips the vessel has made since date of arrival here up to July 12:

Cape Haitien, via Gonaives (6 trips)	-----
Cape Haitien, direct (2 trips)	-----
Gonaives and return (5 trips)	-----
Port de Paix (1 trip)	----- el was delayed 24 hours on January 10, 1920, due to engine trouble, ordered to sea, and has never failed to complete a trip within a length of time.

TRANSPORTATION ACTIVITIES.

On my arrival in Haiti my inspection convinced me that the service was not properly handled, and on my return to Port au Prince Lienwerin was appointed as G-1, relieving the officer then in charge of it.

At that time the system of supply was as follows:

Prince and Mirebalais district.—This transportation was under the control of the depot quartermaster, who, because of his other duties, gave the attention to the transportation that was required. Supplies at Mirebalais were maintained by a daily truck from Port au Prince, averaging one truck a week. The outposts from Mirebalais were rationed by pack there were only trails from that point. The strength of the troops at Mirebalais was about 400.

Cape Haitien and Hinche district.—Supplies to Hinche were shipped by train from Port au Prince and from there by pack over very bad trails, including a river crossing. Occasionally a truck was sent from Cape Haitien through to Hinche via the train, but this was very difficult on account of the road conditions. At this time a new system of supply had just been inaugurated, viz, the shipment of supplies by subchaser to Gonaives, from there by train to Ennery, then by pack to the various camps at St. Michel, Maissade, and Hinche. At this time the transportation from Ennery had not been properly organized, so that much delay was getting the supplies through. This method relieved the packing at Port au Prince, a very hard trail, making it necessary to send only public property to the outposts.

Since that time the following changes and improvements have been made:

Prince and Mirebalais district.—On February 24, 1920, the transportation to Mirebalais was increased from five to nine trucks a week. This was accomplished by assigning six Quad trucks to this line of supply and sending out three trucks a time three times a week. Besides increasing the supply this permitted one truck helping another when accidents occurred. This maintained the supply until May 4, 1920, when, because of a large increase in the demand for supplies in the field, it became necessary to increase the supply by sending out a reserve supply at Mirebalais. As the number of trucks on duty at Mirebalais had not been increased since December, 1919, this increase of supply had to be carried through without increase in material. As the distance of the road to Mirebalais is the last 8 miles, a road ration dump was established first at Terra Rouge (11 miles from Mirebalais), then at Calabassier (from Mirebalais), and two Quads a day were sent to this dump, from there the supplies were packed to Mirebalais. In addition one Quad truck was sent through to Mirebalais three times a week to take care of supplies that could not be packed. This increased the truckage from 22,500 pounds, to 15 trucks, or 37,500 pounds, per week. On June 1, 1920, a White 1-ton truck was stationed at Mirebalais and because of the improvement of the roads between Mirebalais and Las Cahobas, the main line of this truck now handled the supplies to that station, and in addition effected the reduction of packing from the dump to Mirebalais as, being a truck and equipped with pneumatic tires, it can negotiate this part of the road better than the Quad. On June 19, 1920, two additional Quad trucks were received, they having been requested on May 1, 1920, in order to permit of laying up the older trucks for overhaul. Because of the poor condition of these trucks when received not much was gained by the increase in the number of trucks. Until February, 1920, there was no garage at Port au Prince and all motor transportation was kept on the Hasco lot of it not under cover. All repair work was done there. In February 1920, repairs were made with the United West Indies Corporation to construct a garage in accordance with our specification and lease this garage to the Corps at a certain percentage of cost of construction, as authority was granted for the renting of such a building. This garage was constructed and has a capacity of 20 machines, and contains a stock room and quarters for the mechanic force. It has greatly facilitated the repair of the trucks. Two White 1-ton trucks are now operating in Port au Prince and have taken the Quads in handling the local hauling.

(e) Cape Haitien and Hinche district.—The ration supply route to the Hinche district has been consolidated and is under the immediate supervision of Quartermaster Sergt. James C. Welsh, whose work in this connection has been excellent. A subchaser from Port au Prince delivers about 700 rations at Gonaives weekly. This is taken by train to Ennery, a distance of 22 miles. From that point the supplies are sent either by truck or pack train, according to road conditions, to St. Michel (23 miles), Maissade (45 miles), and Hinche (57 miles). On December 27, 1919, a White 1-ton truck was used in this district and on June 5, 1920, another truck of the same kind was used there. When the weather is fair, and during the entire dry season, motor trucks handle the supplies beyond the railhead at Ennery. When the weather is rainy the roads beyond St. Michel are impassable for motor transport and pack trains are used. The line of public property supplied was extended in June, 1920, by moving the pack train base from Bahon to Grand-Pré. This was due to the fact that the road from St. Michel to Grand-Pré had been greatly improved. This did away with the hard pack trail from Bahon and Maissade, where for about 15 miles the trail was along a road which was nearly impassable in the rainy season. Because of the condition of the road beyond St. Michel it is practically impossible to operate 2-ton trucks beyond that point.

GENDARMERIE D'HAÏTI.

61. (a) On June 30, 1920, the constabulary detachment had a strength as follows: Marine Corps, commissioned, 21; enlisted, 77. United States Marine Corps, commissioned, 5; enlisted, 10. Total commissioned, 26; enlisted, 87.

(b) The enlisted strength of this detachment on the above date was 200.

(c) During the year a rigid system of inspection and supervision of military exercises, clothing, food, housing etc., has been put into effect which has met with excellent results.

(d) Several changes in the details of administration were found necessary and were accordingly made. These changes include the detail of officers to the command of divisions, thus placing them on active military duty, the rearrangement of department district and subdistrict boundaries to conform with the Haitian political boundaries of departments, arrondissements, and communes.

(e) The constabulary detachment has the direct charge of all the prisoners in Haiti.

(f) During the past year the number of prisoners has materially increased due to captures made in the field.

(g) At each district headquarters there is a main prison while each subdistrict and post have lockups.

(h) At the larger prisons, Port au Prince and Cape Haitien, the prisoners are taught a trade, and when their product is marketable they are allowed a percentage in their work. The money derived in this manner is used to pay them on release, or may be allotted by them to their families if the period of confinement is for a long period. All the gendarme uniforms and the food for prisoners are manufactured by prison labor. A garden is maintained at each prison for the betterment of the gendarme and prison rations. At Chabert, near Cape Haitien, a prison farm is in operation, giving the prisoners air work to over 300 prisoners. The idea of this farm is, in addition to the saving in cost, to experiment as to the methods of cultivation of native products, and to give the benefit of better methods to the general public, letting them graphically see the results.

(i) In the districts of Jeremie, Jacmel, and Port de Paix, the gendarmes are looking after the repair of streets and the telegraph, as well as the rural districts away from the main roads. With the exception of the larger sea coast cities, the gendarmerie assumes supervision of the police service at every place where there is a gendarme post, especially in the interior at such places as Hinche, Mirebalais, Lascahobas, and Quanaimitte.

(j) The gendarmerie has as its prime duty the guarding of all towns throughout Haiti. The country is divided accordingly into departments, districts, etc. Troops are allocated to each district and stationed at the district headquarters, the small villages, etc., the largest body being at the district headquarters.

(k) This arrangement, while absolutely necessary, requires that the troops be split up into small units. With the present strength of the gendarmerie there are practically no troops left over to engage in field operations.

seriousness of the banditism that has existed in Haiti during the years necessitated the employment of marines in its suppression, and the larger part of the country overrun by bandits was taken over by units. Gendarmerie troops stationed in this section were placed in command of the marine officer in command of troops in the field, and gendarmes then worked in conjunction with the marines. This method was most satisfactory and the gendarmes were of invaluable assistance in suppressing the bandits and pacifying the country.

The police of Port au Prince is under the direction of the chief of the police, and consists of 3 officers of the gendarmerie and 150 men. These police are detectives in plain clothes.

The medical department of the gendarmerie d'Haiti is organized along the following lines: One medical director as chief surgeon; 2 medical inspectors as district surgeons; 3 first lieutenants (medical) as district surgeons; 3 lieutenants (medical) as district surgeons; contract surgeons, among the civilian medical officers as the exigencies of service require, 61 hospital corps men, enlisted from the native division into hospital corps ratings as follows: 5 first sergeants; 20 corporals; 15 privates, first class; 13 privates; a total of 61.

The division of the personnel follows the organization of the gendarmerie medical director, as chief surgeon and medical advisor to the chief of the gendarmerie, having headquarters in Port au Prince. The medical inspectors are situated with their respective department commanders, and serve in full capacity to them as the medical director does to the chief of the gendarmerie. In the districts the medical lieutenants follow out the same plan as their respective district commanders. The native hospital corps men are distributed that every post of the gendarmerie has a competent medical officer within immediate call.

The purpose of the medical department of the gendarmerie is similar to any medicomilitary organization. From a medical point of view, the part of Haiti comes under the direct supervision of the gendarmerie. Exceptions are few, and only in those places where the Public Health Service has their representatives stationed. These places are chiefly in the city, and in several of these places a gendarmerie medical officer is stationed who does no other professional work outside of his regular medicomilitary duties. This scheme of cooperation with the Public Health Service has been arranged during the past year, which works very well.

From a personal observation of the gendarmerie d'Haiti covering the past year, it is my opinion that a decided increase in its efficiency and effectiveness has been effected in this organization during the past year.

It is further my opinion that this increase in efficiency is due to the zeal, energy, and personal characteristics of the officer in charge of this department, Col. F. M. Wise, and I take great pleasure in taking this opportunity to call the attention of the major general commandant to the marked improvement in this organization.

CIVIL.

After a careful study of the situation I determined that the people of Haiti should be assured that the "corvée" was absolutely abolished, never to be put in effect, and that the military forces would reestablish a condition of order, and further that all peaceful and law-abiding citizens should receive the fullest protection that I could give them.

To this end I issued the attached proclamation, marked "F," and later, in 1920, the one marked "G."

It had always been my belief and was generally well recognized that certain persons residing in Haiti were assisting the revolutionary element. I discussed this question with the President of Haiti and obtained from him a promise to deport those that I considered necessary. The deportation of many Germans had been obstructing the work of the occupation and was therefore soon during the past eight months the important if not vital subjects of the "corvée" and "education" have received my most careful study, and I have turned over to the department recommendations for the solving of these problems. After much thought over the pros and cons I decided that it would be of great benefit and assistance to the military occupation in its work of pacification if the President of Haiti visited the towns in northern and central Haiti and discussed the officials and market people. Few, if any, had ever seen the President, as for a President to tour Haiti has heretofore been a dream of. In fact, for a President who came from the south to northern Haiti unaccompanied by his army was considered suicidal.

(f) All the prominent towns in northern and central Haiti were visited by the President, in company with me. Speeches were made at favorable and lasting impression created.

(g) It has been my endeavor to impress upon the Haitian people that at all times the law-abiding citizens would receive every protection from the forces of the occupation, and to this end almost immediately upon the command of the brigade I issued the most stringent orders regarding the treatment of natives by members of the occupation, gendarmerie, and Coast Guard. Cases of maltreatment brought to my knowledge have received prompt attention.

(h) It is my belief that at the present time, the forces of the occupation have obtained the respect and admiration of those natives who have sufficient education to appreciate the work we are doing here and that the precept they have done much to civilize the natives living in the state of savagery in the mountain districts. Furthermore the firmness of the occupation has taken against the abhorrent practice of voodooism, unquestionably do much to stamp out the human sacrifices.

(i) Practically all the newspapers of Port au Prince have, on my initiative, stated that pacification in Haiti is complete.

(j) Under recent date I received a letter from the director of the official newspaper who states as follows:

"I wish to call to your attention that I am one of the Haitians who believe the American occupation was very necessary for the maintenance of order, curbing governmental ambition, and putting an end to the disorderly state that certain of my fellow countrymen had brought about by their shameful and dishonorable conduct. M. le Colonel, you should ever bear in mind that under your administration that Cacoism was vanquished and peace assured."

(k) In addition to the above, small problems have been almost daily brought to me relating to the civil administration of Haiti, the smoothing over of spots for either business people or occupation officials, and the giving of aid.

(l) These problems together with numerous conferences and my duties require much time and thought, and consequently my day is usually a busy one.

63. I can not conclude this report without first paying tribute to the skill and efficiency of the officers composing the brigade commander's staff.

64. Keen in ever upholding my policies and unremitting in their assistance have been of invaluable assistance to me in directing the operations of the brigade.

65. Especially must I mention Maj. T. C. Turner, who, in addition to performing his duty as brigade adjutant, has acted most efficiently as chief of staff. Maj. R. L. Shepard, who as G-3 and G-2, has directed the operations of the intelligence sections; and Lieutenant Schwerin, who as G-1, has placed the supply on an efficient basis.

EXHIBIT 4.

OFFICE OF THE POST COMMANDER
MARINE BARRACKS
Paris Island, S. C., September 1, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In compliance with your wishes, as expressed in your letter of the 18th instant, I have prepared a report on conditions during the period in which I was in command of the marine brigade.

I have also had a copy made of a report I made to Admiral Knapp on May 17, 1917, and in some ways this latter report has gone more into detail than does the one I have just prepared.

I had thought of inserting paragraph 14 of the report to Admiral Knapp the next to last paragraph of the new report.

numerous things in the report to Admiral Knapp which are of a nature, or at least touch very closely State Department policy or bring to your attention the fact that new report has been prepared collection of events, supplemented by comparatively few papers other of the diary, the original of which was forwarded to Admiral Knapp at the time, copies being furnished the Navy and State departments, and also of the Marine Corps.

A number of personal letters which were sent to me just before I left Haiti at the end of November, 1917, the contents of which would seem that up to that time at least the American occupation had the respect of the many Haitians, even of the political classes. Of course, being Haitians, they must be taken with a grain of salt.

If further information is desired, I will be very glad to do what I can to cordially,

ELI K. COLE.

OFFICE OF THE POST COMMANDER,
MARINE BARRACKS,
Parris Island, S. C., September 23, 1920.

Gen. Eli K. Cole, United States Marine Corps.

Secretary of the Navy.

Conditions in Haiti during period my command of First Brigade United States Marine Corps, Haiti, November 22, 1916, to November 27, 1917.

(a) Letter Secretary of the Navy, September 18, 1920, to Brig. Gen. Cole; (b) diary as brigade commander, January 30 to November 27, 1917, sent to headquarters United States Marine Corps.

Compliance with the directions contained in reference (a) the following is submitted: Owing to the fact that the official records of the occupation are on file in Haiti, this report has been made up from my diary and from copies of a limited number of papers kept by me in Haiti; it is, however, believed to be accurate.

In order to understand the work performed in Haiti it is necessary to know the conditions existing in that country when we landed, though the conditions were such that only a vague idea can be given in a written report. To realize those conditions required actual personal seeing.

Haiti occupies the western end of the island of Santo Domingo, or Haiti, 12,000 square miles, and from two to two and one-half millions of inhabitants, mostly of negro blood, though the educated and ruling classes of Haiti generally have a considerable mixture of white blood, mostly French. There is a lack of proper schools, probably 95 per cent of the population is illiterate, the vast majority of the peasants being pure black; the country people are generally hard working, though many are naturally lazy, very hospitable, but not led for good or bad. The ruling classes are generally of mixed blood, the educated apparently pure-blooded negroes occupy prominent positions of power and are leaders in public and political life, though generally not high in the Haitian social world. The negroes of mixed type have the characteristics of such people the world over—vain, loving praise, exchangeable beyond measure, illogical, and double-faced; many of them are educated and polished, but their sincerity must always be doubted. In the galleries, to attitudinize as true patriots, but without absolute and self-seeking. There are exceptions, but among the political leaders are rare and only serve to accentuate the true type. As these are leaders in Haitian political life, it was with this type that we had most entirely. They are all proud of their black, white, or mixed blood, above all, no matter what the mixture of race, are proud of being Haitians. Under strain, however, they are almost sure to revert to the black characteristics.

Haiti has given Haiti every advantage from an economic point of view—ample rain, and free water for irrigation; high hills with valleys, wide diversity of crops, as the climate ranges from tropical in the south to temperate in the hills.

6. During the time of the French, Haiti was the richest colony in the world with good paved roads throughout the island, irrigating systems where large, well-equipped country estates, but after the expulsion of the French everything was allowed to go to rack and ruin; roads and irrigation disappeared, and the country steadily relapsed into a state of barbarism.

7. Outside of Port au Prince and a few of the larger towns there were absolutely no attempts made to enforce sanitary measures or laws; at all places the attempts really amounted to little, the usual practice being to refuse into the street or the nearest vacant lot, leaving it there to rot and decay until washed away by the rains. Every place had its own stench.

8. A few of the cities had so-called waterworks, but these were in a state of dilapidation that the supply of water was intermittent and unreliable.

9. While a few roads existed when we landed, they were absolutely impassable, filled with mud holes where animals were drowned, lacking bridges, impassable for wheeled vehicles.

10. Some telephone and telegraph lines had been established but were utterly unfit for use, much of the wire being gone and many poles gone.

11. In the larger towns the French sisters conducted hospitals, but the allowances were seldom paid they lacked nearly everything in the way of medical appliances. In the country districts there was no provision for the care of the sick, the doctors almost invariably living in the larger towns.

12. With the exception of a comparatively few schools in the larger towns or cities maintained by the Catholic Church, with the aid of small and unpaid subsidies from the Haitian Government, the school system was almost completely demoralized. While on paper there were many schools, the schools, if they existed at all, were generally unfit for human occupancy. As an example, on one occasion while on an inspection trip through the interior of Haiti I asked to see the schoolhouse. It was pointed out to me, and on entering I found it occupied by a sow with a litter of pigs and the place filthy; the place showed no signs of ever having been used as a school. The so-called teachers were the political friends of the appointing power, almost invariably unfit for the position, and generally did not perform more than draw such part of their salaries as graft and the Government would allow them.

13. Constant revolutions had nearly destroyed agricultural interests. In August, 1915, when we landed people were dying of starvation in Port au Prince and Cape Haitien. Planting in the interior had largely ceased on account of the absence of men with the contending forces, difficulty of getting to markets over muddy trails, and through the robbing of those women who had to get their produce to a market town.

14. Land laws were bad, and as no one except an official who desired to own land or one who controlled the courts dared to buy land, there were no improvements, and one could see in Haiti the same condition of mill (man or ox power) as was in use in ancient Egypt.

15. Under the Haitian constitution every male Haitian was an embryo soldier in order to have soldiers to combat the revolutionary forces, or to keep the Government in power. Male peasants were subject to seizure and to forced enlistments, and the only way to escape this fate was to belong to the ruling classes or to go into hiding. Consequently, most of the inhabitants lived in the hills, distant from the main traveled trails, and men were seldom seen on the so-called roads or in the towns, the only traffic being such as it was, being brought in by the women. One result of these conditions is that there are probably two women to every man in Haiti, as the women have done most of the business (trade) they are, as a rule, of a higher mentality than the male.

16. The army was really a disorganized mob, enlisted by force, kept in order by fear, equipped in the worst conceivable way, living by robbery of the people, their chiefs appropriating to their own uses most of their pay, and commanded by hordes of generals. Everything bought for the military was apparently a means for graft from the President and ministers of the way down the line.

17. The prisons were indescribably filthy and generally filled with the bodies of those who happened to be in power. No provision was made by the Government to feed prisoners, each prisoner having to depend upon friends or relatives to keep from starvation.

Haiti had been living under what was practically a feudal system, "perpetrated by assassination" and numerous other forms of outrage. There were the feudal masters, and when some member became prominent he became a leader with a large personal following; he had authority through lesser chiefs with smaller followings, who in turn had authority through petty chiefs who did not hesitate to torture those of their followers who disobeyed them or refused to pay.

If the disobedient one escaped, the vengeance was then taken; hence their power was practically unlimited, and upon promises of reward their forces were employed to overthrow the then existing ruler.

It should be said, however, that they remained loyal to the one in power until the work was done and he in power; this accomplished, money becoming scarce, they were at the disposal of the next candidate.

When the French there were beautiful country estates with hands, but these have nearly all disappeared, either through deliberate neglect. As the result of this and of the various other conditions of the country has gravitated to Port au Prince and to some towns. Port au Prince was the place where graft was done out of the most luxuries could be obtained, and if the politician left that place to accept an appointment on the outside where the graft was less division with others required. Money gained through political means was generally put into houses and land in Port au Prince, though the cities were large and dangerous, the person frequently went abroad to acquire foreign citizenship.

There were adequate salaries paid to Government officials or embezzlers in Port au Prince or in the country, the general understanding was that outside pickings were to be depended upon, nor were the salaries paid in full; months would pass with no payments, the undertaker would go to money lenders to get funds at a discount of from 20 to 50 percent and it was said that the money lenders had to divide with the "boss" in the governmental department concerned; in any event, the boss protected the money lenders. The judges and other employees of the government if justice were in the same fix, their salaries never having been paid, were inadequate for their living expenses; their numbers were excessive and they had to depend upon bribes or spoils for their support. Some of the judges and higher court were men of great ability, but in the rural districts most invariably unversed in the law and in some cases unable to read and had no copies of the code they were supposed to enforce.

The same conditions applied to every department of the Government and to various ramifications. With few exceptions the affairs of the communes (townships) were administered in a still worse manner, the receipts going into the pockets of a favored few. Internal security was generally not standardized, or, if they were, were generally collected on the basis of all the taxpayer could stand, by far the largest amount of the market women.

A number of years prior to the American occupation the conditions were worse and worse, President following President in rapid succession of a sudden death or revolution:

President December, 1908; overthrown August, 1911.

President August, 1911; blown up in palace January, 1912.

President August, 1912; poisoned May, 1913.

President May, 1913; overthrown January, 1914.

President February, 1914; overthrown October, 1914 (killed in prison).

President November, 1914; overthrown February, 1915.

President May, 1915; killed July 29, 1915.

The president and his followers looted the public treasury and borrowed as much money as possible at large discounts and at high rates of interest, sold the land on liens on customs receipts, raised or increased import and export duties and got forced contributions from Haitian business men, and exploited the country for the benefit of himself and of his political friends. In turn lived on graft, blackmail, forced contributions, loans, and as the money began to give out, some one with more money, or with false promises of future graft or payments, started a revolution, using mercenaries from the north of Haiti.

23. The demoralization of the country reached the climax in 1917. President Guillaume Sam, having been inaugurated in May of that year, had all of his political enemies he could get hold of put in the prison at Port au Prince; on the night of July 27-28, fearing a revolution in Port au Prince, he issued orders to the general in command to kill all political prisoners in that jail; so far as possible his orders were executed to the letter, some 240 Haitians (including an ex-President) were butchered.

24. An outbreak against President Sam followed and he took refuge at the French Legation, but the temper of the people was such that Sam was driven from the legation by a mob, cut partly to pieces, and his body dragged down the street. The general who carried out President Sam's order to kill the Santo Dominican Legation, but he likewise was seized and killed by a man whose three male children had been done to death in the same manner.

25. As soon as our naval forces could reach Port au Prince troops were sent there and at Cape Haitien, and the so-called American occupation of the country was begun.

26. When the undersigned relieved Maj. Gen. (then Brig. Gen.) Waller as brigade commander on November 22, 1916, conditions in the Republic of Haiti were generally peaceful, there being no armed forces to the United States forces or to the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, though from time to time, but at increasingly rare intervals, reports would be received of lifting or of robbing of market women by armed robbers, almost always along or in the vicinity of the border between Haiti and Santo Domingo.

27. These robberies were almost always committed by Haitian Dominican outlaws, who for many years had lived by violence and of one kind or another; they were utterly indifferent to human life, their own, and finding it unsafe to live and to operate in Haiti, had taken refuge in the extremely rough and mountainous country some miles beyond the border into Santo Domingo, whence they would make rapid though infrequent trips across the border into Haiti. For many years each country had been a refuge for outlaws from across the border, the cattle stolen in one country being disposed of in the other country, probably with the connivance of the officials of each country.

28. Owing to the former Haitian custom for all factions to seize service any and all countrymen they encountered or could get hold of, not only all business or trade in rural Haiti has been carried on for many years by the women, and it was against these women and small farmers or countrymen that the forays were generally directed. When we landed in Haiti, the country along the northern and north central boundary was a desolate wilderness, the very few people remaining being close to the towns, though some years before it had been well cultivated and well populated. As we suppressed brigandage and highway robbery and gave protection and property the natives began to return to their former homes, and we visited that section of the country in November of 1917 its reputation was well under way and a section where murder, rapine, and robbery had been the rule had become one of the safest parts of Haiti.

29. Except as noted below, the same order and public safety prevailed throughout all of Haiti during the period when I was in command of the brigade. There were occasional robberies, cattle were stolen from time to time, and the brigades took place, but generally the breaches of the peace were in the form of misdemeanors or petty thievery, and I will venture to say that during that period life and property in Haiti were as secure as in the United States and not more secure.

30. The actual work of preserving law and order was placed in the hands of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, though for some months marine organizations were sent throughout the island as to permit their being able to back up the Gendarmerie without delay in case of necessity. Early in 1917 a considerable number of marines were transferred from Haiti and as the Gendarmerie became more efficient and as conditions appeared so stable in Haiti, our troops were drawn from Gonaives and St. Marc on February 16, from Le Trou on February 18, and from Port de Paix on March 15, leaving our troops only at Port au Prince, Cape Haitien, and Ouanaminth; for a short time we had only a small Marine Corps companies in Haiti, but generally we had from 10 to 20 companies.

31. To the best of my recollection, during the period concerned we were not engaged in any active operations against the Haitians, but we used as forces available to back up the Gendarmerie in case of necessity.

Its upbuilding was a difficult piece of had been brought up under Haitian relation between law officers and citizens into law-abiding officers nd while, as was to be expected, there were numerous slip ups, the n of these men under the guidance of our officers was a remark-work. The greatest difficulty was to prevent them from exceeding ty; and as there was only 1 gendarme to every 5 square miles and to each 900 inhabitants, much of their work had to be done mmediate ken of their white officers. Complaints were received time, but were always carefully investigated and corrective meas- hen the circumstances warranted.

Generally these reports o be malicious, but when well founded disciplinary action was taken. ion was frequently bad, and officers in outlying districts frequently ickly and on their own best judgment; but to the best of my recol- g the period of my command there were absolutely no reports made officers of the gendarmerie which involved cruelty or unlawful atians, nor did I ever hear during all my service in Haiti of any ny American—marine or gendarme—was guilty of any punishment n of the body of any enemy captured or killed. There were abso- thorized executions during the period of my command, nor have I f any execution being ordered or carried out.

be noted that in all these cases the attacks were made by outlaws e casualties they suffered were due to their being unlawfully armed d in an unlawful occupation.

33. Referring to that part of your letter which calls for specific numbers of Haitians killed, it is impossible for me to give numbers, but while I can only speak for my own period of service in Haiti that the number killed was small, indeed, compared to the good will and when one considers the facts that we were operating in a country of anarchy, disregard of human life, and armed robbery all reigned where the operations were conducted against outlaws in a heavily mountainous country; where our enemies were true bushwhackers, every trail and hiding place, and where the first intimation of their presence was usually a shot.

34. Our constant aim was to protect the peaceful citizens and the country safe for those who desired to cultivate the soil, attend to their business, and to live orderly lives. To attain these ends it was absolutely necessary to take notice of every armed breach of the peace and to make arrests, to suppress bushwhacking, and similar disorders so dangerous that those who followed such means of livelihood either reformed and went to work or left the country; incidentally a large number reformed and became decent, law-abiding citizens.

35. It was only through the hardest kind of work, marching miles an hour after hour, day in and day out, over mountain trails and through dense jungles, in mud and rain and heat, that a country given to anarchy and property had formerly been absolutely at the mercy of armed bushwhackers, was made orderly and safe for its inhabitants. We did this by the good will of the vast majority of the inhabitants, particularly of the peaceful people, and those who feared and resented our presence were almost entirely those who had lived off the country, either by spoils or force of arms.

36. Generally the conduct of the individual marines was very good, a number committed serious offenses and were tried by court-martial.

There were two trials for murder or manslaughter, one at Port-au-Prince and one at Cape Haitien.

One of our men was killed in cold blood by a native of Santo Domingo. An officer of the gendarmerie was also killed in cold blood as he was on his way to his house at Le Borgne, where he was in command, to make either an inspection or an arrest.

37. In taking up the civil conditions during my command in Haiti it is necessary to bear in mind the conditions we found when we landed, as set forth in the first 24 paragraphs of this report.

38. Within a few days after landing, as soon as it was learned that the people of Port au Prince were dying of starvation, application was made for funds to relieve the immediate situation and every possible aid was given in providing foodstuffs.

39. As soon as conditions would permit, funds were allotted by the commanding general and later by the then brigade commander for purposes of construction, road repair, etc., not only to help correct conditions but to provide means whereby those who desired to work could earn necessities for themselves and their families. As our control over the country extended and became available, they were allotted for such public works, sanitation, etc., as needed immediate attention for their preservation and the good of the country, and in order to provide work until land could be cleared and crops planted and gathered. From the start all Haitian employees on public projects were paid weekly, and, much to their astonishment, the full salary promised for the labor; before that time they were seldom paid at all, only a small part of the amounts due them.

40. Many of the works for the betterment of the conditions in Haiti were started by my predecessor, and in many cases it is impossible to distinguish between the work accomplished during his administration and during my command.

In order to have these works properly done and the funds allotted in an honest manner it was necessary that the supervision and final execution be placed in the hands of American officers; at first in the hands of the marine or naval medical officers of the marine brigade; the gendarmerie was built up and its officers, both line and staff, became familiar with the work and with the conditions in the country. Our troops were concentrated, the execution and accounting for all works were carried on by American officers of the gendarmerie, the commander making the allotments both as to amounts and as to location, and the works were to be carried on.

financial causes no money was available to start new public works. In addition, practically all the money expended being used to rehabilitate what had gone to rack and ruin under Haitian maladministration. I regret large sums were expended in these improvements, and, it is true, all sums were properly and honestly expended for the purposes allotted.

General statement of work accomplished follows:

SANITATION.

This work was in the larger towns, though before I was relieved practically every small village had been cleaned up and was being kept in a sanitary condition and vacant lots were cleaned up and kept clean.

Streets were drained and, where required, paved, repaved, or built up so as to prevent stagnation in the wet season.

Drainage was installed where necessary and mosquito-breeding places eradicated or materially reduced.

Toilets were built to eliminate the prevailing practice, among the natives, of using the streets or vacant lots for that purpose.

Water works were overhauled, distributing systems repaired and increased use could be made of the available supplies of water; in some cases conditions before we took charge were so bad that sufficient water for drinking and cooking purposes was not available.

Public places or markets were cleaned up and kept clean, and when market stalls existed these were repaired.

A number of cases field incinerators were built to dispose of garbage.

ROADS.

Work was first started from the larger towns, each town working on its own neighbor. The policy adopted was to build good country roads between the principal towns so as to be able eventually to connect Port au Prince with the north of Haiti, to be followed by connecting roads to the south. Roads were properly drained and crowned, and where possible, topography was such a manner as to stand the probable traffic, of such width and such lines as would enable it to be converted into a well-metalled highway when funds for such work became available.

Connections to the main highways from towns off the main routes were constructed as funds and men were available.

Materials were available for bridges, but a few existing ones were repaired, cleaned out and made passable in safety, except in cases of floods, which were by no means rare.

Dikes were built across marshes which for many years had been inundating much of the wet season, and in a few cases dikes built years before deep rivers within their beds were repaired and extended.

Five weeks after I left Haiti the main road from Leogane to Port au Prince, to Gonaïves, to Plaisance, to Limbe, to Cape Haitien, to Le Trou, to Fort de la Vallée, to Ouanaminth on the Santo Dominican border was finished, and the end of Haiti made the trip to the border in automobile, a distance of nearly 225 miles, a trip which ordinarily had taken four to five days' time to accomplish. In all, we had constructed approximately 350 miles of good roads and had repaired many miles of minor roads and trails. Formerly at many times during the year animals could not pass, or, if they could, with only a small load, market produce could be brought into the country without delay.

As has been stated before, when we arrived at Port au Prince many of its people were actually suffering for lack of food, but before I left the normal number of animals entering Port au Prince from the plain—i. e., over one road—on the principal market day, was between seven and eight thousand.

Combined with the vast increase in cultivation of the land meant an increase in prosperity to the people of the country districts, enabled lack of foodstuffs due to the war to be overcome, and allowed what had never before—a considerable export trade in foodstuffs to be built up with the Isthmian Canal Zone.

The country people, and particularly the country women, were almost invincibly friendly and thoroughly contented with our presence and administration.

tion of affairs. On a number of occasions I was told by priests and others who had lived many years in Haiti that it was no uncommon thing for the women in their prayers to thank God for the presence of the Americans.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES.

The old lines were repaired and new lines built, first for military and later to aid in improving communications between all parts of the country. While in many cases our work was of a primitive nature (we frequently used beer bottles for insulators), and at first there were numerous destructions or cutting of lines; eventually we could communicate by wire with practically every town and gendarmerie post in Haiti.

POST OFFICES.

The postal system when we arrived was such that not even a Haitian could be trusted with anything of intrusting valuable or confidential matter to the mail. As the system remained in Haitian hands, we were able to do little to improve it, although through the gendarmerie taking over the transportation of the postal department, the mails were safe while en route between posts and were delivered without the former delays.

Upon my recommendation the President of Haiti asked for a postal expert from the United States to reorganize the system. This expert arrived before I left, and was having considerable difficulty in getting any respect from the Haitian postal authorities resented his presence.

SCHOOLS.

A very careful investigation was made of school conditions. No teachers were found who did not attend the classes they were supposed to teach. The payment of these was stopped. The pay for teachers was so small as to enable even a Haitian to live in decency, and consequently the teachers were frankly incompetent or held the place as a sinecure, doing no duty for the pay they received. In other cases it was found that buildings were rented for school purposes but that school was never held, these cases the payment of the rent was stopped.

We gave such assistance and support as we could to those schools where actual instruction was being carried on, and their conditions were materially improved.

After the investigations were completed recommendations were made to the President of Haiti, who asked me to endeavor to obtain a skilled educator from the United States to take charge, under the minister of public instruction, building up a school system in Haiti. A man of the type required, a Frenchman, French and Creole and used to dealing with the colored race, was obtained from Louisiana, and prior to my leaving Haiti he had entered upon the duties of his office. His presence was also resented by the Haitian officials of the department, and it was only through personal representations to the President that the minister for public instruction would aid him in his work.

Another result of our investigations was to find that there was real interest in schools and that many of the country people would be glad to have their children attend schools. The schools run by the priests and others were well attended, the children usually alert and quick to learn. The schools were few and beyond the reach of the vast majority of the country people.

In order to stimulate interest in schools I had four model schools constructed in the four sections of Haiti, their actual sites being carefully selected on main traveled roads where the largest possible number of people could see the work going on. After those were started applications came to build others, but as funds were scarce I started the plan of providing communities where a schoolhouse was desired with such material as could be produced locally, with the understanding that the communities would furnish all local material and labor involved in its construction. I remember it, about 20 schools had been started under this plan before I left Haiti.

A former manual-training school in Port au Prince was rehabilitated when I left it had between two and three hundred students, either the children of the very poor, and they were turning out really good work, the children living in the school building itself.

AGRICULTURE.

start we did everything we could to stimulate interest in agriculture country was cleared of bandits people returned to their previous started planting; men who had had enough of life in the hills and promised to obey the law were given work to enable them to earn their clearing and planting.

1917 it became apparent that Haiti would not be able to import as formerly, so a systematic campaign was started and carried out; large acreage of foodstuffs as possible, and the increase was. In this we had material aid from the President and from many agricultural school was started near Port au Prince in connection with experimental farm that had been started by my predecessor, and later, the gendarmerie, a number of experimental farms were started in the hills.

In accordance with the President it was decided to ask for agricultural experts of the United States Department of Agriculture to make a comprehensive survey of the agricultural possibilities of Haiti. Our Government received the experts as requested.

As a result of the increase in planting increased enormously the amount of foodstuffs which enabled considerable amounts to be exported after the needs of the country were filled.

The country people generally enjoyed a prosperity which, I venture to say, they never enjoyed before, notwithstanding the fact that it had been impossible to make any improvements in the land or other laws.

THE GENDARMERIE.

For a comparison between the old and the new Haiti could be made side by side by side a company of gendarmes and a company of the Haitian Army. Mistakes were made, as was natural, and untrustworthy men were enlisted. Their improvement at times appeared slow, and occasional detachments without their white leaders to steady them fell away, but all the same their progress and improvement were steady. Finally they made more efficient and loyal officers of the law than could have been expected when the material at hand was considered.

As to the generally corrupt practices in vogue in all the communes, particularly in the rural townships, I recommended to the President that the officers of the gendarmerie be charged by means of a presidential decree with the supervision of the affairs of the communes. This was done, and while the fines were reduced to what the laws allowed and always standardized, the collections were increased anywhere from 500 to 1,000 per cent, the result that the communes not only became self-supporting, but were greatly improved in their sanitary and physical conditions. This change was a great benefit to the American occupation, but as it stopped an enormous graft on the part of the Haitian communal officials, it also increased the resentment of the small Haitian politician against us.

PRISONS.

Prisons, which had been almost the worst institutions in Haiti, were either rebuilt or abandoned, sanitary methods applied, prisoners provided with shower baths installed when water was available, medical treatment provided where requiring it, and generally turned from pest holes into reformatory institutions. Prison practices were reformed, system was introduced, reduction of term of confinement and sometimes paroles granted for good behavior, separate sections for female prisoners provided, manual training introduced in the larger prisons so that when prisoners were discharged they were useful members of their communities.

HOSPITALS.

Existing hospitals were thoroughly overhauled, new construction erected, many modern appliances installed, patients properly cared for and it was in the larger cities of Haiti there were really well-equipped places for medical and surgical treatment. This was done by American naval medical officers and should be a lasting monument to their devotion to the smaller communities, wherever we had a Hospital Corps man, dispensaries were established so that simple medical treatment and first aid were given. Whenever possible the serious cases were sent to one of the hospitals.

IRRIGATION.

The irrigating system in the plain of the cul de sac, outside of Prince, was overhauled, old ditches were opened and banked, and a considerable amount of repair work was done to the dam and spillway of the reservoir (Bassin Général), as these were in danger of complete failure in the event of an unusually heavy or long-continued rain. Through this work some thousands of acres of land which for years had been without irrigating water were redeemed for productive purposes. Incidentally the ditches were patrolled, so that a few large landowners could not divert more than their share of the water to the detriment of the smaller landowners.

42. My understanding of our mission in Haiti was that we were to preserve order, to aid in rehabilitating the country, to help the Haitians establish and maintain an honest and efficient government of Haiti, and through our fair dealings with all classes of Haitians to create a strong feeling of friendship toward the United States.

43. It was felt that the best results could be obtained by doing everything possible to inspire confidence in us and in the motives of our government through developing, first, a willingness and later a desire on the part of the Haitians to work with us toward the desired ends.

44. This policy certainly gained us the friendship and good will of the majority of the Haitians, but our success with the educated classes was marked and with the higher political classes comparatively small. We did gain their personal esteem to a considerable extent, but their confidence was generally lacking; they desired to aid or use us so far as we would serve their own ends, but all the time our presence was resented as it meant a constant check against dishonest use or administration of public funds.

45. Our difficulties in gaining the good will of the educated classes were largely due to the following:

(a) Failure to provide funds (negotiate a loan) to meet interest on the existing public debts and to enable these debts to be liquidated or redeemed. Considerable parts of certain Haitian loans were held by Haitian families were dependent to a considerable extent on the payment of interest on bonds held by them, and there is no question but that our failure of interest caused considerable hardship and resulted in resentment toward our intervention in Haitian affairs.

(b) All the educated classes mixed more or less in politics, and many individuals did not hold office, members of their families or near relatives, and when these were in power the whole family usually benefited in one or another through concessions, special privileges, etc., and consequently, too, looked with disfavor upon our influence in maintaining a stable government.

(c) There was a fear that the Americans desired to exploit the country and its resources, and this was heightened by constant rumors that the Americans desired to gain control of the rich islands of La Tortue, Navas and that our Government desired to gain control of Môle St. N.

(d) Educated Haitians were very proud of being citizens of an independent negro republic; they were constantly haunted by the fear that we would take away their independence, and do what we would to disabuse them of this idea the fear remained.

(e) Generally the business classes were in our favor, though as the war became more and more difficult to import and to export goods through the blockade incident to the Great War, their business suffered and their good will correspondingly.

(f) The policy of making prompt monthly payments in full to the Government employees gave us to a considerable extent their good will, though as a whole they were indifferent in their attitude toward their duties and resented being made to do the work for which they were paid.

46. My relations with the higher Haitian officials were generally cordial. I found many men of considerable ability and some who were honest, but generally they were self-seeking and were constantly to provide Government employment for their friends, no matter how or unfit or how unnecessary such employment was, and to devise getting control of Government funds for their own benefit. material and moral improvement in Haiti during the first 28 months erican occupation was beyond belief, but it will take at least a gen- education and of constant effort, with careful supervision and guid- hange the attitude of the Haitian ruling classes and to build up in is a proper sense of responsibility toward their own country and to an honest and efficient Government of Haiti by the Haitians.

ELI K. COLE.

EXHIBIT 5.

OCTOBER 12, 1920.

Major General Commandant John A. Lejeune, United States Marine and Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, United States Marine Corps. Secretary of the Navy.

Investigation of offenses alleged to have been committed by certain of the gendarmerie of Haiti at Hinche and Massade, Haiti, during the of 1918-19.

During the month of August last it came to the attention of the Major Commandant that the report of an investigation into the alleged mis- of certain officers of the gendarmerie of Haiti, which the brigade com- ad been directed to make by the former Major General Commandant or approved by the Secretary of the Navy under date of January 12, ld not be found at headquarters United States Marine Corps. A inquiry was made, and no information in regard to the report could ed from anyone on duty at headquarters Marine Corps or in any he Navy Department. The Major General Commandant also com- l by radio with the brigade commander in Haiti in regard to the nd learned from him that the report in question had been transmitted om Haiti on March 20, 1920. Apparently it had been lost in transit. t 31, 1920, just prior to our leaving Washington for Haiti, you gave us tructions to make a careful supplementary investigation of the whole d to report in full to you on our return to the United States.

In compliance with your instructions, every effort was made to obtain full ple information on the subject. We examined all officers of the Ma- s and of the gendarmerie of Haiti now serving there who had any e of the affair; also a number of enlisted gendarmes, Haitian officials, merie officers, and the French priest at Hinche, as well as two ex- rie officers now living in Santo Domingo. Some of the witnesses had land and are now in the United States. An effort is now being made touch with them.

In our opinion, the evidence obtained by us and by the board of investiga- blishes the following facts, viz:

The abolition of corvée or enforced labor on the roads by the people of ich had been in effect under the supervision of the gendarmerie of accordance with the rural code of that country since 1916, was directed ler issued by the commandant of the gendarmerie, to take effect on ., 1918.

The order was not obeyed at Hinche and Maissade.

The unauthorized corvée continued until March, 1919, when it was by Brig. Gen. A. W. Catlin, United States Marine Corps, and then ommander, who made a personal investigation of conditions at Hinche sade at that time.

During the winter of 1918 and 1919 there was a serious increase in the of bandit bands, conditions finally becoming so grave that the gen- of Haiti was unable to handle the situation single handed, and in 1919, the marines were brought into the district of Hinche to take e the situation.

Early all the witnesses examined stated it to be their opinion that us bandit situation in the vicinity of Hinche was badly handled by the ho commanded the gendarmerie in the department of north Haiti. A of these witnesses also stated that the above-mentioned officer gave his ate officers orders to report "everything quiet," in spite of the fact that with the bandits were frequently taking place. These witnesses also stated that, in their opinion, this officer desired to conceal the true state of affairs from his superiors so as to prevent the gendarmes being suspected the marines, who, at that time, were concentrated at Port au Prince, Haiti. Some evidence indicates that his orders to officers were responsible for illegal executions and continuance of corvée.

(f) During the months of November and December, 1918, and January, 1919, several bandit prisoners (names unknown) were illegally executed at Hinche by gendarmes acting under orders of gendarmerie officers. It is strong evidence that Garnier Jean, the notary at Maissade, was the gendarme officer on duty at that place.

(g) During the investigation in March, 1919, by the then brigadier of the conditions existing at Hinche and Maissade, the ill-treatment of prisoners mentioned in the preceding paragraph became known. He transferred the officers of the gendarmerie against whom charges were made, but took no further disciplinary action in the matter.

(h) We recommend that the brigade commander be directed to general court-martial proceedings against all persons implicated who were brought within the jurisdiction of the court.

4. We deem it appropriate to state at this time that the misdeeds outlined is not indicative of the general state of affairs in the gendarmerie of Haiti, but that it constitutes an exception of the general rule of good conduct on the part of its officers and men. The officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps assigned to duty with the gendarmerie have performed excellent work of the highest value; they have overcome almost insuperable difficulties in organizing and training the gendarmerie, and have made it a military unit which reflects great credit on Haiti and the United States. The officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps serving with the gendarmerie have shown the loyal support of the enlisted gendarmes by means of their justice, honesty, and unselfish devotion to duty. The gendarmerie officers, on the other hand, with one accord stated that they had perfect confidence in the honesty and loyalty of the gendarmes.

5. We found the military situation and general conditions in Haiti at the time of our visit there to be excellent from the Marine Corps point of view. The Marine Corps organizations exhibited every evidence of efficiency, discipline, and high morale. Our investigation showed that the present commander has brought to trial all persons reported for committing crimes against the inhabitants. All papers are transmitted herewith.

RÉSUMÉ OF TESTIMONY TAKEN BY THE MAJOR GENERAL COMMANDANT, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, AND BRIG. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, DURING AN INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES RUMORED TO HAVE BEEN COMMITTED BY OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS IN THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

These irregularities were:

First. Illegal execution of Haitians.

Second. Imposition of forced labor upon citizens of Haiti in the vicinity of Hinche.

In explanation it should be stated that forced labor, or "corvée," is legal under the provisions of the code rural of the Republic of Haiti in connection with the maintenance of a road system, had been stopped by the Marine Corps on October 1, 1918. It has been alleged that prisoners have been executed by marines without trial and that the Haitians had been required to work on roads in the vicinity of Hinche between October 1, 1918, and March 15, 1919.

There is included herewith a "Report of proceedings of a board of inquiry convened at Port au Prince, Haiti, by order of the Major General Commandant, to inquire into certain irregularities alleged to have been committed by officers and enlisted men in the Republic of Haiti March 13, 1919."

The following marines and ex-marines were interrogated by the Major General Commandant and General Butler, and gave, in substance, the following testimony:

Ed C. Baker: Formerly a sergeant of marines and captain in the gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at Gonaives, Haiti, in the department of the north, and by Maj. Clarke B. Welles, United States Marine Corps, at that time as a colonel of gendarmerie d'Haiti. Mr. Baker stated that at no time did he hear Major Wells give an order to continue "corvée" work, but did not know of "corvée" was in existence contrary to general orders. Mr. Baker is now employed as superintendent of a cotton plantation at St. Michel, Haiti.

John Lang: Formerly an enlisted man in the Marine Corps and lieutenant in the gendarmerie d'Haiti, at present employed on a cotton plantation conducted by Ed C. Baker, at St. Michel, Haiti, stated that he was in Hinche prior to November 1, 1918, and that he left Hinche about November 25, 1918. That by the order of Ernest Lavoie, a former enlisted man in the Marine Corps, and formerly of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, he worked corvée until about November 1, 1918.

He heard Major Wells tell Lavoie to confiscate all newspapers that were news relative to the stopping of corvée so that the people in the district of Hinche would not know that corvée had been stopped. Lavoie told him the official newspaper Le Moniteur, containing the news of the stopping of corvée. This paper was addressed to the magistrates of Massade and Hinche. Major Wells tell Lavoie "we are out in the hills and can get away with this." Later Lavoie told him (Lang) the same thing in connection with the corvée work. All this was prior to November 5, 1918, and after the order of corvée had been received by the officers at Hinche. Stated that he did not hear anyone accuse Lavoie of shooting prisoners; that he considered Lavoie very erratic. He further stated that every time Major Wells came to Hinche he drank rum with Lavoie, and about once a month would drink heavily, doing the same. Stated that on one occasion he (Lang) wrote a type-report, at Lavoie's dictation, to Major Wells, reporting a fight; that he put the envelope "personal," and sent it by special messenger. Stated that at that time he reported by radio all quiet. On one occasion Captain Stallard of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, reported a fight by radio and was censured by Major Wells and detached to another district.

Osman: Formerly an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, and lieutenant in the gendarmerie d'Haiti, at present employed on Mr. Baker's cotton plantation in substance that he was on duty at the headquarters of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, at Port au Prince, Haiti; that an enlisted man of the Marine Corps and a lieutenant of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, Dorcas L. Williams, sergeant of the Marine Corps confined at Quantico, Va., told him (Osman) that Lavoie and he (Williams) had crucified people in Hinche, had nailed them to the cross. That they had killed 14 one afternoon. Osman further stated that he told him that he (Lavoie) started Cacos in Hinche by his working of the Emile Bolte: Formerly an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, and lieutenant in the gendarmerie d'Haiti, and now employed by Baker at St. Michel, Haiti, stated that he was stationed at Fort Libert, Haiti, from some time prior to November 1, 1918, until December 31, 1918; that he heard no one give an order to stop corvée work after the order stopping it had come out. Knew nothing of shooting of prisoners or corvée, but that he forwarded messages during that time from Hinche, signed "Lavoie," and reporting everything quiet.

Edward J. Sieger: Formerly an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, and a lieutenant in the gendarmerie d'Haiti, stated, in substance, that he arrived at Hinche about November 10, 1918, and left in two or three days for Thomassique. He was being worked at that time, and continued until Lieutenant Colonel Sieger inspected some time about the 1st of February, 1919. Corvée was being worked under Lieutenant Williams. Stated that on November 1, 1918, he heard Colonel A. S. Williams, United States Marine Corps, at that time chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti, tell Lavoie "to go out to Hinche and clean it up." That Lieutenant Colonel Williams did not want any provost court prisoners. Lavoie (Lavoie) found any of them that were Cacos, and actually had arms in their possession, to do away with them; that they (the Cacos) had raised a rebellion. Lavoie was away, and that it was time to quiet them down, and to that effect. He further stated that he was in Hinche some time in January, 1919, and heard shots one afternoon; that he asked Pharmacist's Assistant, United States Navy, what they were, and was told it was some men "bumping off," (shooting) prisoners out toward the cemetery on the side of the road near Hinche; that there were six or seven scattered shots. He stated that while he was stationed at Thomassique, near Hinche, that Major Wells told him to report "everything quiet" and not to make any of the Caco troubles.

Pere Bellot, the Roman Catholic priest at Hinche, stated, in substance, while he had never seen any prisoners shot by marines or gendarmes, he had been told that they were being shot and had heard rifle shots. That Lavole had come to him and had told him that he had boiled and eaten a Haitian named Ciceron Lacroix, and had his skeleton hanging up in (Lavole's) house. Father Beloit further stated that he had gone with him and had seen a skeleton, supposed to be Lacroix. That there had been no rest among the Haitians until Charlemagne Peralte had escaped from Cape Haitien some time in August, 1918; that he (Peralte) had sworn an oath to drive all the whites from the island because the whites had oppressed him by making him sweep the streets of Cape Haitien while a prisoner. Peralte was the leader in the revolt; had gathered the Haitians together, and the discontent among the natives which caused them to join Peralte, and the illegal enforcement of the corvée law after the 1st of October, 1918, prior to that time they had been quiet. He (Father Beloit) was incensed that the articles had appeared in American newspapers attacking the administration of the marines in Haiti, and that he wished to write an article in defense of the marines; that he had lived in Hinche 13 years, and was an exception of the brutalities alleged to have been committed or practiced by Lavole and his subordinates, he had nothing but words of praise for the conduct of affairs under the Americans. He stated that General Catlin had visited him in March, 1919, and that he had told him of these stories of atrocities as he told us.

Patrick F. Kelly: At present an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, stationed as captain in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at Grande Riviere, stated: was in Hinche during the first attack on that place made by the Cacos on November 16, 1918; that he was relieved by Lavole about the 1st of November, 1918, and knew nothing about the shooting of prisoners nor working of corvée.

Pliny Daggett: Formerly an enlisted man in the Marine Corps and a sergeant in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, and now employed on a sugar plantation at Barahona, San Domingo, stated, in substance, that he left Hinche some time in February, 1919; had been stationed there but a few months. He stated some time in January, 1919, six or seven Caco prisoners were taken to a cemetery and shot by Lieutenant Andre, a Haitian officer in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti. States that he knows one Caco was shot by order of Lavole some other time in January, 1919; that all of these men were shot without his knowledge as far as he knew. He saw Freeman Lang some time in November, 1918, at that time Lang was a lieutenant in the gendarmerie, shoot with a machine gun a Haitian prisoner running across the Champ de Mars in Hinche near the tent. Saw a human skeleton hanging over a clothesline back of a house occupied by a medical lieutenant in the gendarmerie named Neuland. Never saw anyone give any orders to shoot prisoners, but did hear Major Wells tell him to report everything quiet some time in November, 1918. He saw corvée working in the Hinche district in January, 1919. Stated that he saw William Williams, an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, and at that time a lieutenant in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, and now a sergeant of marines confined at Cape Haitien, told him that a man had been wounded in his house in Maitland during a raid by Cacos (this in reference to the alleged murder of a Haitian named Williams). He thinks that no member of the gendarmerie in the district of Hinche would have dared to act on his own responsibility in the matter of shooting prisoners in Hinche. Heard Lavole say that they did not want any prisoners at the department headquarters in Cape Haitien.

Frank Verdler: Now an enlisted man in the Marine Corps and a captain in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, states that he went through Hinche, stopping some days during the period October 1, 1918, to March 1, 1919; that Major Wells told him to report "everything quiet." Stated that he knew nothing of the shooting of prisoners or working corvée. Verdler further stated that a gunner named "Nick" Carter was stationed at Hinche in November, 1918, with a machine gun. Private Wilhelm, of the Marine Corps, and a Hospital Stewardman of the Navy named Neuland were both stationed at Hinche at that time, and they, together with Carter, if found, should, if possible, have their names taken.

Lieut. Col. Richard S. Hooker, United States Marine Corps, assistant chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, states that he was ordered by General the conditions at Hinche in February, 1919; that he did so; that he worked on the road to Malssalde, district of Hinche; that he heard of the shooting of prisoners and the fighting taking place between the Marines and the Cacos, notwithstanding the reports from Major Wells that all was quiet; that he wrote a note on a Corona typewriter to General Wells setting forth the result of his investigation; that he kept no copy of his report, but that no record of it could be found in the files of the brigade headquarters at Port au Prince, Haiti. Colonel Hooker further states that General Wells, on leaving Haiti, said to him (Hooker) in substance as follows: "I wonder why I never did anything about the Hinche matter." He stated that "he did," whereupon General Catlin further stated in substance that he did not do anything because it was during the period of the conference at the Versailles treaty, and that he did not wish to embarrass our Government by having stories of cruelty appear about our own soldiers when we were in a position on the side of "humanity," or words to that effect. He stated that he had questioned other marines, but could find out nothing and they all displayed no knowledge of "corvée," or shooting. He stated that if we could find out, there were no rumors of any illegal shooting prior to October, 1918, nor subsequent to March, 1919, except those which are a matter of record in the Judge Advocate General's report of the Navy, in view of the trial of the offenders by general court-martial.

He stated that the instance which occurred at Croix de Boquet, near Port au Prince, involving a marine named Brokaw, he (Brokaw) was adjudged insane by a medical survey and sent back to the United States. He appended hereto eight statements of gendarmes who served in the period October 1, 1918, to March, 1919, relative to the treatment of the prisoners. These statements involve Freeman Lang.

He also appended hereto four statements from gendarmes relative to the treatment of Mr. Garnier Jean by Sergt. Dorcas L. Williams, United States Marine Corps.

He also appended an extract from a letter written by Capt. George D. Williams, United States Marine Corps, to Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker, United States Marine Corps, relative to orders issued by Major Wells to him (Williams) to shoot the Cacos.

GENERAL: A number of statements have appeared to the effect that s in Haiti have been guilty of cruelty and barbarity in their dealings aitians and that 3,000 Haitians have been killed and some of them a way that is dishonorable to the American occupation. I have t of the true conditions in Haiti and of the true work of the marines, y incident of any actions by them against the bandits and attacks ilts; of the capture and execution of Haitians and for what purpose.

to have a statement which I can make public, giving the true facts d when you were in command of the marines in Haiti from December September 28, 1919. I wish you to give specific instances and to give as they were. If any marine was guilty of conduct unbecoming the sh you to state it and the specific method used, and I wish you to ic details of the number of Haitians killed while you were in com-

Subject: Conditions in Haiti from December 1, 1918, to July 15, 1919.

Reference: (a) Letter from the Secretary of the Navy dated September 1, 1920.

1. In compliance with reference (a), I respectfully submit the following report in regard to conditions in Haiti during the period I was in command of the First Brigade of marines stationed there, from December 1, 1918, to July 15, 1919.

"I relieved Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps, in command of the First Brigade of marines on December 1, 1918. At that time the country was quiet, except in the mountainous district around Hinche, where a band of bandits were operating under the leadership of Charlemagne, a former Caco leader. Peralte had escaped from the prison at Cap-Haïtien in September. This band had attacked the gendarme post at Hinche and when I took command gendarmes were in the field trying to run the band down. At this time the marines were stationed at but three places: two companies at Port au Prince, three companies at Cape Haïtien, and one at Ouanaminthe. The bandits increased in numbers and new bands were formed. A number of attacks were made on small gendarme posts, several being killed, a number captured, and a number of rifles and ammunition captured.

"The gendarmes continued operations against the bandits until the middle of March, 1919, when the chief of gendarmes reported to me that the limited number of gendarmes he could keep in the field he was unable to make any headway against the increasing number of bandits. I then moved the marines into the field with Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker in command.

"Before commencing operations an attempt was made to induce as many of the bandits to come in and give themselves up; notice was given to the camps by means of market women, by the priests, and spread among the natives; during the next 10 days several hundred came in and were given certificates of protection.

"Orders were issued to all officers and marines to attempt to gain the confidence of the natives, to treat them kindly, and to protect as far as possible peaceful inhabitants, and to the best of my knowledge these orders were carried out.

"The bandits operated only in the mountains, where there are many trails and the trails are very difficult and at times almost impassable. The band remained in its own district, where all the trails and hiding places were known to them, and it was found that the only way that they could be driven out was by means of small patrols from the different towns converging on the reported camp and jumping it at daylight; this required night marches in many cases patrols were required to remain out a week at a time, hungry, footsore, and thoroughly exhausted.

"The duty performed by these marines was the hardest, most arduous that I have ever known troops to be called upon to perform, and it was invariably performed with the pluck, good nature, and thoroughness that have always shown.

"It is impossible for me to state the exact number of natives killed by marines, as all data and daily reports are in the office of the brigade commander at Port au Prince, but approximately 300 were reported killed from December 1, 1918, to July 15, 1919, when I left Haiti. These were all killed in action with armed bands, except in the following cases:

"(1) A native was arrested at Croix de Bouquet by gendarmes, taken out and executed the same night by orders of Lieutenant Brokaw, a gendarme. Two marines who were on duty as telephone guards were members of the firing squad; these men were tried by court-martial. Lieutenant Brokaw was placed under arrest, but was not tried, as he pronounced him insane after having him under observation for several days.

"(2) Lieutenant Ryan was reported to have killed two natives near Riviere. He was undergoing trial by general court-martial when I left but I have been informed that he was acquitted.

"When I took command I was informed by Colonel Russell that corvée had been abolished the previous October. In January, 1919, rumors came to me that corvée labor was still being employed in the Hinche district.

lieutenant Colonel Hooker to go to Hinche and investigate. He reported he found corvée labor at Malssade and Hinche, the road gangs under gendarme guards. The chief of gendarmes and Maj. Clark who was northern district commander, both denied this. I then proposed to get a personal knowledge of conditions, being accompanied by two gendarmes.

At Malssade I found a road gang of about 45 men working under guard. I met each member of them, and all but one stated that they were working of their will but were being paid one gourd per day; they were not taken by force, but had been directed to report for work by either the chief of section. I found similar methods had been used at

I reviewed the local priests, native officials, and other natives in the towns; I found the priests were very bitter against the gendarmes; and that many natives had been driven to join the bandits through fear of the gendarmes. They also stated that a number of prisoners had been shot at Hinche. Captain Lavoie, of the gendarmes, admitted that bandit prisoners who had made several attempts to escape had been and shot by gendarmes.

I am satisfied that the gendarmes in that district had lost the confidence of the natives, and I directed that the officers and gendarmes be transferred to another place and replaced by others from a quiet section.

In discussing the case for several hours with the chief of the gendarmes against a court-martial in the case of Captain Lavoie, but directed the gendarmes to take steps to get rid of both Captain Lavoie and Lt. Williams, who was on duty at Malssade, as they were unfitted to continue as gendarme officers.

A number of cases were reported where individual marines were accused of crimes; each case reported was investigated; and, if found guilty, the marines were punished by court-martial.

I found that the peaceful population throughout the country placed great confidence in the marines and felt that they would always get square treatment. This was shown by the requests from different towns to have marines stationed there. Only political opponents of the Government and law-abiding persons objected to their presence."

Subject: Treatment of Haitians by marines, August 15, 1915, to November 10, 1916.

Reference: (a) Letter of the Secretary of the Navy, September 18, 1916.

Replying to reference (a) I have the honor to state that there is no fact or fancy for the charge of cruelty to the Haitians by marines. I was in command between the dates mentioned above, i. e., August 15 to November 10, 1916, or to be more specific, January 10, 1917, when I was removed from the command formally, although I had been away from Haiti on November 10, 1916.

The first incident of armed hostility occurred about the first part of the month at Gonaïves, where a force of rebels cut the water mains supply to the town and menaced the city. I went in person to the place, saw the representative of the commanding general, Rameau, who styled himself the "President of war" of President Bobo, and placed the situation carefully before him. I effected this was that Sudre Dartiguenave had been properly elected President of Haiti and we, the Americans, would support him in maintaining the island in establishing a firm government. As fear had been expressed that the Americans would seize land and hold it, I explained that not an inch of Haitian soil would be taken by American troops except under exigencies of war, and under these circumstances proper remuneration would be made. At the time it was so occupied. I warned them that I was on my way to the chiefs of the revolution near Cape Haïtien, but would return within a few days and if the water mains were interfered with again I would send a column of aggressors and punish them severely. The talk impressed them and I left Cape Haïtien.

I found that we held Cape Haïtien itself, but the rebels held all the territories outside in the north of Haiti. Communicating with the chiefs I arranged a meeting at a point 8 miles from Cape Haïtien. The rebels proposed that only three persons should come out, one an interpreter. My officers proposed this, but I replied that I would meet them, bringing two persons with me. I went out, taking Colonel Cole and an interpreter, and met the President Bobo, Antoine Morancy, and Petion Jean Baptiste and 35 other generals. They explained our presence in Haiti, our plans and purposes, and stated that I was authorized by the President of Haiti to conclude an honorable peace with them. I explained most earnestly that our efforts were for the benefit of the people and that peace and prosperity must return to the island. They agreed and observed their agreements. My statements were received with shouts of "We want Bobo." Bobo had been forced into the presidency by the Cacos after the murder of the President and the violation of the French constitution.

I explained that Doctor Bobo had left the island at his own request, as far as we were concerned, could return when he chose. They claimed that Bobo was held a prisoner. I explained that he had left Port au Prince, Jamaica and subsequently went to Cuba and was at that time perfectly free in Santiago de Cuba.

I asked them to think over the proposition and let me know in the meantime what they proposed doing. In the meantime I told them I would build a railroad to Grande Rivière, which had not been operated for many years. The road was the property of the National City Bank of New York. The rebels protested that we held Cape Haïtien but they held the surrounding territory and would not permit the road to be operated. I explained that I would run at 8 o'clock the next morning and I would be glad to take all of them on the trip. In the morning taking two squads (16 men each), officers, a representative of the railroad, two flat cars ahead with material, sandbags, etc., the locomotive and a combination baggage and passenger coach, the train left. One machine gun was on the second flat car, followed by sandbags and another in the baggage section of the combination coach.

The rebels were very menacing but did not fire. Our men were cool and laughing. Large numbers of mounted rebels gathered following the train, which was obliged to proceed very slowly by a parallel road. When the cross road to Quatier Morin, Petion Jean Baptiste appeared and demanded that we return immediately. I declined and repeated my invitation to accompany us. A little later they derailed the first two cars, having cut the two rails. The track was so overgrown with grass that it was impossible ne only damage done was to spread all the marine officers over the I alone remaining on the first car. The rebels were very menacing about 50 yards from us with about 200 men. I took one squad to natives, the machine guns moving around over different groups, cov- n. The other squad replaced the rails and put the cars back on the the meantime the rebels disappeared. I returned to Cape Haitien, e out of water; renewed our supply, took two more squads of men and gain at 2 p. m. for Grande Riviere. On the way I received a message on Jean Baptiste had sent word to the general at Grande Riviere to is. We reached Grande Riviere at 10 o'clock at night, the mountains sounding with the notes of the conch shells signals assembling the there was no overt act on the part of the rebels. In the morning I the general and explained that the train would run twice a week to coffee and to get food supply for Cape Haitien, the people there being t of food. I simply and firmly assumed that there would be no oppo-ing to Cape Haitien I received a message that the rebels wished to come again. After much difficulty they consented to come into Cape They then agreed to the terms of the peace which had been approved resident of Haiti and the commander in chief of the cruiser squadron.

Lieutenant Colonel, Marine Corps, Chief of Staff.

Arrangements were made for the surrendering of arms, ammunition, and the payments to the chiefs of the money due to them and to the indemnity for their arms, etc.

Taking Major Butler, now Brigadier General Butler, I returned to Port au Prince.

Before leaving Cape Haitien, I received the following telegram from President of Haiti:

PORT AU PRINCE
October 1, 1916

Colonel WALLER: Confirme Sans fils hier Soir approuvant comme vous l'arrangement Sultant notre conversation.

DARTIGUENAVE
President of Haiti

I also left orders that patrols be sent out daily, covering a radius of ten miles around Cape Haitien to continue the good effect of the opening of the road and the execution of the terms of the treaty.

I have gone into this detail to show the situation at this time and to throw light upon subsequent happenings.

I placed a garrison at Fort Liberte, marched to, and relieved the garrison at Ouanaminthe, which had continued for more than a year, relieved the garrison by a company of marines, and after clothing and feeding them brought them to Fort Liberte for transportation by Government train to their homes. Arriving at Gonaives, I found the rebels still aggressive. Major Butler, telling him to open the short railroad there, and then came to Port au Prince. I gave him three days to clear up the situation at Gonaives. The rebels attacked, but were driven off with the loss of some and some wounded, who escaped.

The Secretary of War Rameau surrendered, and was paroled by the Government for a period of one year.

Not receiving reports from Cape Haitien as I had directed, I sent a patrol to find out the cause. There appeared to be some question of jurisdiction, which was quickly disposed of by the commander of the cruiser squadron. On September 25, 1916, I received a radio to the effect that my instructions would be carried out. On September 26, a radio announced that two of my patrols in different directions had been ambushed and 10 men wounded. I proceeded immediately to Cape Haitien, summoned the Caco generals and was informed that they had had no hand in the attempt. The estimated casualties of the Haitians were 40, but only four bodies were found. The peace agreement was formally signed September 29.

A little later word came into Gonaives that a convent of the Sacred Heart in a town to the north and east had been violated by a band of rebels. The self-styled Secretary of War Rameau, who had surrendered and been paroled by me.

I sent Major Underwood and a mounted column to the place. The rebels in force attacked but were driven off. We lost a first sergeant killed in the first fire, and one man slightly wounded. The Haitian casualties were 10 killed; no wounded were found.

I captured the Secretary of War Rameau in Port au Prince. Although the Haitian Government wished him executed I refused. He was tried and sentenced to 20 years imprisonment at hard labor. He was recaptured and 5 years added to his term. I have heard recently that he is one of the trustees in the prison.

I brought Major Butler to Port au Prince for the purpose of nature. I had in mind locating the rebels in the mountains of the north. I sent with a mounted column on a reconnoissance through the mountains of the north to locate, if possible, the Cacos or bad men of the rebels. The new force was very aggressive. The reconnoissance covered a distance of about 100 miles and was most successful. At one point, just at nightfall, they were attacked by a large force of Cacos and would probably have suffered greatly from an accident of ground. The Cacos attacked just as the column had crossed a stream and was working up a worn, deep trail. The fight lasted through the night, the small column surrounded by a large number of Cacos. The trail gave cover and in the dark the Cacos on the sides undoubtedly fought each other. At about the break of day the column was divided into four parts and rushed the enemy, defeating them completely. The Cacos lost 100 being the new leader, and 20 dead. We had two men slightly and five horses killed. The deep trail was the salvation of the column. Dismissance completed, I made my plans to crush the rebellion.

to Cape Haitien and established a water base 10 miles from there;

Le Trou and established headquarters there. A base was established at Grande Riviere and three more in the mountains, all communicating with me at Le Trou. This plan was to attack from different points during of November 6, while the garrisons at Ouanaminthe and Fort de la Plaine made demonstrations from their posts. On the 5th of November I went to Le Trou with a small detachment, being met by Major Butler and a small detachment. He had been sniped at on the way, as we had no casualties. I imagine the rebels were under the impression that 100 men was the entire strength at Le Trou.

The evening three companies destined for work in the mountains

We had three full companies and my headquarters detachment composed of sailors from the Connecticut then at Cape Haitien, with four companies.

At the break of day the rebels attacked on all sides. The attack was repulsed, the enemy driven off, and chased. We had two men wounded. A number went through the roof over my head, so they evidently knew where I was. The Cacos lost 20 dead. The whole engagement did not last more than 15 minutes. The plan of action was delayed on account of the chase of the rebels. In the afternoon Major Butler moved off to take his position in the mountains and was again attacked. This time we had no casualties, and the Cacos lost 100 men and 10 men. The general would have been killed by his own men as they claimed he had betrayed them at Le Trou, telling them there were a few men there and each American soldier had money and a gold chain. Our plans worked out admirably, and in three weeks the rebellion was over, the rebels surrendered, the officers paroled, and given positions, the men employed at work on the roads and railroad.

Not the records at hand but the total number of Haitians dead seen reported to me were about 160. Our casualties in all the island were 1 officer (my aid), and 35 men wounded. All the forts defending Santo Domingo were destroyed. The last, Fort Riviere, a massive brick fort was captured in an assault under Major Butler. The Haitians gave or received quarter. My report shows, as I remember, 60 killed, 100 prisoners that day. The fort was blown up, as was the case of other forts. This was done because they were the gathering places of rebels.

Several months of hard work in reconstruction and in the organization of the gendarmerie were marred twice. Once by the revolution under Pierre Paul au Prince.

I was rather well informed of the revolutionary plans, I persistently refused to make arrests when requested by the President to do so. I desired to know more fully just how far the German colony were concerned in it. Strong written evidence that they were financing the plan to upset the government and drive the Americans out. They held all the most valuable communications, ice plant, and one railroad. (See my letter to the Secretary of War, June 9, 1916; also concluding paragraph of my letter to operation 1 Benson) August 16, 1916.) The revolution started at the appointed time with an attack on the headquarters of the gendarmerie. There were 2 companies and 40 gendarmes present, the latter unarmed except with clubs; their arms had not yet arrived. Although the attacking force was well armed and outnumbered the gendarmes and the two marines, the latter with their pistols and one rifle and the gendarmes with clubs drove off the rebels. Two gendarmes and one marine wounded and five Haitians killed. A surprise attack was made on the barracks occupied by marines, but no success. In spite of the fact that the house occupied by Pierre Paul was besieged, he escaped with the assistance and through the house of a German. The revolution was over in a short while, the main body going toward the Bouquets, where they remained for an hour or two, doing much and killing a civil official. Codio, the general commanding the revolutionary forces, was captured later and imprisoned. Just before his trial many other prisoners escaped through the carelessness of one of our soldiers. They proceeded to shoot up Port au Prince and did wound one corporal, who was unarmed at the time. They were chased out of the city and again went, via Croix de Bouquets, killing two and wounding two gendarmes. Lieutenant Dixon was in charge of the gendarmes. The gendarmierie officer deserted him, leaving him to fight alone. He killed one of the Cacos, but was forced to get away to avoid being surrounded.

These men leaving Croix de Bouquets made their way toward San Juan and feeling well assured that they would attempt to get over at that point I sent a mounted column to get them if possible. When they arrived at the point named, they found that the natives had practised treachery on them, at this time 11 men. On the march back the next day prisoners were sent to wash and get water at a stream. They marched across the stream and were shot by the guards. Among them were the most desperate bandits in Haiti, one being the revolutionary Codio, who evidently planned the whole scheme of escape; another, a tallus, who had betrayed the former president and had been arrested for the horrible murder of a man near Fort Liberte. There were also others who had murdered the captain of a sloop, seizing the vessel. They were political prisoners, probably stampeded by the leaders. The people of the countryside were overjoyed when they learned the fate of these men.

I never knew of any execution of any kind. I have not only seen no mutilation or desecration of bodies by our men, but there is nothing on earth to make me believe that the splendid men I have seen are known so well for 40 years could be made to mutilate or punish the living or dead.

I give you herewith copies of letters sent me by the Haitian President, an address made to me when I brought the Caco generals to bay before him.

If you knew Haiti you would understand the enormous amount of propaganda going on all the time. In this case, this recent agitation, I will find German influence back of it all, but aided by individuals for selfish motives. In giving you my accounts of casualties, I am obliged to take the reports of my subordinates where I was not present. I have no reason to believe that their reports were not correct except in respect: There is in the exhilaration and heat of battle a slight exaggeration of the damage done to the enemy. The Haitians, on account of voodoo influences, would hide their wounded, although they were afterwards care for them. We had much difficulty in getting them out; but once in, there was much more difficulty in getting them out.

I should mention that Pierre Paul upon receiving messages rendered to me, was pardoned by me, and through my efforts by the Government.

PERSONAL CABINET CABINET PARTICULIER OF THE PRESIDENT OF Port au Prince, 1892

The President of the Republic of Haiti takes pleasure in covering to Colonel Walker the words of felicitation and of thanks on this occasion to offer him at the reception yesterday afternoon of the Cacos from the north.

He embraces this opportunity to renew with his best wishes and assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

Inclosure:

COLONEL: At the moment of receiving the delegation from the north to personally confirm the engagement that has been made by arms, to establish peace, and to subject themselves to the Government, I fulfill an agreeable duty in presenting you with the warmest and most sincere thanks on the part of the Government for the assistance that you have displayed in bringing to a successful issue the restoration of national peace to this land.

You have stated, Colonel, that the assistance which was rendered you, whether by specific action or by the request for assistance (promise), had proved of the greatest service to you.

I now thank them in your presence, but I also intend to thank them in your presence how highly I value and how much all the Government appreciate with me the all-important mission which you have just happily concluded. I offer you, Colonel, the expression of the thanks on the part of the country and its Government.

PRIVATE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF HAITI,

COLONEL: I reply to your note which has been received and which is the object of my most serious attention.

As you have given me relative to the military and civil nominations in the north, northeast, west, and the Artibonite and highly appreciated and in your serious consideration.

I beg to inform you that the Generals Alfred August and Preval, appointed commandants of the departments of Cape Haitien and of Fort Liberte, who are not here, to receive your instructions before installing themselves. I have already sent commissions signed in the civil order.

Knowing the pleasure of your good visit announced for to-morrow, I am happy to renew to you, my dear Colonel, my assurance of full confidence in the management of the work confided to your greatness of soul (mind) and the object of high consideration.

STON W. WALLER, City.

COLONEL: I hasten to acknowledge receipt of your letter, bearing in mind that, by which you have been kind enough to acquaint me with the fact that the president of the corps of lawyers has given you relative information of the members of said corps who belong to the council of the Government had all the more reason not to remain indifferent to that fact, since it had met with a certain hostility on the part of several members of the corporation, than whom it (the Government) did not think it better to perform the task marked for the council of state.

I am therefore pleased to learn that these gentlemen are not moved by a disposition to the necessary reforms undertaken by the Government. Now that, on the contrary, they stand ready to give their help under all circumstances. I have made a note of the same.

As I have the satisfaction of realizing, my dear Colonel, the efficacy of your interventions in the difficulties that I encounter in the discharge of my delicate mission.

My thanks and gratitude can never be equal to that which my country will owe you.

I accept, my dear Colonel, the renewed assurances of my esteem and consideration.

STON W. T. WALLER, En Ville.

DEAR COLONEL: After the report that you have personally made to me of the information transmitted to me on your part through the Secretariat for Foreign Affairs, your military operations in the north have brought about a complete pacification of the regions desolated by the Cacos.

I wish to express to you anew my lively satisfaction and that of the Government for the very valuable service that you have rendered the Republic. I have a right to the recognition of all, and especially to that of the population of the north, whom you have delivered from a reign of brigandage under which they have lived for a long time.

I accept, my dear Colonel, the renewed assurances of my cordial

DARTIGUENAVE.

ADRESSE DU GENERAL WALLER AU PEUPLE D'HAÏTI.

QUARTIER-GENERAL DES FORCES EXPEDITIONNAIRES
DES ETATS UNIS OPERANT EN HAÏTI
Port au Prince (Haïti), 10 Novembre.

L'incertitude au sujet de mes plans et, en fin de compte, la soudaineté de partir, en congé pour les Etats Unis, m'obligent à quitter sans préavis mes amis.

Pendant mon tour de service en Haïti, j'ai fait beaucoup d'amis. La charmante hospitalité m'a beaucoup plu. D'autre part, j'ai été obligé, dans certaines circonstances, d'avoir recours à des mesures désagréables. Dans ces cas, j'ai été absolument impuissant, et je n'ai été guidé que par la conception de mon devoir envers mon pays et du bien-être qui devra résulter pour Haïti.

Quand je suis arrivé en Haïti, le pays était déchiré par la guerre civile, par le pillage et l'anarchie. Au jourd'hui, la paix et la protection sont assurées.

Toute la liberté d'action et de parole compatible avec un gouvernement sérieux, vous a été accordée avec l'acquiescement du gouvernement. L'emprisonnement sur simple dénonciation n'est plus à craindre.

Le Gouvernement haïtien promet et l'Occupation garantit des honnêtes et libres.

Toutes ces mesures sont très importantes à l'œuvre de la reconstruction d'Haïti; mais la plus importante de toutes a été l'établissement, l'entraînement d'un corps de gendarmerie compétente, tenue en dehors de toute influence politique.

Ce corps sera la véritable force dont vous dépendrez pour votre sécurité et pour l'exécution des lois.

Sans ce corps bien entraîné, les capitaux et les industries étrangères ne pourraient pas vous aider à développer votre beau pays si merveilleux.

Le Bon Dieu vous a donné ce beau pays, et il vous incombe de lui donner le talent qui vous a été confié, de l'administrer sagement de façon à en tirer sa valeur.

Que votre devise soit: Progres materiel, moral et intellectuel. Fondez sur une base solide la protection et l'avancement de la classe laborieuse, les agriculteurs de votre pays. Enseignez aux jeunes gens la dignité et le travail soit intellectuel soit manuel.

Aidez les épouses et les mères à conserver la santé de la maison afin que les enfants des générations futures, les futurs remparts de la patrie, puissent vous bénir parce que vous les aurez, par votre exemple, qui est le coup plus effectif que la parole, conduits hors des ténèbres dans la lumière, de vérité et d'une vie pure et honnête.

Bien que j'aie l'espoir de revenir bientôt, les exigences de mon devoir ne peuvent m'appeler ailleurs; c'est pourquoi je saisis cette occasion pour dire adieu, et vous faire à tous, individuellement et collectivement, mes plus sincères vœux pour le progrès de votre pays vers la prospérité et la stabilité gouvernementale.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have received your letter of November 23 and in reply to mine of the 22d, same month, relative to the final success of the campaign of the north.

On this subject you wish well to express to me your sentiments of appreciation for the performance of the officers and men placed under your orders.

It pleases me to see in this circumstance an evidence of your true heart, and in taking note that Maj. S. D. Butler is particularly signionditions in Haiti.

(a) Diary, January 30 to date.

x of the unsatisfactory political conditions now existing the following Haitian affairs is submitted:

number of years prior to the American occupation the conditions of y had grown worse and worse, President following President in rapid as the result of sudden death or revolution:

lected December, 1908; overthrown August, 1911.

ected August, 1911; blown up in palace January, 1912.

ected August, 1912; poisoned May, 1913.

lected May, 1913; overthrown January, 1914.

lected February, 1914; overthrown October, 1914. (Killed in prison 18)

Theodore, elected November, 1914; overthrown February, 1915.

Sam, elected May, 1915; killed July, 1915.

Dartiguenave, elected August, 1915.

Each President and his followers looted the public treasury and took such sums as possible at large discounts and at high rates of interest. concessions, giving liens on customs receipts, raising or increasing import and export duties, and generally exploiting the country for the benefit of his followers, who lived on graft, blackmail, forced contributions, loans, and soon as the money began to give out some one with more money, or with promises of future graft or payments, started a revolution. General revolutions were carried through by Caco mercenaries from the north.

3. Haiti has been living under what was practically a feudal system, perpetuated by assassination and numerous other forms of outrage. Certain families were the feudal masters, and when some member became particularly prominent he became a leader with a large personal following; he exercised authority or influence through lesser chiefs with smaller followings, who ruled the mass of the population through petty chiefs, who did not hesitate to kill, rape, burn, or torture those of their followers who disobeyed them to join them. If the disobedient one escaped the vengeance was then taken on his family; hence their power was practically unlimited, and upon promise of future payment their forces were employed to overthrow the then government. It should be said that they remained loyal to the one who employed them until their work was done and he in power. This accomplished, and money becoming scarce, they were at the disposal of the next revolutionary candidate.

4. Haiti naturally has every advantage from an economic point of view. Soil, ample rain, and free water for irrigation; high hills and valleys, from a tropical climate in the valleys to a temperate-zone climate on the hills, allowing wide diversity of crops; directly south of New York and Philadelphia, the principal markets in the United States, and consequently closer to those ports than any other of the West India Islands. During the French régime, Haiti was the richest colony in the world—good paved roads, out of the island, irrigating systems where needed, large, well-equipped estates; but after the expulsion of the French everything was allowed to fall into rack and ruin; roads and irrigation systems disappeared and the country gradually relapsed into a state of barbarism.

5. While on paper there were and are many schools, the schoolhouses, if they existed at all, were and are generally unfit for human occupancy. Teachers, if they can be so called, were and are generally political freebooters, appointing power and entirely unfit for their positions, which ordinarily did and do not pretend to fill at all; while the schools in the cities were generally bad, they were and are much better than those in the country. The result of these defects, outside of the cities there is practically no education at all, and the general illiteracy is probably 95 per cent of the total population. The only bright spots in the educational system were the church schools. If it had not been for them education in the interior would have entirely disappeared and the state of barbarism been complete.

6. Under the Haitian constitution every male Haitian was an embryo soldier. In order to have soldiers to combat the revolutionary forces, or to suppress a revolution to keep the then Government in power, male peasants were seized and to forced enlistment. The only way to escape this was to be in the ruling classes or to go into hiding; consequently most of the soldiers were in the hills, distant from the main traveled trails, and consequently never seen on the roads or in the town, the produce, such as it was, brought in by women. The result of the various conditions is that there are probably two women for every man in Haiti, and as the women do most of the business they are as a general rule of a higher mental caliber than the men and really better fitted to exercise the rights of suffrage than the male. At present there is practically universal male suffrage, and as 95 per cent can neither read nor write, and as fully 75 per cent are of a mental mentality and ignorant beyond description, even the best of electoral frauds. Votes are bought and all sorts of frauds attempted. Under the present régime—and the same conditions would have existed in the recent past—but for our continued intervention—the Government had control of the election machinery, and their candidates always won. A complete change of the requirements for the right of suffrage is necessary, but to determine what changes are desirable considerable study and investigation would be required.

certainly some provisions whereby some illiterates may vote would be as many such are fairly intelligent and successful landowners, artisans, etc. The Haitian laborer (peasant) is a hard worker and easily directed and watched is reasonably efficient; with instructions he is capable of material improvement. There is a large demand for laborers in Santo Domingo and in Cuba, as being the best of the colored nationalities. This class is easily led, for good or evil, and our presence has been of untold benefit to its members, and that and we are here. They lack stability and reasoning power, so are susceptible to "propaganda" of all sorts. The wrong attitude of the subdistrict commander may change very quickly the attitude of his section, and designing politicians through false stories can create a feeling of unrest, which if played upon and allowed to grow will produce serious results. These results might be short lived, but on the other hand might spread to a dangerous degree.

On the days of the French there were beautiful country estates with houses, but these have all disappeared, either through deliberate destruction or neglect. As a result of this and of the various other conditions the wealth of the country has gravitated to Port au Prince, though in other towns, particularly on the seacoast, there are some evidences with attendant comforts. Port au Prince par excellence was the place where the graft was doled out, and if the politician left that place it was to his appointment on the outside, where the graft was quicker and less than others required. Money so gained was generally put in houses in Port au Prince, though where the spoils were large and dangerous frequently went abroad to live or to acquire foreign citizenship. The case where adequate salaries paid, whether in Port au Prince or in the rest of the country the general understanding being that outside pickings were to be made upon, nor were salaries paid regularly, or in full. Months would pass without payments, the underling having to go to money lenders to get funds lent at from 20 to 50 per cent, and it is said the money lenders had to have the "men higher up" in the Government employ. The judges and officers of the department of justice were in the same fix. Their salaries have never been anything like adequate for their living expenses, and they have had to have places for friends the numbers were always excessive, and depended upon spoils or upon bribes for their support. Some of the best judges are men of high attainment, but generally, and all in all, a poor lot, and in the rural districts absolutely unversed in the law in many cases unable to read; many probably have no copies of the codes supposed to enforce. Since we have taken over the payments for the salaries for discounting the salaries and for their division has ceased, as it was paid promptly, but the numbers borne on the rolls are far too large and salaries too small. Most of these people are, I think, glad we are here, the real political leader resents our presence, and hates us as the one which had taken away his graft, and it is from this class that practically all the members of the Government and of the National Assembly (and Chamber of Deputies) are drawn, with the result that we can not expect loyal cooperation and aid from them. In place of having to spend or invest they have only salaries, and consequently they desire nothing that will remedy affairs, but on the contrary are trying and endeavoring to try to do everything in their power to bring back the old regime.

During our stay here we have administered honestly the affairs we have been entrusted with. The money allotted has been used for the benefit of the Haitian people, not through the Haitian politician, and consequently he has had no part in it and detests us and hates our interference and handling of affairs. While we have handled the funds and carried on the work for the benefit of the public, so far as any real government of Haiti is concerned, we have been able to advise, and generally our advice was not only wanted but followed; in place of cooperation obstacles were thrown in our way. Occasionally we have managed to get rid of a dishonest public official, but where practicable every official believes that he is appointed to public office to enable him to get on without working, the average of real honesty has been raised but little, few appointments were generally little better than his predecessor. I am sure, however, that there are some exceptions, but they only serve to the contrast. There is no doubt but what under the stimulus of regular pay many of the lower officials have improved, and if we white Americans had direct control and supervision over them their improvement would be sure, even if slow; many would have to be eliminated before conditions could even be good.

10. Every department of the Haitian Government needs a complete reorganization, and from the foundation. By putting in a President and giving him power, we started from the top to rehabilitate the Government, and it worked with had been born, bred, and lived under the old conditions no particular good has resulted, nor, so far as I can see, can any more be carried out so long as the Government remains in the hands of those who have spent their lives at the expense of the State. The only way that a better government can be obtained will be through starting at the bottom and building up under American supervision a reasonably efficient Government, using the younger generation or those who have not mixed in public affairs. In my opinion, the control must be absolute, and should properly be in the hands of people of expert knowledge and unquestioned integrity—the latter is the more important qualification—and as the conditions were improved they will pass gradually into Haitian hands, still keeping such supervision as is necessary.

11. These conditions apply to every department of the Government. The various ramifications. With few exceptions the affairs of the communes are administered in a still worse manner, practically all going into the pockets of a favored few. Internal taxes are not standardized, or if they are, are collected on the basis of charging a taxpayer can stand, by far the largest amount coming from the masses.

Land laws are bad, or badly administered. No one dares buy or sell land, or, if they do so, at an exorbitant rate of interest, for no one can collect through the courts, least of all a foreigner. Where security is lacking, the interest charges must be high, and as without money there is no development it results that absolutely nothing is done to really develop the agricultural interests of the country along modern lines. One will find in rural Haiti the same sort of mill (man or ox power) as was in use in Egypt. Many land titles are doubtful. Unwise restrictions on the eviction of undesirable tenants, and land for public utilities can only be obtained through the consent of the various owners.

12. The gendarmerie is far more efficient than could have been expected after less than 18 months of existence, but its condition is far from meeting the standards its officers desire to reach; its standard is being raised, and within a reasonable time it should be a very efficient organization. It is too few in numbers to properly cover the country, and this is aggravated by the lack of proper routes of communication.

Haiti has about 12,000 square miles of territory, or 1 gendarme to every square mile, or 1 gendarme to about every 800 inhabitants. It should be increased to at least 4,000, or one to every 300 inhabitants. The repair of roads is in the hands of American officers of the gendarmerie, while the funds have been limited the improvements have been made. The American officer has made much for the improvement in the condition of the people, and has made the American officer a person of real influence for good in the country. The contrast between the former Haitian soldier and the present American officer is the best object lesson as to what can actually be done with the Haitian people. The lower and middle classes when under the direct supervision of Americans are improved. This influence is growing day by day, but it would be unwise to put too much of a strain on them as yet. If the United States takes over this country as it did in Cuba and as it has recently done in Santo Domingo, there will be plenty of white troops in Haiti to back up the white officers, and to steady the gendarmes. If such a move be tried without adequate backing, the strain might be too much; one detachment might go to the front, its officers, and the disorganization might spread like wildfire. If it would happen, but the danger is there, and provision should be made in hand to meet it.

No matter how much veneer and polish a Haitian may have, beneath the surface under the skin and under strain reverts to type. This was seen in July, 1915, and I have seen European Haitians (part Haitian) standing, European education, and long years of residence in Europe, in a few minutes to the mental state of a savage in the heart of Africa. The people will not make, as a general rule, any reports to the police of crimes that have been committed, for fear that their telling will bring down vengeance wreaked against them, either physically, by poison or Voodooism is a real danger, and while some of it has been superficially scratched, and if what I have been told is less than 90 per cent of the Haitians can be classed as believers in the Catholicism will attend voodoo rites, and in the country most of the go to voodoo doctors (so called, for they are the rankest kinds of quacks). We are gradually forming small dispensaries in the country to give medical attention to pressing cases, utilizing the medical personnel of the army for this purpose.

There is a quite general feeling among the educated Haitians that we have lived up to the convention; that we have assumed a fiscal control, but have done nothing to get affairs straightened out, debts paid, public order established, proper administration inaugurated, and that we have done it too slowly. Some say if 10 years was not a sufficient length of time for the Americans to be in force we should have known it at the start, and having known it should have refused to compromise on anything less than the time needed; that we accepted the 10-year clause and should have lived out that time now we have been in full control for nearly a year and a half, no loan made, no affairs straightened out, and Haiti piling up debts on the interest charges due and unpaid. It is said there are many Haitian families who ostensibly are fairly well to do, but who now are in want on account of nonpayment of interest on internal debts. This class that does not mix much in politics and the members of which probably be in favor of the American occupation if the debts were paid. Merchants are generally in favor of the occupation, except those who are not reduced rates at the customhouses, but they are complaining that the situation is absolutely stagnant and that the conditions are due to lack of action and incidentally to nothing having been done to get affairs really settled out.

Most of the old political families are in favor of the occupation and of American control. This attitude may be due to a number of causes—loss of property in revolution, appreciation of the fact that stability of the government and protection of property will be for their own good, and some of the belief that some time in the future their having espoused the American side will be to their political advantage. This class generally likes to live with both sides.

The vast majority of Haitian peasants is pure black, though with some admixture, due to mixture with other Haitians with some white blood, and several characteristics have been given. The ruling classes are generally of light blood, though numerous apparently pure-blooded negroes occupy high positions of one kind or another and are leaders in public or political negroes of mixed type, who constitute the majority of educated people. Politicians, have the general characteristics of such people the world over—in, loving praise, excitable, changeable, beyond belief illogical, and unsteady. Many of them are highly educated and polished, but their sincerity must always be doubted. They will assure you in the most solemn manner of one thing and an hour later may deny the former statements or take a completely different attitude. All love to talk to the galleries, to attitudinize as "patriots," but withal absolutely selfish and self-seeking. There are a few exceptions, but they are rare among the political class and only serve to emphasize the type—and this is the type with which we have to deal, as they are the real political leaders. There is one striking difference to be noted in the mixed Haitian, with very few exceptions, is proud of both his white and his black blood, though above all he is proud of being a Haitian, and there is no question but what they are all deadly in earnest in their desires for Haiti as an independent Republic and are very proud of their country. In this position we may make this must be considered, and the more we are able to get their real cooperation the easier our task will be and the sooner a government can be established by the Haitians for the Haitians. One of the reasons for the opposition to a change in the constitution whereby foreigners can own land is the fear that rich Americans will buy up enormous tracts of land and so gradually oust the population, doing nothing for the country except to let it lie fallow, and gaining their profits from its advance in value. I doubt if any Haitian assembly will accept an article whereby the sale of land to foreigners to acquire and hold land are unrestricted. Many really believe in the necessity of many changes in the Haitian method of conducting affairs, but they are afraid to advocate the necessary control by which that eventually, they will so lose their independence. Before the elections nearly every candidate announced himself as a friend of the A. but after the elections their ardor and admiration dwindled.

14. It is believed that the foregoing gives a true picture of Haitian conditions as they have been and will be encountered in our contact with the affairs. We have established order and preserved peace; the country has a large mass of people has been greatly improved; we have done everything possible with the funds at our disposal to improve communications, sanitation, public utilities, hospitals, prisons, hydraulic service, in the cities, etc. We have shown what American officers and men can do with the Haitian people under control by binding up an efficient gendarmerie, which in time should be of its kind; we have built up a reasonably efficient customs organization; we have vastly improved the conditions of all the minor Haitian officials; prompt and full payment of the salaries; we have given an object to the form of personal honesty in the administration of public funds; we have served as a check on dishonesty and abuse of power on the part of Haitian officials; we are putting into effect a modern system of accounting of public funds; in very little of this have we had the support of the Haitian officials themselves, but on the contrary it has been done in face of them, sometimes open and sometimes concealed.

On the other hand, we have been able to do nothing to reform the executive departments, with their numerous ramifications, nor to establish them efficient and honest administration of public affairs; the same official remains in office, and the instant the check now imposed by our presence is withdrawn they will revert to the old condition of affairs, where the people of the country were exploited for the benefits of the few. While we have in charge of certain parts of the financial administration, the financial condition of the country are at present in a miserable state—debts and interest on them unpaid, no funds available for the extension of public works essential to the well-being and development of the country, and owing in part to lack of commerce is more or less paralyzed. The engineers appointed under us have been able to do little but make preliminary investigations, nor will we be able to do much if anything until funds are obtained. The law has changed in many particulars and the Haitian courts thoroughly reformed. The school system must be entirely rebuilt. This is literally true, as there are no schoolhouses that are Government owned, and there can be no lasting progress in this country so long as the educational standards are as they are. All these activities will require expert direction and in every case foreign assistance. Efficient government of Haiti by Haitians can not be attained so long as the present generation remains in power. We look at it an enormous amount of good has been done in improving the condition of the people, giving them security, good examples of honest dealing, better routes, etc., but such improvements have only followed where we have had actual control. Generally we have tried to build from the top down. The president who belonged to the old order of things was elected and has no real power; his friends were and are of the old type, and they will not let a matter of fact can not get far away from the former system; our efforts have been to find places for their friends, and I have been unable to find any real attempt on their part to remedy conditions. The members of the recently elected National Assembly belong almost entirely to the same old government and opposition—and consequently are actuated by the same selfish motives; with these tools alone no lasting reforms can be accomplished. We have reached the point where either a change in methods must be made or we must admit failure to accomplish the large good for this country we have in mind. To remain where we are and not to move forward in this direction is to fail, and we can not admit failure.

15. In order to revise the constitution, to have confirmed the various laws, to have present laws changed or new laws enacted to meet changing conditions, and to provide for other necessary legislative action, under date of September 22, 1916, a presidential decree was issued providing for the election of deputies and of Senators and calling the session for the first of April, 1917.

The decree states (art. 36) that the first duty of the National Assembly is to revise the constitution; and after that was done, and then only, the Assembly would take up its legislative duties.

great difficulty in forcing the Government to have a fair election, as conditions permitted, the elections were fair. Practically all gave assurances of American sympathy before the election, but after elected many of them became lukewarm. The results of the elections but, but apparently the Government had control by a small majority. Such men as Dornoval and Vincent (former Cabinet ministers who st the extension of the treaty to 20 years) to the Senate; and Vincent, was elected president of the Senate, apparently because of his an attitude.

nsiderable time it had been impossible to get the Cabinet to agree ntion of the treaty, but after the elections and before the meeting nber of Deputies it was finally signed by the Cabinet. Mr. Vincent, esigned as a protest against the proposed action of the Cabinet. ut and out supporter of the extension was Doctor Heraux, Minister , who had been pro-American throughout and had apparently acted with Mr. Ruan.

of the character of the old Cabinet, it was considered desirable to v one, that had not been mixed up with certain unsavory affairs, willing to cooperate with us, and who could work with the National

In view of the open attacks on Doctor Heraux for his pro-American no one apparently had anything personal against him), it was felt to have him included in the new Cabinet; as soon as this was no one of prominence would join the Cabinet, and a bitter fight el against him; attacks appeared in papers that were known to ed—by the Government and friendly to the President—there was good evidence that some of these attacks were written in the house et minister. Finally a compromise Cabinet of reasonably good men d, and in which Doctor Heraux was included. The delay in making nd the outbreak of war between the United States and Germany mplicated matters, and when, after long and unnecessary delay, the recommended that Haiti also declare war, the recommendation was vn by a unanimous vote of the National Assembly. Upon receipt of ent's message a motion was made to the effect that the Cabinet did the confidence of the National Assembly, but was defeated; this e Government still fairly in control, but immediately afterwards, by it votes, the President's message was referred to a committee thar ly hostile to the declaration of war. After the declaration of war e rejected at a subsequent meeting of the Chamber of Deputies a reso- ling for Doctor Heraux to appear before the chamber was passed. et decided that no member would appear for interpellation until constitution had been revised and the chambers free to enter on their duties. The chamber has apparently acquiesced to this, but the ide the same demand, received the same reply, but is apparently at tempting to bring the issue to a head, though so far as is known the as not as yet been reached. Close personal and political friends of lent state openly they intend to get Doctor Heraux out of the Cabinet, eve the President also desires his elimination. It is reported, but not , that the President is in communication with one of the principal the opposition to Doctor Heraux. From the temper of the Senate ved it intends to force the issue. To show the real strength of the nt party in the Chamber of Deputies they have a system here of ach month a new presiding officer, and to-day a friend of the Presi- been elected to that position. The chamber, however, is apt to follow of the Senate, though the Senators were elected by the deputies.

time and again stated to various leaders and others that the United s no ulterior motive in view, but is simply endeavoring to get established an efficient government of Haitians by Haitians; that when such gov- is established our activities, except under the treaty, will cease, but ill have to remain active in Haitian affairs, until by cooperation with itians form such a government, and that the more they cooperate and aid oner our control will cease; but they simply will not cooperate, and in m of their hearts practically all are equally opposed to us—executive, e, and judiciary. These conditions to me appear well-nigh intolerable, he sake of both countries must be rectified.

e following courses are open to us: (a) To put into full effect, without e full terms of the treaty.

Owing to our financial, police (gendarmerie), and technical (sanitary) control, outward conditions will be better than formerly. The reform will have to be fought for and a large part of the good results will be in spite of the opposition of Haitian officials, and not on account of their support. If this course is followed, every endeavor should be made to precede by an agreement with the Haitian Government whereby it agrees to employ an adequate number of American experts in the departments, and to follow their advice in technical matters. While it would not like this, they are so anxious to regain control that they will do it; they would have to be forced to carry it out, but with the results of another failure in their own government, they might be a fairly good government. The government should also be required to:

(a) the extension of the treaty; (b) the gendarmerie agreement, provision that the strength of the gendarmerie should be at least one gendarme to every 500 inhabitants; (c) the provisions of the law which actually make the changes in the constitution that we finally considered.

(b) To suppress the present Haitian Government and to establish a military government, giving Americans the power, and making full possible use of the best Haitians obtainable, to hold the Americans responsible for instituting the necessary reforms, for building up the country for training Haitians so that eventually they can continue an administration that has been built up for them. The control would pass to Haitian hands, but only as the individuals demonstrated their capacity. It could not completely pass until the acts we had done, the laws we had had been ratified by the representatives of the Haitian nation. I have no doubt in my mind but what, from the standpoint of one who really knows the well-being of this country, this method is decidedly preferable, as it would give the best results in the quickest time. If done, however, our position should be clearly stated at the time. I believe a large number of the thinking people, as well as the mass of the country people (peasants), would welcome this change, but it would be bitterly opposed by most of the others. How much harm they could do is problematical; I doubt if it would do much, but, in view of the character of the Haitian people and of the fact that the gendarmerie has been in existence, it would not be well to know what they might do, and, consequently, it would be necessary to have troops at all the larger places in the Republic, so that the force present would convince them that opposition would be futile; my estimate is that we have approximately 2,000 to 2,500 white troops actually in Haiti and in Haitian waters; the presence of this number would not be required for a considerable period, but the ounce of prevention might save the pound, and, if done peacefully, our final task would be correspondingly lighter.

(c) The suppression of the national assembly and the retention of the president, with a cabinet—all of them to be figureheads—the action to be in the hands of Americans, working through the president, cabinet, in the same manner as for the purely military government. This method would please some of the Haitians, but, on the other hand, by concentrating one power (the executive) and suppressing the other (the legislative), would introduce a prolific source of trouble, and at the same time would have in office a consummate politician, who would be apt to use it to hinder our work.

President Dartiguenave is not popular; he is and always has been identified with the purely political class, and is a consummate politician, who is trying to stand well with both sides; he is weak and can not be relied upon in my opinion, except so far as he believes his own interests are concerned. He has one redeeming feature, and that is he was about the only one in Haiti who was willing to accept office as President and father the demands. From what I can learn, I believe he is at the bottom of the agitation against Doctor Heraux, and that he is trying to force the Assembly into an attitude of opposition to the wishes of the American Government in hopes that we will suppress the assembly; while at present the branches are apparently at loggerheads, there are certain things going on under the surface that indicate an understanding between the president and the National Assembly. If the assembly is suppressed and the president remains, it will cause a very decided sore, though how dangerous it is impossible to say; in any event the same precautions in the way of relationships as given under (b) should be taken.

a government of this type has worked well in Egypt, I do not could get the best results in the quickest time, but it might have to d as a matter of policy, and as an object lesson to show that we did se to allow changes of presidents to be made by other than strictly onal means.

e suppression of the National Assembly and a reversion to the Gov- by President. Cabinet, and council of state.

is been tried and found absolutely wanting, and in my opinion would a still worse condition of affairs, and such a change would be by greater danger of armed opposition than any other step we se short of actual annexation.

RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS OF A BOARD OF INVESTIGATION CONVENED AT PORT-AU-PRINCE, REPUBLIC OF HAITI, BY ORDER OF THE MAJOR GENERAL COMMANDANT TO INQUIRE INTO CERTAIN IRREGULARITIES ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN COMMITTED BY OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN IN THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

Confidential.

From: The brigade commander.

To: The Major General Commandant.

Subject: Report of investigation of certain irregularities alleged to have been committed by officers and enlisted men in the Republic of Haiti.

1. From a careful reading and study of the attached testimony, statements, and other papers, I am reluctantly forced to the opinion that Major C. Wells, former gendarmerie department commander in northern Haiti, is responsible for the conditions in northern Haiti as found by Brigadier General Catlin on his inspection of the Hinche-Maissade districts in March 1919. Such conditions were not actually due to his orders and instructions.

2. I am further of the opinion that these gendarmerie officers and enlisted men, who were enlisted men in the Marine Corps on duty in the Hinche-Maissade districts, were acting in accordance with what they believed to be the policy of their department commander.

3. It is difficult to believe that Captain Doxey was not fully aware of Major Wells's policy and of the existing orders and conditions in the Hinche-Maissade district.

4. There is a doubt, however, in my mind as to whether or not the evidence as here brought out is sufficient to warrant a trial before a general court-martial on charges of such a serious nature. It is extremely doubtful whether evidence can be procured.

5. The event referred to herein occurred over a year ago. Many changes have taken place in the personnel of the gendarmerie since that time. All the interested parties have either returned to the United States or have been discharged from the service. Mr. Lavoie, former captain, gendarmerie d'Haiti, and private, United States Marine Corps, has left the service. His whereabouts is unknown.

6. It is therefore recommended that these papers be referred to the Judge Advocate General, United States Navy, where the sworn statements and other evidence may be carefully sifted and weighed with a view to determining whether or not it is sufficient to warrant a trial.

7. If the decision is in the affirmative it is requested that specimens of the evidence and specifications be prepared by the Judge Advocate General's office and assigned to a competent officer to be assigned to temporary duty with this brigade as judge advocate of the court. At present there is no officer attached to this brigade who is considered to have sufficient legal knowledge to conduct a trial in the best interest of the Government, where skilled opposing counsel is present.

8. The return to Haiti of all witnesses and interested parties, of course, is necessary.

ddition to the testimony already taken by Colonel Haines, Lieutenant hat there is no more testimony available in Haiti on this subject. We ut such a long time has elapsed since these events occurred.

at it has become known that an investigation is being held.

ut no further testimony can be obtained from some of those who have

MEMORANDUM.

Referring to Major Doxey's "Notes on situation in Hinche distr." February 28, 1919:

General Catlin handed me a memorandum containing the true account of Captain Ward's actions at Cerca la Source, but written in a biased and taken from a report from Colonel Wells to General Williams. These extracts showed that Ward had willfully disobeyed my orders. On March 8 I directed Captain Price at Hinche to telephone Captain Ward at Cerca la Source and to direct him to notify Captain Ward to make a statement of my intention to bring him before a general court-martial if these facts were true. Captain Ward came to Hinche on March 9 while General Catlin was present. I submitted a statement from himself and all his noncommissioned officers which were in accordance with my orders. These orders, in brief, were: to treat the natives kindly; to pay for supplies; to patrol only to be seen and not to fire or molest the natives unless actually attacked." Captain Ward's statement to General Catlin that he had told Major Doxey that he was going to come with me and see if I would not change his orders to allow him to patrol. Major Doxey stated that that was what he understood also, but that probably been misquoted by Colonel Wells. Colonel Wells did not say so. General Catlin informed Captain Ward that his explanation was entirely satisfactory.

In these same "Notes" is:

"Ward called up at 3 p. m. and wanted to report that there was a band of armed men 7 miles northwest of Cerca la Source. I asked him where he got this information, and he said a marine patrol brought it in. I asked him if he was sure of that, and he said 'yes.' I told him he could send any message he wanted, but if he made any such sensational report without investigation I would be personally over to the place and hold him responsible. Then told him I would be through that place the night before with one gendarme and that they would get the truth in extract from military diary. Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker, dated April 1, 1919."

(This refers to same locality reported by Ward above.)

Thomassique and Cerca la Source: Captain Ward and Lieutenant Williams jumped bandit camp at Mamantial, locality 2516 (between Cerca la Source and Thomassique) at 6:40 a. m. Camp deserted and provisions rotting. Camp destroyed. Tenant Seward proceeded toward Las Palmas and returned without incident.

Cerca la Source: Captain Ward proceeded toward Source Manon sans. Captured a man, who attempted to run, who said he could lead them to a band of armed men. Captured an outpost of two men who attempted to run; continued on to a shelf on a shelf on the edge of a precipice. Camp attacked, about 75 jumping over cliff; captured 6 prisoners, including Charles M. Meme Michel, leaders; 4 horses, 1 saddle, machetes, knives, black powder, caps, 75 bushels of corn, besides peas, beans, rice, coffee, salt, kerosene, cooking utensils.

This memorandum is made on account of the "Notes" from part of the which are detrimental to Captain Ward if left unexplained.

Upon the subject of killing:

From General Catlin's testimony during his investigation in the district of Hinche, March 8 and 9, 1919: "Lieutenant Williams admitted that he had killed prisoners, but only when they attempted to escape." And at Hinche, when questioned, Capt. Ernest L. Lavoie (private, United States Marine Corps) admitted that six prisoners had been shot. He said they were Cacos who attempted to escape several times; that they were a bad lot and had caused trouble among the other prisoners. They were taken to the cemetery at Hinche and shot by gendarmes. He stated that he had no orders to shoot prisoners, and he had not reported the matter to anyone." Major Wells stated that no report had been made to him, but admitted that he would not report in case of shooting of prisoners. Captain Lavoie, in his testimony, asked if he knew of unlawful killing of Cacos, answered "Yes." He stated that Colonel Wells had given him orders to bump off prisoners. He stated that "It was a conversation at Hinche the first night I was there, in the presence of Captain Verdier." The only way to stop the Cacos was to make it as hard as we could for them, as the gendarmerie had to be in the situation. Such men as Saul Peralte should be bumped off on their return to Ouanaminthe you can tend to that Verdier," and he said "I mind sending any prisoners into Cape Haitien; you can handle them at Hinche." In answer to the question, "Will you state positively ved any instructions from Colonel Wells to bump off prisoners?" he in substance: "He told me that I shouldn't send any prisoners into that I could handle myself right in Hinche and not to take them to that they could bump off." Captain Verdier stated that he was t this conversation between Colonel Wells and Captain Lavole, and e conversation was on the Caco situation. I don't remember the ersation, but Colonel Wells did say that such men as Saul Peralte gotten rid of." He further stated that "instructions were given to rid for the Cacos" and admitted that he thought "that Colonel Wells convey the idea to get rid of them—to bump them off," and that he n to "Bolte on this subject and had the same opinion as myself." olte had "heard of it being done." In the papers found in the t commander's desk at the cape Lamartine Toussaint made a state-he had killed Saul Peralte while he was trying to escape. Saul is tried and acquitted in November or December of 1917 on charges uplicated in the attack at Hinche in October, and the reviewing official Russell, at that time ordered him released from confinement, but to the extent that he should remain in Ouanaminthe and keep the s informed of his presence.

ant Andre stated that he had "never witnessed any shooting, as I was ide, but I heard there was some execution at Hinche and at a suburb called Latte (Latte is first outside the gate of Hinche; there is a etery there), and, again, "Yes; at Maissade, one named Garnier." that "the officer acted pretty much as they liked, as they were not ontrolled by their superior officers."

er stated that Wells "further ordered that prisoners, if any were un- useless, and he desired them bump off, by this expression, of course, kill them" and that he (Baker) had "been informed and believed ain Lavole carried out these orders and was acting under the orders

Wells when he executed 19 prisoners at Hinche in January, 1919," close circles among the gendarmerie officers whom I knew best and m I most associated it was understood, I believe, to be popular thing off as nearly as possible all prisoners taken. It was more or less dis- them all, and it was generally understood among them "to the best lief, the whole incentive behind the execution referred to were the d sanction given the act by Major Wells." He further stated that either cared nor wanted to hear of the details of executions." He ed that he did not want to hear of these things.

ant Woods stated in answer to unlawful killing that he had "heard of them being killed" at "Hinche and Maissade" and that he knew of instructions about actual killing of any prisoners but instructions l to have been issued "not to take any prisoners," and that "they l to have been issued by the department commander, Major Wells." Doxey on November 3, 1919, testified that he had heard of rumors of aco prisoners in the Hinche district, that he did not know the dates, ad not investigated them nor spoken to Major Wells about them, and his testimony of January 8, 1920, he remembered very little.

stimony of Lieutenant Colonel Hooker and Mr. Holly were practi- same as General Catlin's testimony relative to his investigation at ey had been present with the exception that a notary named Garnier taken to Lieutenant Williams's house in the evening and later in the s found beaten to death with a club. Colonel Wells stated that General investigation was the "the first instruction I had of anything of this the subject of corvee:

(Definition: Corvée is forced labor or labor against the will of the laborer. Paid labor when the pay is not satisfactory to the laborer also comes under the head of corvée.)

There is no doubt that corvée was practiced subsequent to October 1918 after the order prohibiting corvée went into effect.

From the testimony given General Catlin states that: "Toward January, 1919, rumors reached me that corvée was still being used in the Hinche district, although it had been ordered stopped in October, 1918. I questioned Major Wells as to the manner of obtaining labor and the mode of payment. He did not seem to be sure, although he stated that it was expected within a week." Major Wells was ordered to investigate and later "reported to me, verbally, that he had made the investigation and that he found only 45 men working on the road at Maissade and that the men were all voluntary laborers; that they were paid a half gourd and "Major Wells stated that he felt sure that there was no corvée in force where in his district." General Catlin then decided to investigate and "found conditions as Colonel Hooker had reported, except that the force of workmen had apparently been cut down, as I found only 45 men working on the road near Maissade, under guard of several armed gendarmes. I stopped and questioned these men and they all stated that they were working voluntarily; some claimed to have been brought there by gendarmes, others said that the chief of section had brought them. The general denied this, but on being told that they were at liberty to go to their homes to remain and work at a gourd a day, they all but three left." At Maissade a modified corvée had been in force both on the roads and in the gendarme barracks. All the inhabitants of a certain section of the district had been rounded up and brought into Hinche as suspected bandits. They had been put to work without pay, but had been allowed 30 cents (Haitian gold) per day for food; that they had been released a few days after their arrival."

Lieutenant Colonel Hooker's testimony states: "I stated that I found 150 men actually doing corvée labor." In a discussion before General Catlin and General Williams and Colonel Wells present, "My report was read and the existence of corvée was denied by Major Wells." Later when General Catlin made his inspection about March 8, he, General Catlin, stated "after being told by several that they had been working since February, that in the early part of their work they spent the night in prison and that some of them had received 30 cents Haitian a day for about a week. That Lieutenant Williams had promised them a gourd a day on the Monday. General Catlin told them that those who were not there to step to the other side of the road. All but three did so." And the general took verbal testimony for about three or four hours and the gist of the testimony was that the corvée had been going on. At Hinche the general stated "that corvée had been continually in operation." Williams then stated, "Do you know positively that the corvée continued after February 8, A. Yes; in February, 1919, I myself saw the corvée in operation near Maissade. Two groups of between 50 to 75 men each were working on the road, the third group working in the market place of Maissade."

Mr. Holly, who acted as interpreter for General Catlin, stated that he had made the people were brought together by Lieutenant Williams at Maissade and "When they arrived at this place they were locked up for the night, and the next morning they were put to work on the road. At the time the general was speaking to them the majority of the men were kept at work for two months and more. Every night they were taken to prison to keep them from running away. These people considered it to work and those who refused "were beaten and compelled to go to work. Some who tried to run away were fired at." Mr. Holly also saw the men split up and go home when General Catlin told them that if they did not go to work they could leave.

Lieutenant Sieger stated: "I understand they were running Maissade." And Captain Verdier, when questioned as to whether the order had been disobeyed, answered: "I heard it had been disobeyed, but I was not made by the magistrate."

Lieutenant Andre, a Haitian officer, stated regarding corvée that "it was in December last year and in January and February of this year he did not know by whose orders, but presumed "it was by the order of Major Wells," and when asked if it was generally known replied: "I heard it was."

was in command of that district and the orders came from him." He stated that corvée had "a very bad effect, and I think that it was for the revolution in the North."

Later, a former captain in the gendarmerie, stated that the corvée order obeyed in the districts of Maissade and Hinche from October 1, 1918, to a time in March, 1919," and when asked by whose instruction it had obeyed he stated that he had questioned Lavoie and Williams "in my capacity as inspector of roads in the North as to by whose authority and from what funds were coming to carry on their road work, informed me that Major Wells ordered them to construct roads between St. Michel and Maissade between Maissade and Hinche with corvée labor and that he had induced the Governor at Maissade and Hinche to make certain contributions, from which the corvée would be fed," and that "illegal corvée after October 1, 1918, was the chiefest factor in the dissatisfaction which led to the revolution. It is well known that the first Caco forces were largely recruited from the corvée."

On the 4th of March, after General Williams had notified Major Doxey (telegram No. 50) that General Catlin was coming North, Major Wells notified Major Doxey (telegram No. 53) that "he would like the road gang at Maissade up to about 50 men; there is money enough here," and Doxey notified Captain Lavoie on the 7th (telegram No. 56) that "it was the work in the district."

Everything is all right. You personally look into it again, each one to be questioned. All expect to arrive 10 a. m. Saturday."

In a paper entitled "Notes made by Maj. J. L. Doxey on situation in the district," under date of February 26: "Remember that corvée is a word for work and does not mean forced labor. All that I have asked for is that all corvée had finished in October."

In opinion that corvée was actually performed in the districts of Maissade, Hinche, principally Maissade, and that Colonel Wells, Major Doxey, Captain Lavoie, and Lieutenant Williams, the officers immediately concerned, were all in it, and it had their support and approval.

Keeping information quiet:

Captain Verdier's testimony relative to confidential messages relayed to Ouanaminthe: "Yes; some were and some were not. They were in the form of telegrams to and from Colonel Wells and Lavoie at Hinche, and some to Kelly at Cerca la Source. They referred to operations, movements and detailing of officers. I had verbal instructions not to let them know if you came through." ("You," meaning Colonel Hooker.)

Captain Bolte's testimony concerning instructions to make private "Not private reports, but telegrams received by telephone through the district were to be kept on file at the Third Company office under lock and key." "Who gave this order?" "Colonel Wells."

From Verdier's testimony relative to messages sent by Captain Doxey to Hinche: "He reported all was quiet."

The telegrams on file at Ouanaminthe:

Colonel Williams to Major Wells: "Message regarding Maissade received."

Major Wells to Captain Lavoie: "All of this is the result of the work which Stallworth sent."

From Major Wells: "Major Wells directs that Stallworth will not send messages via radio unless Lavoie first censors that message. That Stallworth will censor all messages before sending. That radio will not be used in sending messages except in case of danger."

Major Wells to Captain Lavoie: "Start on cleaning up wreck at Hinche and Thomonde. Have barracks repaired and remove all evidence of Cacos."

Major Wells to Captain Doxey: "I would like the road gang at Maissade kept up to about 50 men; there is money enough on hand here."

Major Wells to Captain Lavoie: "It was the work at Maissade. Everything is all right. You personally look into it again, each one to be questioned. All expect to arrive at 10 a. m. Saturday."

From personal letter from Doxey to Wells found in locked drawer: "Haitian rumors in Maissade are General Williams is leaving soon. You, the officers in Hinche go also. Lieutenant Williams has an officer there with him, and will go in another month. Lieutenant Perry, a new man, is at Maissade with Williams. He is the one General Williams said he would send."

From the same source, dated March 18: "Since the investigation bonds have split up into small bands, and are catching more men. They are supposed to have heard that men would not be shot unless in large bands; are all good citizens in the daytime and rob and steal at night. That General Williams, Colonel Wells, Doxey, Lavole have one more in the district; the inhabitants will report to the priest (Lareau, of St. Pierre) the conduct of these officers; Sergeant Carius said he heard the priest advise the inhabitants to make the above report to him.

"The priest said Colonel Hooker would be in Hinche for six months. Gendarmerie would stay.

"Williams has secret-service men trying to find out the above data.

GONAIVES, HAITI, February 19, 1920

JOSEPH O. VAN HORN, lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, was called as a witness, was informed that he need not answer any incriminating questions, and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name?

Answer. Joseph O. Van Horn, lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at St. Michel, Haiti.

2. Question. Where were you stationed in the latter part of 1918 and the early part of 1919?

Answer. At Ouanaminthe, Haiti.

3. Question. During the trouble in Hinche, from October, 1918, was the Hinche used as a relay station for telephone messages to and from Hinche?

Answer. Yes, sir.

4. Question. Do you remember the nature of these messages?

Answer. Some messages were written and placed on file at Ouanaminthe and some were verbal over the phone and relayed to their destination related to transportation activities, and some were reports from Captain Wells to Colonel Wells.

5. Question. Did these reports from Lavoie indicate that he was having trouble in his district or not?

Answer. Yes; some did and some were to the effect that all was quiet.

6. Question. What were the nature of these reports during January, February, and March, 1919?

Answer. I don't remember exactly what the reports were, but I know the things were not quiet. This was during December, when I was stationed at LaMelle, Haiti.

7. Question. Do you remember any instructions from Colonel Wells to you as to the treatment of Cacos or Caco prisoners?

Answer. No; I never heard him say anything about that, because when I came up here he always told me he had to tell the district commander.

8. Question. Have you spoken to other officers on the treatment of Caco prisoners, and if so, what was their ideas on the subject?

Answer. I remember speaking to several officers, but I can't remember what they were now or exactly what was said. But I was under the impression when I went after an armed band of bandits, I was supposed to go and get them and get rid of them. When prisoners were taken I always treated them the same as other prisoners. Like prisoners in the civil prison and I kept them in to stand trial.

stion. What is your name?

r. Frank Verdier, captain, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at Ouan-since September, 1918.

stion. Were you present at a conversation between Colonel Wells and Lavoie? If so, state the subject matter of this conversation as far as remember it.

r. Yes, sir; I was present at this conversation, and most of the converas on the Caco situation. I don't remember the exact conversation but Wells did say that such men as Saul Peralte should be gotten rid of.

stion. Was any mention made to the effect that either you or Captain should handle your district and that it would not be necessary to make on your activities?

r. It may have been mentioned, but I can't recollect.

stion. Were any instructions given to make it as hard as possible for os?

r. Yes, sir. Instructions were given to make it hard for the Cacos, but know exactly what they were.

stion. In your opinion what was meant by making it hard? What did ik was meant?

r. I think that Colonel Wells meant to convey the idea to get rid of o bump them off.

stion. Have you spoken to other officers on this subject; and if so, what did they have relating to those instructions?

r. I think I spoke to Bolte on this subject and he had the same opinion elf.

stion. During this trouble in Hinche, from October, 1918, on, was not ninthe a relay station for messages from the Cape to Hinche?

r. Yes.

stion. Do you remember any reports from Hinche to the department nder at the Cape relative to the situation in Hinche?

r. I remember receiving some telegrams regarding activities.

stion. Were these messages confidential?

r. Yes; some to and from Colonel Wells and Lavoie at Hinche and perome to Kelly at Cerca la Source. They referred to operations against and detailing of officers. I had verbal instructions not to let you see t you came through Ouanaminthe.

stion. Have you copies of these messages?

r. I'm pretty certain I have. I will try to find them and will give them if they are still there.

stion. Did these Caco telegrams state that the situation in Hinche rious or not?

r. I should consider so.

stion. Do you remember whether Lavoie was nervous over the situawhether he thought he could handle it without outside aid?

Answer. At the time I was in Hinche in November, 1918, Lavole could handle it without aid, but later he requested that machine guns be sent him with marine crews.

13. Question. Did you transmit any messages from Major Dorey, department commander of the cape after he went to Hinche in January, 1919, to relieve Lavole?

Answer. Yes, sir.

14. Question. What were the nature of these?

Answer. Mostly regarding the shipment of supplies.

15. Question. Nothing regarding the Caco situation?

Answer. I think there was something regarding the Caco situation, but I can't think what it was.

16. Question. Do you remember if these messages said that all was quiet that he was having trouble with the Cacos?

Answer. He reported all was quiet.

EXTRACT FROM GENDARMERIE GENERAL ORDER NO. 21, DATED MAY 10, 1918 (SINCE REVOKED).

(8) For the present funds for road repairs allotted from these hereafter will be used as far as possible on the following roads: Department of Mapou-Gonaives, Gonaives-Ennery, Ennery-Saint Michel, Gonaives-Gros Morne-Port de Paix, Cape Haitien-Ouanaminthe, Ouanaminthe-Liberte, Port Chabert.

(9) Such other roads and trails as serve to define general economic zones will be repaired when there exists a condition which seriously impedes transportation of goods or passengers by horse, pack, or cart. When patriotic and public-spirited individuals are contributing to the repair or development of certain roads, such work will be continued and every encouragement be given to the end that such contribution increase.

FROM GENERAL ORDER NO. 22, DATED SEPTEMBER 2, 1918 (SINCE REVOKED).

1. Beginning October 1, 1918, the use of corvée on the national roads provided for in General Order 21, of May 10, 1918, will be discontinued and the maintenance and improvement of these roads will be carried on with paid labor only. Labor except when a real emergency calls for emergency repair beyond the available appropriation, in which case corvée will be used.

2. The paid labor will be organized into gangs and every effort will be made to keep together a permanent personnel. A maximum of 1.10 gourdes without food or one gourde per day plus a meal at cost 10 centimes will be exceeded, and wherever possible labor will be obtained at a lower rate. Shelter, to be constructed by the labor gangs themselves, will be provided and the better the shelter, keeping in view its temporary nature, the more contented and efficient will be the workers.

3. Holidays and fetes will be recognized and celebrated with moderation. It is the idea to take advantage of all possible means to build up an organization which will be attractive to the Haitian laborer.

4. The use of corvée for other roads than those listed will be restricted to the provisions of articles 52 and 65, Code Rural.

5. The use of corvée or free labor for other than road building will be restricted under the restrictions of law, and care will be exercised that no work be called by local officials for illegal work.

6. When prisoners are used, only prisoners physically capable of work will be employed and gangs of prisoners will be put on work separate from that performed by paid gangs. The cost of feeding and clothing prisoners will be paid for from prison funds.

7. Upon the receipt of this order the district and subdistrict commanders will inform the officials and notables that its issuance is made possible triotic and earnest efforts of the inhabitants of the rural sections so fully given of their labor, and that to each and every one of these merie owes a debt.

JANUARY 12

From: Lieut. Col. H. R. Lay, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector, Marine
To: The Major General Commandant
(via the Adjutant and Inspector).
Subject: Confidential investigation.

1. In obedience to verbal instructions from the major general commandant I submit the following sworn testimony of Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams, Clarke H. Wells, Capt. John L. Doxey, Sergt. Dorcas L. Williams.

2. There is also submitted the sworn statement of Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams, Marine Corps, regarding conditions existing in Haiti during his command as chief of the Haitian Gendarmerie.

STATEMENT OF BRIG. GEN. A. W. CATLIN, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS
RELATIVE TO CERTAIN IRREGULARITIES ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN COMMITTED BY OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

I relieved Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps, in command of the First Brigade of Marines in Haiti, December 1, 1918. At this time the gendarmes were stationed only at Port au Prince, Cape Haitien, and Ouanaminthe. The gendarmerie of Haiti were scattered all over the island and were the policing of the island. Bandits had been causing trouble in the district and the gendarmes were operating against them. The chief of the gendarmerie, Col. A. S. Williams, United States Marine Corps, assured me the gendarmes could handle the situation. Toward the end of January rumors reached me that "corvée" was still being used in the Hinche district although it had been ordered stopped in October, 1918, and also the gendarmes were treating the country people in such a manner that many were joining the bandits. Colonel Williams denied this and assured me there was no "corvée" being used in the country. Rumors continued in and I sent Lieutenant Colonel Hooker, United States Marine Corps, to investigate and report to me the actual conditions here. He reported that he found "corvée" going on at both Malsade and at Hinche and the gendarmes used the natives so brutally that many had left their families either joined the bandits or had come into the towns for safety.

Col. A. S. Williams, chief of gendarmerie, and Maj. Clarke H. Wells, commander of northern Haiti, were shown the report and both denied the conditions were as reported. I questioned Major Wells as to the manner of obtaining labor and the methods of payment; and he did not seem to believe though he stated that he had inspected within a week. I then directed Wells to proceed to Hinche to investigate thoroughly the labor question, report to me the number of men being worked, the manner of obtaining what they were paid, and who actually paid them. About 10 days later Wells returned to Port au Prince and reported to me, verbally, that he made the investigation directed, and that he found only 45 men working on the road at Malsade; that these men were all voluntary laborers; that they were paid a half gourd a day, and that the gendarme officer at Malsade was personally; that at Hinche there were no laborers except prisoners. Col. Williams and Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker were present when this report was made. Major Wells stated on being questioned that he felt sure that there was no "corvée" in force anywhere in his district.

This report was so contradictory to the one made by Colonel Hooker that I stated that he found at least 150 men working at Malsade and that when they were questioned by the interpreter stated that they were harassed and forced to work, that I decided to go to Hinche in person and find out the true conditions there. Accompanied by Col. A. S. Williams, Lieut. Col. Hooker, Maj. Clarke H. Wells, and Major Doxey, I visited San Michel and Hinche. I found conditions as Colonel Hooker had reported, except the force of workmen had apparently been cut down as I found only 45 men working on the road near Malsade, under guard of several armed gendarmes.

and questioned these men and they all stated that they were not voluntarily; some claimed to have been brought there by gendarmes. The gendarmes said that the chief of the section had brought them. The gendarmes lied this, but on being told that they were at liberty to go to their homes and work at a gourd a day, they all but three left. At Maissade I freed the local priest, as well as the magistrate communal, the judge de paix, a number of inhabitants; also a number of gendarmes. The priest was the gendarme officer, Lieut. D. B. Williams (sergeant, United States Corps) with having killed a number of prisoners and also with having been notary of Maissade to death in his office. The only substantiating testimony this latter charge was from three privates of gendarmes, who also could have been beaten by Lieutenant Williams. The charge was denied by Lieutenant Williams, as well as by the first sergeant, the magistrate, and the privates, all of whom stated that the said notary was shot the night before an attack by bandits on the town and had died from the effect of the attack. Lieutenant Williams admitted that he had killed several prisoners but not when they attempted to escape.

When I found a modified "corvée" had been in force both on the roads and in the gendarme barracks. All the inhabitants of a certain section of Guinea, had been rounded up and brought into Hinche as suspected and had been put to work without pay, but had been allowed 30 cents (6 cents gold) per day for food; they had been released a few days after my arrival. I also found that practically all the gardens and farms of the towns had been abandoned and the inhabitants had disappeared, probably having joined the bandits. The priest, Father Belliot, stated that this was partly on account of their fear of the gendarmes and of the appearance of a gendarme uniform was sufficient for the peasantry to take to the brush and hide.

The priest and the magistrate of Hinche stated that a number of prisoners had been shot. On being questioned, Capt. Ernst J. Lavole (private, United States Marine Corps) admitted that six prisoners had been shot. He said that he and the Cacos had attempted to escape several times; that they were taken and had caused trouble among other prisoners. They were taken to a cemetery outside of the town and shot by gendarmes. He stated that he had no orders to shoot prisoners and he had not reported the matter to Major Wells.

Major Wells stated that no report had been made to him, but admitted that he would not expect a report in case of shooting of prisoners. He also admitted the admission of Captain Lavole that prisoners had been shot. Colonel Williams immediately wrote an order, a copy of which he had sent to all gendarmes in Haiti, forbidding the killing of any prisoner, even if attempting to escape, and directing that in case a prisoner should be killed a full list of names of witnesses be submitted at once.

I considered that the action of the gendarmes in this section had a very bad effect on the inhabitants, and I directed Colonel Williams to transfer the officers of the section to Port au Prince and replace them with others from a quiet section of the island. I also directed that marines be stationed immediately in Maissade, San Michel, Cerca la Source, and Thomond, with an officer in each place, and directed Colonel Hooker to assume command of all troops in the section.

I directed that all officers and men be instructed to treat the natives kindly and make every effort to regain their confidence. I also directed that all gendarmes cease and that they be restricted to the towns in this section.

I found that the gendarme officers had made no attempt to propitiate the priests; in fact, they were in most cases antagonistic to them and treated them without any respect and had gained their ill will, when they have had their good offices in dealing with the natives.

I stationed Major Wells carefully, and while I was unable to get anyone to report that he had given any orders for "corvée" or the killing of prisoners, I was satisfied that the officers under him understood that they were to be kind to the natives, but were not expected to make any reports. I consider Major Wells principally responsible for the conditions as found. He stated that he had made frequent inspections of all posts, and it is inconceivable that he should have known something of the conditions. I directed that Major Wells be relieved of the command of the northern district. Major Meade arrived about the same time and was assigned to command at Cape Haitien. Major Wells was relieved from the command of the gendarmerie and was ordered to the States.

In my opinion, the young gendarme officers performed their duties best of their abilities according to the orders they received. They, the marines, and according to custom never questioned any orders given by regular officers. It is also my opinion that the actions of many of the gendarme officers in treatment of natives is due to the methods taught in handling the "corvée" workmen.

H. C. HAINES
Colonel, Acting Adjutant and Inspector
United States Marine Corps

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 1, 1920

JOHN L. DOXEY, captain, United States Marine Corps, having been called as a witness, and having been informed of his right to decline to answer a criminating question, was duly sworn, and testified before me, Lieut. Col. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, United States Marine Corps, as follows:

1. Question. Please state your name, rank, and present station.

Answer. John L. Doxey, captain, United States Marine Corps, stationed at marine barracks, navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa.

2. Question. Have you recently been on duty with the Haitian gendarmes, and, if so, what was your rank and title while on such duty; also, where you stationed and what duties were assigned to and performed by you between what dates?

Answer. From January 25, 1916, to about June, 1918, I held the rank of captain or inspector, but my principal duties have been as a captain. From June 25, 1916, to about February, 1917, I was stationed at Port au Prince; from about February, 1917, to February 13, 1918, I was stationed at Port au Prince; from February 13, 1918, to March 8, 1919, at Cape Haitien; from March 8, 1919, at Hinche; from June 28 to September 17, 1919, Cape Haitien; from September 17 to November 8, 1919, Port au Prince; from about November 18, 1918, to October 30 or 31, 1918, at Hinche; from about February 18, 1918, to March 8, 1918, I was in and out of Hinche, but not assigned as district commander at that place at that time.

3. Question. During your service with the Haitian gendarmerie in Haiti and Maissade, and elsewhere, were you aware of the existence of a compulsory corvée subsequent to the receipt of the order of October 1918 suspending the corvée law? If so, please state particulars.

Answer. To my knowledge there was none. I personally questioned Williams, the lieutenant at Maissade, the magistrate of Maissade, Preval, and a number of natives working on the road at this time, and found that no forced labor was going on. I questioned these people sometime between the 1st and 5th of March, 1919. In this connection I would like to state that the corvée is a creole expression for any work by either a large body of men, whether they are working for the gendarmerie, the Marine Corps, or for themselves or other natives, and in case you should ask the natives whether they were going on the natives would naturally answer "yes," whether voluntary labor or forced labor. My understanding of corvée when I was by an inspecting officer is that a body of men are working against the law and that they may be paid or not paid, while it may or may not be voluntary. The native, when questioned, thinks that any work, whether paid or not paid, whether voluntary or not voluntary, is corvée. To my knowledge the definition of the word "corvée," it was not going on in the district at that time. During my investigation, which was about March 3, 1919, I questioned natives working on the road at that time near Maissade. I asked 45 men out of 45, and each one told me in substance that he was glad to be on the road, because he could not work his garden on account of the fact that he would rather make a little money until the handitism was over. A few days later I was with General Catlin, and through his interpreter some of the same men personally told him that they were forced to work, although they were paid, and would rather be at home working on their gardens. At that particular time in that section there was no particular work for them, even in preparing their gardens to be planted, as it was very dry. In my duty with the natives I have found that practically all, educated and ill work for you just because they like you, and at the same time it against their wishes and you would not know about it. Another cause through fear that they might displease the chief, and later the chief persecute them, would influence the native to work for you. However, case, if an opportunity occurred, another inspector might find out that yes had a dislike for this work. At this time, as far as I know, every being paid for the work performed. At this time I personally carried or 800 gourds to pay the native road workmen, and at this time and his time there were about 3,000 gourdes available for paying these road n, and after my trip, as I remember it, there were 1,200 gourdes left at

This money was kept at Hinche for safekeeping only. It belonged commune of Maissade.

Question. Did you at any time observe personally, or receive any report, cases of abuse or ill treatment of members of corvée by members of the gendarmerie?

Ver. No, sir.

Question. Did you ever see, or hear, that Caco prisoners had been taken out of prison without trial?

Ver. I never did see this, and I don't remember of ever hearing of it up to March 10, 1919, when General Catlin's investigation was made.

Question. In your position which you occupied did you ever hear of any here any persons were shot without trial, in or near Hinche or Maissade?

Ver. No, sir. However, when Major Turner made his investigation I learned from Major Turner that 19 prisoners had been killed in January in

I personally did not believe this, for in numerous conversations with natives they never mentioned that anything of this kind had occurred. I personally known the natives in the district of Hinche and the priest, and nothing of this kind had been on their minds, they perhaps would have brought it up in some of these conversations. From all my dealings with the natives it is absolutely impossible to tell whether an occurrence actually took place or not; they may tell you that an incident took place which is absolutely untrue; they may tell you that an incident happened and implicate other persons, and upon investigation you will find their statements untrue.

Question. Did you hear it spoken of among the gendarmerie that it was necessary to execute "bump off" Caco prisoners and to make no report of the same to higher authority?

Ver. No, sir.

Question. Have you any knowledge of the circumstances attending the death of Garnier, the notary, at the house occupied by Lieutenant Williams at Hinche?

Ver. Only from hearsay, after General Catlin's investigation. General Catlin investigated this case himself.

Question. What, in your opinion, were the principal causes for the spirit of discontent prevalent in the Republic of Haiti?

Ver. The natural dislike of the Haitians toward any white man (foreigner) in Haiti and the changing of article 6 of the constitution, which in 1918 allows a foreigner to own land in Haiti. This change was made in 1918. My personal feeling and the intimate knowledge I have of the country lead me to believe that the changing of article 6 of the constitution was the cause of this banditism in Haiti.

Question. Do you consider that the Haitians residing in the district of Hinche were subjected to ill treatment or were unduly oppressed by the gendarmerie?

Ver. No, sir.

Question. Did you ever see or hear of any confidential reports, confidential telegrams, or confidential messages being received in Major Wells's office relating to the alleged killings and the corvée after the order abolishing corvée had been given, in the vicinity of Hinche or Maissade?

Ver. No, sir; so far as I know no such messages ever came to his office.

Question. Would you have been in a position to have known had such confidential messages or telegrams been received?

Ver. Not necessarily, although Major Wells usually gave me all reports received.

Question. Did you ever hear of any confidential reports, confidential telegrams or confidential messages of any kind disappearing from Major Wells's

Answer. No, sir.

14. Question. Were you intimately associated with Maj. Clarke while he was department commander?

Answer. Yes, sir.

15. Question. During that time did you live with him?

Answer. No, sir; but I lived in the same town with him, and saw him practically every day.

16. Question. During this time did you ever see Major Wells under the influence of intoxicating liquor?

Answer. No, sir.

17. Question. Do you know Mr. Frederick Baker, formerly an officer in the Haitian gendarmerie?

Answer. Yes.

18. Question. Please state what you know in regard to his character and general reputation among his associates in Haiti.

Answer. By hearsay from American business men and gendarmes I know that he is an agitator and is not loyal to his superior officers, and I do not ascribe any incident that he may have personal knowledge of. I would not believe any statement he ever made to be a fact, and I have never seen statements made by him that were absolutely incorrect, according to the best sources of hearsay information.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS
WASHINGTON

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this the 8th day of January, 1919.

H. LAY.

*Lieutenant Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector
United States Marine Corps*

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1919.

Clarke H. Wells, major, United States Marine Corps, having been called as a witness, and having been informed of his right to decline to answer questions, was duly sworn, and testified before me, Lieut. Col. H. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, United States Marine Corps, as follows:

(NOTE.—Before commencing the testimony of Major Wells attention was called to the confidential report of the brigade commander, First Provisional Brigade, United States Marines, Port au Prince, Haiti, to the Major General Commanding, dated December 7, 1919. In paragraph 2 it is stated that from an investigation of the report it appears that in the north of Haiti, in violation of the law of October 1, 1918, suspending the application of the corvée law, this law was in effect in certain sections after that date by order of the gendarmerie commander, Maj. Clarke H. Wells, United States Marine Corps. The leading, as Major Wells at that time was department commander at Lavoie was the district commander where this corvée was alleged to have been put into effect. Major Wells was in command of the entire department comprising 7 districts, and was 90 miles away from this district at this time.)

1. Question. Please state your name, rank, and present station.

Answer. Clark H. Wells, major, United States Marine Corps, in charge of Marine Corps recruiting station, Washington, D. C.

2. Question. Have you recently been on duty with the Haitian gendarmerie, and, if so, what was your rank and title while on such duty? Also, where were you stationed and what duties were assigned to and performed by you between what dates?

Answer. I was detached from the Haitian gendarmerie on May 17, 1918, at that time I held the rank of colonel in command of the department of the north with headquarters at Cape Haitien, Haiti. To the best of my knowledge I joined the gendarmerie on May 6, 1918, and was on duty all the time between those dates. I joined the gendarmerie first as an inspector, had charge of the road system in north Haiti, and also in command of the civil prison system in Haiti, which was then in the process of construction. I was also assigned to regular inspection duty in that department. I was appointed colonel in the gendarmerie on the 16th of December, 1918.

3. Question. Can you give the names, and rank, of some of the principal officers under your command and subject to your orders?

r. In the north I had Captain Bartel as inspector; Captain Chaffee as master; Major Hayes as quartermaster; Captain Doxey in command of d Company at Cape Haitien, and Lieutenant Bowley, his assistant; at River, Captain Hamilton; at Ouanaminthe, Captain Verdier; at Hinche, Lavole; Lieutenant Williams at Maissade; Captain Howell at Port de Captain Hannigan at the remount station; Captain Hartman at Letrou; nt Cates at the civilian prison, Cape Haitien; and Captain Gibbons at station. During your service with the Haitien gendarmerie in Hinche ssade and elsewhere, were you aware of the existence of any compul-ée, subsequent to the receipt of the order of October 1, 1918, suspending the law? If so, please state particulars.

r. After the receipt of the order of October 1, 1918, abolishing corvée, est of my knowledge as far as I could find out during my inspections, is no compulsory labor, meaning corvée.

question. Between what dates, approximately, was corvée lawfully oper-the department under your charge?

r. Corvée was first started when the road system of Haiti was in of construction, by order of the chief of the gendarmerie—that was the art of 1916.

question. Did you at any time observe personally, or receive any report, of s of abuse or ill treatment of members of corvée by members of the gen- p?

r. I visited Hinche as frequently as my other duties would let me, and lant ever reached me from any civilians, or anybody in authority there, l treatment of natives or members of the corvée, nor were any members orvée ill treated by members of the gendarmerie.

question. Did you at any time subsequent to October 1, 1919, issue any or give your tacit consent, for the convening of compulsory corvée for tion work in your district?

r. No; I had personal charge of 65 miles of road between Cape Haitien natives. After the corvée was abolished these laborers were paid by me ek. The road to Hinche was in charge of the district commander of Captain Lavole, who as a member of the communal council at Maissade taxes which the people were required to pay for bringing in their goods for the purpose of paying for this labor. This was with the consent of strate there, as the people were very desirous for this road.

question. Did you ever see, or hear, that Caco prisoners had been taken l executed without trial?

r. When General Catlin made his inspection in Hinche the latter part h, 1919, it was found that several prisoners had been shot. This was General Catlin by several natives who were interrogated by him at that This was the first intimation that I had had of anything of this nature. lants ever reached me from any source as to any shootings up to this question. Following the attack by bandits upon Maissade, on or about No- 1, 1918, did you express the wish to any of your junior officers that isoners, if undesirable or worthless, be "bumped off"?

r. Never.

question. Did you hear it spoken of among the gendarmerie that it was ary to execute, or "bump off" Caco prisoners and to make no report of fairs to high authority?

r. Never.

question. Was any report made to you, or did you ever hear, that Capt. avole had executed some 19 Caco prisoners in or near Hinche in January, If so, was any investigation made by you at the time and what action

r. General Williams and myself visited Hinche in January, 1919, and things in good order, with the exception that roving bands of bandits district who robbed the market women, burned the houses, and in gen- rified the natives, was reported. The strength of the gendarmier's detach- n duty there in central Haiti was approximately 100 men and officers. was 90 miles from Cape Haitien; all supplies had to be sent through on rains. It was my opinion that the officers on duty there were very active. ad completed one of the finest barracks buildings in the gendarmerie. tric light plant was installed there, and the place was generally in excellent condition. Numerous bands of bandits were reported from time to time; some of these reports were rumors and rumors travel very fast in that country while other reports were actual facts. I think the natives had the habit of knowing they had the habit, of exaggerating and lying to a great extent. The reason was reenforced by the cavalry from Port au Prince, and several adjutant officers would come up for two or three weeks for patrol duty, and then return. On my numerous visits to Hinche the officers seemed interested in their work, especially the construction work of building up the country. They seemed contented in the vicinity of Hinche, and there were no real evidences of any forced labor, except by prisoners. The jail contained approximately 60 men and women during my trips there. I never saw any cruel treatment of prisoners or the inhabitants.

12. Question. Were you well acquainted with Captain Doxey, and if so was your opinion of his ability as an officer and reputation for veracity? your personal relations friendly or otherwise?

Answer. Captain Doxey and myself were good friends; we were together in northern Haiti during all of our service down there, and I would doubt what he said for a minute. He was always truthful and honest in his work; he was very thorough, painstaking, and a good all around dependable man. My personal relations with Captain Doxey were always friendly. He is of a retiring nature, sensitive, and a man of few words. He was respected by the better element of natives. The bad element during service in Hinche tried to kill him because he was doing his duty. On account of his upholding the law and looking out for the interests of the better element of the people, he was attacked in his house one night at Hinche by bandits who were armed with rifles and knives. At this time he displayed great courage. He was by himself, and finally succeeded after the alarm had been given in quelling the disturbance and driving the bandits out into the country. He sent a report to Cape Haitien recounting the circumstances, saying that he was all right and did not need help. A number of bandits were killed during the attack. I consider Doxey one of the most dependable officers in the service. He was very patient with the Haitians, listened to all their troubles, and had many friends among the better element.

13. Question. Have you any knowledge of the circumstances attending the death of Garnier, the notary, at the house occupied by Lieutenant Williams in Malssade?

Answer. It was reported to me, verbally, that this man had been shot during a daylight attack on that town. The officer in charge, Lieutenant Williams, seemed to think that Garnier was implicated in the attack, as the bandits went into town through his house, and were firing from his house. Lieutenant Williams was alone in Malssade at this time. This affair took place about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Lieutenant Williams was in his own house, in the square; he heard the shots and immediately went outside to find out what was going on. He stated to me that the bandits were firing all around him, and that in order to protect himself he got his men in the best shape he could. He gave notice and returned the fire, and finally succeeded in driving them off. A number had been killed. Just how many actually were killed I do not remember. It was during this attack, it was reported, that Garnier was killed. He was dead in his house.

14. Question. What was the attitude of Frederick Baker toward you when he was a gendarmerie officer?

Answer. He was my assistant in the road business; had command of the district of Gonaives, which is 65 miles from Cape Haitien, over the mountains. Our relations were always pleasant. When his enlistment expired in the Marine Corps he was released from the gendarmerie and joined the T. Products Co. which was then organizing in Haiti. I saw him very often after this as he was working in a different part of the country. I did not, however, and it was talked about among the other officers of the gendarmerie that he seemed to avoid further relationship with any of the officers attached to the gendarmerie.

15. Question. What, in your opinion, were the principal causes for the unrest prevalent in the Republic of Haiti?

Answer. The principal cause was, I think, when Charlemagne escaped from prison at Cape Haitien by bribing a gendarme. This man had great influence over a large number of people, he was educated, and circulated all the propaganda about the American occupation. There was no trouble except in the general police cases, throughout the north until his escape from jail. The people were all afraid of him and he got recruits every place he went by at he was there to drive the whites out of Haiti. Before the corvee finished he spread great discontent by circulating the report that the whites were there to make slaves out of them. The Haitians are very superstitious, rumors and news travel very fast, and they have the habit of lying. Haiti, composed of six districts of the most mountainous part of the country, about 150 miles across and about 90 miles wide, the quota of gendarmes territory was about 960 men divided between the different districts. Question. Do you feel justified in stating that there were no illegal executions of native prisoners in the department under your charge? Answer. Yes; except in the instance of the investigation at Hinche, by Capt. Catlin, in March, 1919, of which I never knew the outcome, what the decision was, or the attendant circumstances. About this particular I knew nothing, it having never been reported to me—if it took place

Question. Admitting that natives were in some instances executed without trial, and without official report of same being made to higher authority, is it your opinion that such killings were justifiable under the circumstances? Answer. I do not think that any killings are justifiable without trial, except in the case of bandits in the hills, who are armed and trying to escape and have arms and ammunition in their possession, as happened in numerous cases. Question. Do you consider that the Haitians residing in your department were subjected to ill treatment or were unduly oppressed by the Haitian gendarmerie?

Answer. I do not; I think they were better treated than they had ever been before in their lives. During the time that I commanded in the north nobody was in jail without a trial, as had been done before the gendarmerie was organized; the communes had more money; the taxes were collected regularly, and roads were made passable both for automobile and carts; bandits were suppressed from pillaging the inhabitants; disputes among the natives were settled and everything was done to improve conditions. At this point the witness submitted to the examining officer certain letters which he requested be made a part of his testimony. The letters are as follows:

GENDARMERIE D'HAITI,
QUARTIER GENERAL,
Port au Prince, February 14, 1917.

Chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti.
Commandant Clarke H. Wells, inspector gendarmerie d'Haiti.
Subject: Road work.

The following indorsement, signed by the commander Department of the Gendarmerie, appears on your road report for the month of January, 1917:

"Attention of the chief of the gendarmerie is invited to the fact that under the supervision of Major Wells the amount of work accomplished in road construction has greatly increased per month. This is undoubtedly due to the attention given the work by this officer and to the efficient manner in which he has expended the funds given him."

General Cole, to whose attention this indorsement was brought by the undersigned, stated to me that you are doing exceptionally fine work at the present time and it gives me great pleasure to add my approbation to that of all who have visited your department.

Good road work largely depends the future of this country and it is for this reason it is particularly gratifying to hear such praise as is given your

ALEXANDER S. WILLIAMS,

Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, Port au Prince.

In reply to this legation's dispatch transmitting your report for the month of August 5, 1918, addressed to the Secretary of State, in which you stated "the road work is progressing satisfactorily, and that Maj. C. H.
Capt. C. F. Baker, and Capt. Ernest Lavoie, of the gendarmerie, can not be too highly for their energy and resourcefulness," the Department directs me to inform you that because of its desire for the improvement of conditions in Haiti, it is particularly pleased to learn of the progress being made in road construction and to request you to express to the forementioned the real appreciation of the department for their work in connection with the road between Cape Haitien and Hinche.

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. BAILEY-BLANCHARD,

American Minister.

GENDARMERIE D'HAITI,
QUARTIER GENERAL,

Port au Prince, Haiti, January 31, 1919.

Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

Clarke H. Wells, Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

Inspection of the Department of the Cape.

The completion of my recent inspection of the Department of the Cape, under your command, I have to inform you that I found little to criticize and much to commend. The great improvement made in barracks and quarters, in personnel, in roads, in prisons, in hospitals, and in the communes served by your officers reflect great credit on your conduct of affairs.
As much of the improvement, even allowing for the work of your subordinates, is evidently due to your ability, energy, and initiative.
A copy of this letter will be attached to your record.

ALEX. S. WILLIAMS.

Question. Did you ever receive any confidential messages as to conditions in your department; and if so, were those confidential reports ever from your files or lost?

Mr. I never received any confidential reports.

Question. Did you ever receive any confidential telegrams or messages regarding the actual state of affairs at Hinche and Maissade in regard to corvee imposed after the order was issued abolishing it, or about any unlawful deportation of natives in or near those towns?

Mr. No. No telegrams of this nature were ever received by me.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS,

Washington, D. C., January 12, 1920.

CLARKE H. WELLS, United States Marine Corps, was recalled as a witness having been informed that his previous oath was binding and of his decline to answer any incriminating question, further testified as follows:

Question. Did you ever intimate to any member of the gendarmerie that he did not care to receive reports about prisoners?

Answer. I never intimated that I did not care to receive such reports from the gendarmerie regulations called for regular inspections and reports from the prisoners by the inspecting officers attached to the department, and these reports of inspection were always written up and remain in the department commander's files at Cape Haitien. The district commanders made written reports of the conditions existing in their districts at the end of each month and sent them to the chief of the gendarmerie. These reports are on file by me with the records of the gendarmerie.

2. Question. Did you ever receive any messages?

Answer. Lots of messages were received each day over the telegraph from outlying stations and districts.

3. Question. It has been stated by witnesses that the telegrams sent from the Department of the North have disappeared. Do you know where they are?

Answer. At the time I was detached from Cape Haitien, May 17, 1918, orders and telegrams were there as I had received them. I know nothing of the loss of any of them.

4. Question. Why were the papers referred to kept under lock and key?

Answer. The drawer of the department commander's desk was kept locked and papers relative to watching the activities of certain natives were kept there; also personal letters from the chief of the gendarmerie, all of which remain there.

5. Question. You stated in answer to question 20 that no confidential reports were received by you. How do you account for the discrepancy between the answers to questions 9 and 10 in the testimony of Capt. Laurence B. Williams?

Answer. Upon visiting the Third Company's office one time, which was then as a police station also, in which there were always a number of natives, I instructed Lieutenant Bolte to keep the telegraph file out of sight, as it was often related to watching the movements of certain natives who were under suspicion, and I thought that it might be read by those about.

6. Question. After General Catlin's visit to your department, in which he found that it was alleged that corvée was practiced after the issuance of the order of October 1, 1918, and also that some prisoners had been killed, what steps did you take to correct this?

Answer. In order that there would be no further doubt about how the situation was carried on, all work was suspended. General Williams, who was then present, issued written orders on the spot that no prisoners under any circumstances would be unlawfully shot, and these orders were dispatched by special messenger, throughout the department.

7. Question. Lieutenant Williams has testified that certain prisoners had been killed and that he had made written reports of these killings to the district commander. Were any of these prisoners ever reported to you by the district commander under whom Lieutenant Williams was serving; and, if so, did you make any report to Colonel Williams?

Answer. I remember certain reports of operations made by Lieutenant Williams. I can not say whether they mentioned any killings of prisoners. I forwarded these papers to Colonel Williams. These reports were of the general bandit situation as far as I remember. I also made reports to Port au Prince during this time and talked over the situation with Colonel Williams.

8. Question. Did you ever tell Captain Hamilton that General Williams' orders, prohibiting shooting of prisoners, did not apply unless the prisoners were actually in prison?

Answer. No. I gave no instructions whatsoever to Captain Hamilton concerning this, as he already had the gendarmerie orders.

9. Question. Did you tell Captain Hamilton that he should go on with his killing prisoners and say nothing about it?

Answer. No. I never mentioned to any officer or man, during my service in Haiti, anything about executing anybody. The question never entered my head.

In this connection, I would like to supplement my answer to question 10 in my former testimony, by saying that I did receive confidential reports in telegrams in code, all of which remain on file.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of January, 1930

*Lieutenant-Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector
United States Marine Corps*

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6.

DER S. WILLIAMS, lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps, then called as a witness, and having been informed of his right to answer any incriminating questions, was duly sworn, and testified. Lieut. Col. H. R. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, United States Marine Corps, as follows:

Question. Please state your name, rank, and present station.

Answer. Alexander S. Williams, lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps, stationed at Marine Barracks, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.

Question. What duty were you performing from May, 1915, to July, 1919?

Answer. I was chief of the Haitian Gendarmerie from May, 1918, until July, 1919. I was assistant chief from the organization of the gendarmerie in May, 1918.

Question. Did you ever hear that Caco prisoners had been taken to a place near Hinche and shot? If so, please state what steps were taken by you to verify this statement.

Answer. Yes; during a visit of inspection made by Brigadier General Catlin to Hinche, in January, 1919. General Catlin interrogated gendarmes, local officials, the local priest, enlisted gendarmes, and in relation to certain reports which he told me had been received by these reports alleged that certain prisoners involved in banditism taken from a prison in Hinche, led to a point outside of Hinche, executed by a detachment of enlisted gendarmes. This execution was supported by the statements of one or more gendarmes told by General Catlin. To the best of my recollection, Capt. Ernest who was at the time district commander at Hinche, acknowledged that an execution had taken place. He offered in explanation of this the fact that it was impossible to obtain conviction in the local civil court and that after their trial by a provost court in Cape Haitien, and the execution of the sentences adjudged by such court, that they would return to the neighborhood of Hinche, rejoin the bandits with whom they had been identified, and make the pacification of the region more difficult. The investigation was conducted by General Catlin, and the allegations supported, except as to the exact number executed. No steps were taken by me to verify this statement or to investigate the allegations, for at that time Hinche was under the direct military control of the commander of the 1st Division of the north Haiti, who received his orders from the brigade commander, Provisional Brigade, United States Marines, Port au Prince. I was not present at this investigation, but was present during part of it.

Question. What duty was Maj. Clarke H. Wells, United States Marine Corps, performing during the latter part of 1918 and the beginning of 1919?

Answer. Maj. Clarke H. Wells at that time was department commander, Department of the Cape, which department included the district of Hinche.

Question. Did you consult with Major Wells from time to time as to how the investigation was going on in his department, and was the killing of prisoners ever mentioned?

Answer. Yes; the killing of prisoners in custody was never discussed, but reports were given that every effort should be made to distinguish between those who were actually involved in operations against bandits and those who were in the vicinity of the operations or who might have become associated with them against their will.

Question. Would it have been possible for 6 or 19 prisoners to have been taken at any one time in the Hinche district without your knowing about it?

Answer. Yes.

Question. In conversation with Captain Lavole and Lieutenant Williams, was the question of execution of prisoners ever mentioned?

Answer. No; except along the broad lines of general treatment of natives and suppression of banditism.

Question. During your service with the Haitian gendarmerie, did you ever hear of Wells under the influence of intoxicating liquor?

Answer. No.

Question. What is your opinion as to the character and veracity of Major Wells?

Answer. I consider Captain Doxey (then major in the gendarmerie) to be an excellent man of very fine feeling. He was noted among gendarmerie officers for his understanding of and sympathy with the natives. He was successful in the administration of gendarmerie affairs and had the confidence and respect of the natives to a marked degree. This was not due to his temperament alone, but to his thorough understanding of the native dialect (Creole), which he spoke and understood better than any commissioned officer of the Marine Corps serving in the gendarmerie. I have found in every official and personal dealing with Captain Doxey, this officer, to be very careful in his statements, and I have had any reason to suppose or believe that he was not absolutely truthful in any of his statements.

10. Question. Did you ever see or hear of any order being issued by Captain Clarke H. Wells putting into effect the corvée law, after October, 1918, in the northern department where he was commanding?

Answer. No.

11. Question. It has been stated that corvée was seen in operation in January, 1919, near Maissade, where two groups of between 50 and 75 men were working on the road and a third group of about 45 men in the place near Maissade. Please state what you know about this.

Answer. General Catlin informed me that Colonel Hooker had reported the existence of corvée in the neighborhood of Maissade and directed that an investigation be made. I assured him at the time that no corvée was in operation and that my orders relative thereto were being carried out throughout Haiti. I had passed through Maissade two or three times and had seen no road gangs the composition of which, or the attitude of which, led me to believe that corvée was being carried on. I had seen men working under the charge of a single gendarme, who was in charge of the road construction. The belief inspired by my observations was based on reports to the effect that the road work in this neighborhood was being conducted by volunteer labor and that the cost of this labor, which was paid for from Federal funds, was being paid from communal funds. On the occasion of General Catlin's visit in January, when I was present, a road gang of perhaps 50 men were working to the westward of Maissade. A number of this gang were interrogated by General Catlin through the interpreter, Holly, a Haitian, and practically all stated that they were forced to work. General Catlin asked those who had been forced to work and wanted to return to their farms to step to the front. Practically the entire gang stepped to the front.

While the party was still present Captain Doxey, if I remember correctly, without the aid of an interpreter, reinterrogated them; and Captain Doxey told me at that place and time that with the exception of a very few, all had stated that they were not forced to do this work; that they were to leave when they wished, and that from time to time they took advantage of this freedom and returned to their farms in the vicinity. The answer to the number stated in this question, I believe, was made by Lieutenant Hooker. As a result of the contradictory statements made by the members of the road gang I could form no definite conclusion at that time as to whether or not these men had been, as alleged, forcibly collected, forcibly drafted, and forcibly worked; and, as stated in an earlier question, the military administration of this district having devolved upon the district commander of the north of Haiti, I made no further investigation. I did, however, direct that all road work in that neighborhood cease. I further directed Lieutenant Williams, an enlisted man of the Marine Corps serving as an officer in the gendarmerie, to let me know how many men of this gang returned to their farms or wanted to work at the beginning of the following week. My recollection is that he reported that a fair percentage had shown up the following week for road work.

12. Question. Do you know if Major Wells knew that corvée was still in operation after October, 1918?

Answer. Assuming that corvée was in operation after the date stated, with the exception of corvée which, due to a misinterpretation of my orders, was carried on for about a week subsequent to that time, I can not state.

13. Question. Would it have been possible for corvée to have been in operation after October, 1918, without the knowledge of Major Wells in his department?

Answer. To a very limited extent, yes.

14. Question. Do you know of any confidential telegrams or messages sent to the gendarmerie department commander of the north of Haiti, or of the actual state of affairs at Hinche and Maissade? If so, please state the substance of such confidential telegrams or messages.

That question can only be answered in a general way. Much of the telegraphic work, especially that involving troop movements and of patrols, was transmitted in code. Every department commander had a copy of this code, and I presume that were received by Major Wells that were confidential to an extent at arranting coding. I have no knowledge of messages sent by district commanders, except where the message was sent in duplicate a report based upon the message referred to the message or incor-e message in a communication. I have no knowledge of confidential tions to which I might not properly have had access. tion. Please state what you know of Major Wells's duty in connec'tion gendarmerie.

Major Wells served under me from early in the organization of the ie until early in 1919. For the first part of this period he was in charge of road construction in north Haiti; this was during the opera-vée. He relieved Maj. R. O. Underwood, United States Marine Corps, ment commander at a date subsequent to the abolition of corvée. Dur-Wells's incumbency he devoted himself to road construction, barracks a construction, and the general well-being of the gendarmerie and the habitants in the north. He brought about marked improvements in the sons, and barracks, and the welfare of the prisoners. The improve-conditions in the gendarmerie of north Haiti and in the administration nmunals was marked. To accomplish these results he worked harder ed his officers under him harder than any senior officer in the gen-tion. Do you consider that he efficiently occupied his position as de-commander of the north?

Major Wells I consider the most efficient and successful department er who has ever served in the gendarmerie.

tion. Did you know Mr. Frederick Baker, formerly in the gendar-And if so, please state his attitude toward Major Wells?

Mr. Baker, who had a commission finally as captain in the gen-and who was, I believe, a sergeant in the Marine Corps, was asso-ith the gendarmerie almost from the beginning. As a junior officer strict commander of Gonaives he had a model command and post. He ned to road work, I think, by Gen. S. D. Butler, but this assignment e been made subsequent to my assuming command. He was in charge ad work from Gonaives over the mountains toward Cape Haitien, and is work operated what was probably the largest corvée ever used. He ly successful in his conduct of road work, and except for such abuses as idental to the operation of corvée I never heard any complaint of his. Latterly he was associated with Major Wells as his assistant in road d to the best of my knowledge his relations with Major Wells were , as they were with all officers of the gendarmerie—myself notably. considered at that time one of the most efficient officers in the gendar-much so that I endeavored to obtain for him a temporary commission in ne Corps. Some time in 1918 Captain Baker, who extended his enlist-one year on the strength of my promise that he would be put in f growing castor beans, which the gendarmerie was to undertake at the of the War Department, was offered a position in civil life in Haiti as very attractive. He was discharged from the Marine Corps upon nmenation and took up his new work. From his entry into civil life er stopped practically all relations with the officers under whom and om he had served. This attitude was so marked as to cause comment. eason was ever advanced for it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1920.

NT OF LIEUT. COL. A. S. WILLIAMS, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, RELATIVE TAIN IRREGULARITIES ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN COMMITTED BY OFFICERS AND ED MEN IN THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

placed on duty in connection with the organization of the gendarmerie st or September, 1915; I was commissioned by the President of Haiti as chief of the gendarmerie about the middle of 1917. In that capacity until May, 1918, when I was commissioned chief of gendarmerie, re-leaving Gen. S. D. Butler at that date. General Butler had been on leave about two months prior to this, so that my actual conduct of general affairs began about March, 1918. I served as chief of the gendarmes July 19, 1919, when I was relieved and ordered to the United States.

2. In order to build certain public roads which were considered necessary for the commercial development of Haiti, and also for the military of the Republic, free labor known as "corvée" was used. This free labor was available by virtue of certain provisions of the Haitian laws contained in the code rural. The necessities of the public works demanded a greater amount of labor than was available, in any one locality, and it was therefore necessary in obtaining the supply of labor, to ignore, to a certain extent, the provisions of the law bearing on this matter. This consisted principally in ignoring the provision of the law which provided that country people were to work near the locality in which they lived, in holding them for longer periods than the law permitted, and on work not contemplated by law. The results of the exploitation of labor were two, first, it created in the minds of the people a dislike for the American occupation and its two instruments—the marine and the gendarmerie; and, second, imbued the native enlisted man with a false conception of his relations with the civil population. As the corvée came more and more unpopular, more and more difficulty was experienced in obtaining men, and this difficulty caused the gendarmes to resort to methods which were often brutal, but quite consistent with their training under the officials. I soon realized that one of the great causes of American unpopularity among the Haitians was the corvée, and determined to put a stop to the practice. For various reasons it was not considered a good policy to stop the road work had been completed. After consultation with the military commander, the American minister, American treaty officer, and the President of Haiti, and his cabinet, I announced that corvée would stop entirely. This announcement, if my memory serves me, was followed by a formal announcement that corvée would cease; and in October, 1918, I issued an order definitely stopping all corvée of any sort throughout the island. This order was not issued by the President of Haiti, but was issued by me on my own responsibility. The order was enthusiastically received by the Haitians, but by the gendarmerie officials in general, practically all of whom realized the evils which corvée had brought about and welcomed the opportunity to reestablish themselves in the good graces of the inhabitants as well as to take up their more legitimate work of organizing and training the military police. On the date set, so far as my personal investigation reports, and information from other sources could inform me, all corvée stopped with one exception. The original order stopping corvée was drawn up to indicate certain road work, and the road work listed in the order was to be covered, although it was intended to cover, road work being carried on with Federal funds. It must be understood that the road work in general was being carried on with what might be called Federal funds. I found that my order stopping the general knowledge that it was intended to stop corvée throughout the island, had been misinterpreted by the department commander of the department of the cape. I think at that date that this officer was Maj. R. O. L. of the United States Marine Corps. As soon as this was brought to my attention, perhaps a week after corvée had stopped throughout the island, I directed the department commander of the cape, by telephone, to cease all corvée of whatever nature, paid for from whatever funds. This order was carried out to the best of my knowledge. The work which was being carried on was paid for out of communal funds, and which was in violation of my order stopping corvée on the road Malsade-Hinche. From that date on I heard no report of the knowledge of corvée being used in Haiti.

3. Some time subsequent to this General Catlin told me that he had observed the corvée being used in the neighborhood of Malsade. This I investigated during November, 1918. He directed that I make an investigation of the corvée; I directed the department commander, Major V. B. Catlin, to investigate. Between the date when corvée was stopped by order and November, 1918, work had been continued on the Malsade-Hinche road, using paid labor and prisoners. During this period I had been over this road three or four times and saw no evidence of corvée being used. I saw no natives, aggregating, perhaps, 50 or 60 men, working on the road with more guard than the single gendarme in charge of the work. These gangs resembled the corvée gangs working in this region or in any other part of Haiti; and their manner of working, their remoteness from the ce of guards, found so necessary in corvée work, led me to believe e were volunteer paid laborers. If coercion was used at all it is that the coercion consisted simply in the issuance of an "invitation," the only word that could have been used in French, or Creole, for come to work. How this notice was conveyed to the country people know positively, but I presume it was made known to them by enlisted s and local representatives of the Haitian Government. This would ly regular, and, provided they were adequately paid and free to leave when they chose, would not be open to criticism. It is alleged that s used in bringing these men to work; that they were restrained by kept at work long after their little farms called for their presence. om the difficulty of defining just what is forced labor under these nces, I am not convinced that corvée was actually used on that road. ells reported that no corvée was used, but in view of reports sub- General Catlin, General Catlin decided to investigate himself, and me that he wished to visit northern Haiti, and, further, that he de- to go with him. I do not remember whether or not any notice of the visit was given; I think it must have been, however, for Major et us at Gonaïves. Together with General Catlin the party visited el, Maïssade, and Hinche. At all three places General Catlin interro- ndarmerie officers, local officials, priests, and gendarmes, prisoners, in inhabitants. I was not present at all of the investigations, but vas brought out, even allowing for the unreliability of native testi- indicate that very severe measures had to be taken to put down ; and even allowing for the inexperience and youth of the officers they did not always exercise good judgment. Without entering efense of such errors of judgment it must be borne in mind that white officer placed in military and police control of a district g four or five hundred square miles, swarming with bandits, and egroes, and having at his disposal a very insufficient number ained native police, was apt to take the most direct course under any ance. The case of Lieutenant Williams at Maïssade is a case in eneral Catlin asked if there were any gendarmes who wished to com- the treatment they had received, and one at least testified that he kicked or struck by Lieutenant Williams. This would seem an inex- hibition of brutality, but when it is considered that Williams was a town situated in a country full of bandits, which had been jumped bandits (on one of which occasions the gendarmerie garrison had ven out), his action in striking this man, who was the only sentinel over the gendarmerie barracks, and who was found by him to be n post, the action finds an explanation. I can not remember that I ed up to this time any formal or informal order bearing on the kill- isoners. The gendarmerie regulations provided for this, and gendarmes e guilty of ill treatment of prisoners or killing of prisoners, were ried by either the gendarmerie court-martial or by the civil courts of The sentences adjudged were always very severe, as I controlled the f the gendarmerie courts, and to a certain extent could influence the rts. Several sentences of death were adjudged, and these sentences, r personal presentation of the case to the President of Haiti, were approved by him and the sentences carried out by firing squads. The f these courts is referred to because the President invariably commuted h sentence of civilians to life imprisonment, and in this matter, realiz- racial defects of his own people, aided me in enforcing discipline in armerie in the one matter which gave us the greatest trouble; that is, e of authority by Haitian officials when free from superior control. ile every order issued from gendarmerie headquarters and bearing e relations of the gendarmerie with the civil population was designed e good feeling between the gendarmerie and the civil population, and tempt was made by myself and many others to cultivate such good the allegations made to General Catlin on this inspection trip were to cause the issuance of an order bearing directly upon the treatment ners. Whether or not the suggestion of such an order be issued came neral Catlin or myself I can not say, but an order was issued which hraseology was considered foolproof. The expression "in custody" d in the order, if I remember correctly, and this expression was used to cover the cases of prisoners actually confined, prisoners being taken trail, and prisoners captured during a fight. To the best of my knowledge no report or rumor worthy of credence had ever been received which would warrant the issuance of such an order; and as, by example, by advice, and by order, the policy of the government, the good will of the people had been secured. It is practically prior to this time gendarmerie patrols operating against bandits by an American had killed prisoners, and such patrols were then out unless absolutely necessary. Whenever possible an American went with all patrols. During the visit of inspection of Maissade the inhabitants complained of brutal treatment, some of them could state their statements, which is not remarkable considering the attitude of the Haitian countryman; others, I believed at the time, and were inspired in making these reports by the local priest. The priest, as stated, was not on good terms with the gendarmerie officer, of the gendarmerie officer having cut off certain allowances which were received from the commune. It may be stated at this time that relations between the priests generally and the officers of the gendarmerie, personally pleasant, were officially very unsatisfactory. This lack of feeling was due to the fact that with the coming of the Americans the priest lost the prestige which had been his before. In the north this feeling, I believe, was largely due to the influence of north Haiti, Monseigneur Kersusan. I am more convinced of the relationship and the causes which led to it for the reason I showed in establishing pleasant personal and official relations with the Haitians, the bishop of Port au Prince, and the papal legate. As a result of these relations, I was able to bring about a certain amount of respect for the priests and the gendarmerie officers in central and southern Haiti. I often discussed with the papal legate the attitude of the northern, particularly that of the bishop of the north. From what they said I came to believe that the bishop of the north was considered to be by the Americans an "infant terrible." It was specifically charged at this time that Williams had executed a number of prisoners in his own back yard, testimony as I heard bearing on this was indefinite and contradictory. Williams did acknowledge having killed one escaping prisoner under the pretext, which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, would seem to justify the act. It was also alleged, and not contradicted, that one man had been killed incidental to making an arrest in the country. In this case it is difficult to decide whether or not the arrest could have been made without shooting. Allegations were made that Williams had ordered the execution of people who participated in the first attack on Hinche, which he impounded and either held for exorbitant fees or else released. I do not know whether or not the communal laws bearing on the sale of stolen animals were properly enforced, but it may be stated that they were not enforced with any uniformity in Haiti, and that this was due to neglect of the law to using it as a means of graft. This is a fault which lies largely with the local civil officials, though subject to the control of the American.

3. The mayor of Maissade, Martial Preval, was complained of by the inhabitants. He was accused of extortion, of grafting, of misappropriation of communal funds, and—what was more important from a general point of view—of using corvée on his private properties. It was alleged, though perhaps this allegation was made at a later date, that he had used labor for the construction of a house for one of his various wives. He is a very high type of Haitian and remarkably well educated for a Haitian; he belongs to the ruling class, and his family has always been prominent in that region. His father is or was mayor of a commune in northern Haiti. This man, from the very beginning of American occupation, showed himself more than friendly to the Americans and was the first to draw favorable notice by his action in organizing a posse and capturing bandits. He was given a commendatory letter from the President of the United States. Having thus definitely identified himself with the Americans in the eyes of his countrymen, and as time went on and the communal laws were collected with greater regularity, the local laws which they had been enforced before, Preval's attitude gained force. It is more than probable that Preval was guilty of extortion, but he did use forced labor on his outlying properties. These faults, however, were prevalent among Haitian communal officials. Just what efforts were his actions I can not say, but until this visit I had no reason to suppose anything was radically wrong with the conduct of communal affairs in le. I did know, however, from a personal inspection that the entire of the small town was changed. The streets were clean, a proper established, and the communal revenues increased. If, however, was guilty of all with which he was charged, his actions must have heavily on the inhabitants, and as he was apparently doing these things ie knowledge, consent, and active aid of the gendarmerie officers any of hostility held by the natives against the gendarmerie must have been led.

While visiting Hinche, General Catlin interrogated people of every class, ing the officers and men of the gendarmerie. It was alleged that a of natives had been executed in an open space in front of the gendarmerie quarters by machine-gun fire. This allegation was denied by the commander, Captain Lavole, and all knowledge of such an occurrence denied by enlisted men of the gendarmerie, who should have been cognizant of such an affair. At the time the alleged execution took place two men of the Marine Corps were stationed at Hinche with a Lewis machine gun. I can not state positively whether or not these two men were there at the time of General Catlin's visit. I do not remember at the time who made these allegations, but I believe they were made by a local inhabitant.

It was further alleged and substantiated, as I remember, that a number of prisoners were taken from the jail where they had been confined and executed about a half a mile outside of town. I believe the gendarmes took part in this execution were examined by General Catlin and acknowledged the charge in part, differing from the allegation in respect to the number of prisoners.

While the use of corvée on road work had been alleged, its use in the neighborhood of Hinche was alleged mostly in connection with the construction of gendarmerie barracks. Specifically it was stated that all the male inhabitants of a certain rural section called "Zeb Guinea" had been collected, taken to Hinche, placed at work on the construction of a barracks wall, and kept on this work for a considerable time. There was some question as to the amount of money paid these men, but they were paid something. This had been taken by Captain Lavole as a military measure and designed to clear out a section touching on the no man's land between Haiti and Santo Domingo, which was an asylum for bandits for both Haiti and Santo Domingo. Captain Lavole stated that working these men on barracks construction was incidental.

Banditism was alleged generally by the civil officials, and, I believe, by the priests, and banditism in central Haiti was the result of illegal acts committed by the gendarmerie in this region, and that between the bandits and the gendarmes the inhabitants did not know which way to turn. This to a certain extent is true. The bandits were only partly armed, wore no uniform, and would scatter at the approach of a gendarmerie patrol. When such a patrol established contact with a group of bandits a few shots would be fired by these, and the bandits would scatter in all directions, and with them would go the inhabitants of that particular locality, especially those who had willingly or otherwise furnished food to the bandits, and who felt that they were guilty with them.

In the pursuit it is more than probable that innocent inhabitants were killed. So far as my own orders were concerned, and so far as concerns those issued by officers under me, every attempt was made to distinguish between bandits and those who were involved in banditism against their will. I have no knowledge that Major Wells, the department commander, ever issued any order contravening mine, or, of his own initiative, issued any order contrary to my expressed and generally known wishes regarding the treatment of bandits, whether under arms or not.

On the return of General Catlin and myself to Port au Prince in January, General Catlin desired that Captain Lavole and Lieutenant Williams be sent from Hinche and Malssade. I ordered to Hinche Captain Doney. His disposition and reputation was that of kindness, sympathy for the natives, and more perfect knowledge of native dialects than any other senior officer of the gendarmerie.

Detachment of marines had been ordered to Hinche and outlying posts, the marines restricted to ordinary police work within the town, and Lieut. Col. Hooker placed in military command of the affected central region. What dispositions were made subsequent to that by General Catlin, by Colonel Wells, or other marine officers I do not know.

11. Knowing Haiti as I do, it is difficult for me to believe that the which had its origin in or about Hinche and spread rapidly to the south, and west from there, attaining its maximum in Mirabais, hobs, was due to specific misconduct or misadministration on the part of an officer. Hinche, even during Spanish colonial times, has been a center of revolution and banditism.

Long before corvée was used in this region Hinche was attacked by the hands, the first attack taking place while Captain Doxey, who was then in command, enjoyed the confidence and liking of the natives to a marked degree. It is impossible for me to believe that the application of corvée within a limited area would have such an effect. I am, therefore, confident and my belief is founded on most careful thought, that the banditism of Haiti, which grew almost to the proportions of a revolution, was due to causes.

12. The first of these causes was the illegal general application of corvée; second, the racial antagonism between the negro and the white; third, the virtual loss of national independence; fourth, the economic conditions created about by the war.

In assigning these reasons I wish to make it clear that had these causes not been stressed and played upon by Haitian leaders, the outbreak would never have occurred and the natives would have remained quiescent under almost any system of abuse, as they rested quietly for a hundred years under graver abuses inflicted by their own people.

3. Assuming that the corvée was illegally applied in the neighborhood of Hinche and Maissade and in defiance of my clear orders on the subject, further, assuming that the allegations of indiscriminate and unjust application are true, it is not difficult to understand how these things could have happened without the knowledge of responsible seniors. With the best of the world the amount of administrative work thrust upon all gendarmes made it impossible to properly supervise the details of local administration. Reports and rumors seem to justify an investigation into any case of investigation itself was attended with every difficulty. Generally in the native has no knowledge of the time, dates, or distance (his own witness caused me to approve gendarmierie courts-martial with reluctance), and the amount of work involved in any investigation is often out of all proportion to the results obtained. It was therefore in making an inspection trip to judge conditions by what one saw and was told. Another index, and one upon which I myself depended, was showing the mental attitude of the natives, which attitude was of the reflex of the attitude of the gendarmierie toward them, was whether the natives when met on the road showed no desire to avoid meeting them. This was not true where the corvée had been worked. At the very least the corvée was alleged to have been terrorizing the natives in Hinche and the weekly markets in Maissade were crowded by country people as they had been before. Than this attendance on market days there is no barometer of the state of feeling among the natives with regard to the gendarmes and security. If there were any underlying signs of dissatisfaction among the well-disposed country people, I failed to see them; and while the inquiries of my subordinates could and should have gone more into detail than was possible that they, too, failed to note any reasons for suspecting that the natives were not well.

14. In conclusion it may be stated that the efforts of practically all gendarmierie officers were devoted to improving the condition of the natives and gain their good will. This they did because of a liking for and sympathy with the natives and to make the conditions of their own service more comfortable. Officers who failed to conduct themselves in this fashion, whether they were enlisted in the Marine Corps, were detached from the gendarmierie, had no knowledge of corvée carried on contrary to orders or of the killing of natives, except as stated, nor have I knowledge of any orders which would authorize or justify any such action.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS
Washington

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 7th day of January, 1920.

*Lieutenant Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector
United States Marine Corps*

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1920.

MAS L. WILLIAMS, sergeant, United States Marine Corps, having been as a witness and having been informed of his right to decline to answer incriminating question, was duly sworn and testified before me, Lieut. Col. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, United States Marine Corps, as follows:

Question. What is your name, rank, and present station?

Answer. Dorcas Lee Williams, sergeant, United States Marine Corps, stationed at marine barracks, navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Question. Have you recently been on duty with the Haitian Gendarmerie; so, what was your rank and title while employed on such duty; also where you stationed and what duties were assigned to and performed by you?

Answer. Yes, sir; as a second lieutenant of the Haitian Gendarmerie. I was assigned in the district of Hinche from November 12, 1918, to March 18 or 19, 1919, was performing patrol duty. I was in Maissade from December 28, 1918, to the time in March, 1919; the rest of the time I was in Cerce Corjal, which is the district of Hinche, guarding the town and performing patrol duty.

I was in Maissade I was in charge of road work; I was subdistrict commander and looked out for the duties of the district in general.

Question. Who was your immediate commanding officer while serving with the Gendarmerie? If more than one, state names and dates between which you served under each. Did you at any time have independent command of any company or any commune or district?

Answer. Capt. Ernest Lavole; he was the only one who was really my immediate commanding officer. I never had any command that could be called independent.

Question. While serving with the gendarmerie did you ever see or hear or know of any Caco prisoners? If so, state particulars.

Answer. No, sir; except prisoners trying to escape.

Question. While serving with the gendarmerie were you aware of the coming of any corvée, compulsory or voluntary, subsequent to the receipt of the decree of October 1, 1918, suspending the corvée law? If so, state your knowledge of facts in the premises.

Answer. There was no corvée, as I would call it, as the people who worked the land all paid for the work they did. My understanding of corvée is compulsory labor, feed, and imprisonment. The men who were working on the roads for the commune were paid by the magistrate from communal funds, and I received all payments. From the time I came into the Maissade district all the work which was being performed by native labor was paid for and was not free.

Question. Did you personally, subsequent to October 1, 1919, issue any orders, directly or indirectly, for the convening of any compulsory corvée for construction work in your district?

Answer. No, sir; I never did.

Question. It has been alleged that you had personal knowledge of the existence of a number of Caco prisoners near Maissade. Is this allegation founded on fact; and if so, what were the attendant circumstances?

Answer. There were no prisoners killed except escaping prisoners; that is, prisoners who were attempting to escape. Several prisoners were killed in attempting to escape. Between December, 1918, and March, 1919, there were several attempts by prisoners to escape, and quite a number escaped—I think about 20. During that time we probably killed between 10 and 15 men who were trying to escape.

Question. Do you know of any other prisoners being killed in or near Maissade during your duty there?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Have you any knowledge of the circumstances attending the death of one Garnier, a notary, who, it is alleged, was found dead in your office under peculiar circumstances?

Answer. Yes, sir; I have some knowledge of this man. He was found dead in his house, concealing his wound with a towel wrapped around his head. He was brought to the barracks, and I questioned him, asking him why he had not reported for treatment; why he had not made some report as being wounded so that we could have treated his wound, and all he said was that "I don't know." He wanted to go back to his house, and I did not talk of his wound, so I left him sitting in front of the barracks in a chair. The sergeant gave him first-aid treatment. He would not say anything being done for him. At first he denied being wounded.

During the attack that came through Garnier's house, or about 3.30 in the afternoon—there was an attack by the bandits on the town, the barracks were attacked. The bandits came through Garnier's house and cover behind his house. We were firing from the barracks and they were firing from Garnier's house. After the skirmish was over I chased them out of the town, and it was dark when I returned to the town, so I went to my house, and shortly after I went into my house the sergeant came and told me that he believed Garnier had been wounded. I sent the sergeant to see if he could find Garnier. When the sergeant returned he brought him with him. I asked Garnier if he was wounded, and he said that he was. The sergeant unbuttoned his vest and I saw blood on the towel. I asked the sergeant who had wounded him, and he replied that he did not know. I asked why he didn't report so that we could give him treatment, and all he said was that he didn't know. I asked him if he knew anything about the attack, and he said he didn't know. I asked him if he wanted to lie down and he said he would rather sit up. I left him sitting in front of the barracks. I went to bed and left the sergeant to look out for him and do what he pleased for him. Some time in the night they awoke me and said that Garnier was dead. The sergeant awoke me again the next morning and asked me to look for Garnier's body; I told him to inform the Judge and the Mayor, which was done. Everything was done to save Garnier's life that was in my power. I gave him the best I had in medical treatment to save his life.

Garnier was a very good inhabitant of the town and friendly toward the people. He must have gotten in the way of a stray bullet during the fight. After the fight, I would like to state, all the civilians left the town.

10. Question. Was any order, written or verbal, ever received by you, did you ever hear of such an order, to summarily execute (bump) prisoners and to make no report of such executions to higher authorities? If so, from whom did you receive such orders; or, if no order was received, what led you to assume that such actions would meet with the approval of the superior officers?

Answer. No, sir; I never heard of anything like that; the orders were to scatter, disband, or capture organized bandits. The bandits were thieves, traveling from place to place in bands of from 30 to 150 men. When I went into the district we were instructed to scatter these parties and capture as many as we could, and any stolen property that was recovered was instructed to return it to the owners if the owners could be found. The bandits were all armed with machetes and rifles, and when attacked, if you came up to them, they would always fire on you.

11. Question. Did you ever hear that Capt. Ernest Lavole had executed 19 Caco prisoners in or near Hinche in January, 1919; and if so, from what source was your information gained?

Answer. While I was in the district I did not hear that any prisoners were killed by Captain Lavole, but after I left the district and returned to Port au Prince I did hear rumors—sometimes that 40 prisoners had been killed and sometimes that 8 or 10 prisoners had been killed in the district of Hinche. There were always rumors floating around that bandits had been killed in this town and that town, and more false rumors than anything else; every rumor that came in had a different tale to tell.

12. Question. Did your duties place you in direct contact with Major H. Wells?

Answer. Only during inspections and his passing through the place.

13. Question. Then you saw him quite a number of times during your duty?

Answer. Yes, sir.

14. Question. During these times did you ever see Major Wells drinking under the influence of liquor?

Answer. No, sir; I never did.

15. Question. During your talk with Major Catlin, at the time of his inspection at Hinche and Maissade, you acknowledged that some prisoners in the district had been killed?

Answer. The only prisoners that were killed were those prisoners who were killed in escaping.

16. Question. General Catlin has made the statement that on his inspection at Maissade he found about 45 men working on the road near Maissade.

several gendarmes. He further stated that he stopped and questioned them, and that some of them stated that they had been brought there by others, and others said that the chief of section had brought them. Can you explain this?

Ver. The chief is known as a justice of the peace or some official as to the justice of the peace. This chief of section would send to me from time to time as many men as were needed to work on the road. He would tell the people that I had work, and that if they would report to him he would send them into town. Some would work and some wouldn't. Every Monday or Sunday the sergeant would notify the magistrate as to how many men he had, and the magistrate would come to me to get the money, and I would go with the magistrate to pay the men. They were all paid in my presence. The sergeant was the timekeeper and figured out how much each man was due him, and after payment everybody went home or stayed over for the next week's work, whichever they preferred. The 45 men that General Baker questioned were all paid, to my personal knowledge, from my house on Monday.

Some of these 45 men had not been paid up to the time when General Baker was talking to them, because they had not been working long enough—two or three days—in other words, they were paid once a week and pay didn't come around.

Question. Did you ever know an officer in the gendarmerie by the name of Lerick Baker; and if so, please state your opinion as to his general opinion?

Ver. He was known as an agitator; he was not sincere; he would give the impression that he thought people wanted to have to them. In other words, he was liked by all the people who knew him as a man not to be depended upon for truthfulness. He was known as a squealer, and after he got out of the gendarmerie he turned against the gendarmerie and has been a great agitator—that is the general talk of every one in Haiti that knows him.

Question. During your service in the gendarmerie you had frequent communications with the natives?

Ver. Yes, sir; I was associated with them continually.

Question. Did you ever hear the natives refer to Captain Doxey, of the Marine Corps?

Ver. Yes, sir; I have had all kinds of natives tell me that they liked Captain Doxey; in fact, he was referred to by them as "the old man," as he was always ready to accommodate them and assist them in any way he could.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS,
Washington, D. C.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this the 9th day of January, 1920.

*Lieutenant Colonel, Assistant Adjutant, and Inspector,
United States Marine Corps.*

T. DOBCAS L. WILLIAMS was recalled as a witness, and having been informed that his previous oath was still binding, and having been informed of his right to decline to answer any criminating question, further testified as follows:

Question. Referring to your answer to question 5 of your previous testimony wherein you stated that the natives working in your district were paid, how much were they paid?

Ver. They were paid 40 cents a day, Haitian money, and their meals.

Question. Could labor not be paid and still be compulsory?

Ver. It could be if it was that way, but I obtained the labor the same as before corvée ever existed by notifying some good inhabitant that I had work or the chief of section.

Question. Were any of the prisoners referred to in your previous testimony after recapture?

Ver. No, sir; not after recapture; none.

Question. Referring to question 7 of your previous testimony, was any of the killing of these prisoners made to higher authority?

Ver. All prisoners killed were reported to my district commander, and all killings were reported in the same way.

Answer. Yes.

7. Question. When was it issued?

Answer. September or October, 1918.

8. Question. Did you know of any corvée after that time?

Answer. I understand they were running corvée in Maissade.

6. Question. Who was in command at Hinche when the last rebellion

Answer. Captain Kelly had it in October.

7. Question. Who relieved him?

Answer. Captain Lavigne.

8. Question. Who relieved him?

Answer. Major Doxey.

9. Question. Were you ever instructed to make private reports to with reference to operations in the Hinche district?

Answer. Not private reports, but telegrams received through that by telephone were to be kept on file at the Third Company office and key.

10. Question. Who gave this order?

Answer. Colonel Wells.

11. Question. Why was this order issued?

Answer. I do not know if it was caused by this investigation place at Hinche.

12. Question. Did Colonel Wells ever instruct you to disregard cert received from the chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti?

Answer. No, sir.

13. Question. Do you know whether these or any orders were disre-

Answer. No, sir.

14. Question. Do you remember when the first order against corvée

Answer. The first order came out in the latter part of August.

15. Question. Was this order ever disregarded?

Answer. I do not know that this was done. I heard it from the Hinche (Belliot) and a chief of section named Joseph Marvella, named Albert.

16. Question. Did the priest at Hinche ever inform you that before there Cacos had been killed after they had surrendered?

Answer. Yes.

17. Question. Did anybody at Hinche tell you that?

Answer. No one at Hinche but a marine named Sasse told me that had been taken out of the prison at Hinche and shot, and the priest told me the same thing.

9. Question. Who told you of this?

Answer. Only Haitians.

10. Question. Who was in command of Maissade at this time?

Answer. Lieutenant Williams.

11. Question. What were your reports to Major Wells as to the of the natives during your time in command at Thomassique?

Answer. I only made reports to Captain Lavole. I reported condition bad.

12. Question. Did you ever hear that Major Wells had ordered anyone else at Hinche to disregard Major Wells's orders at Hinche.

Answer. No.

13. Question. Do you know that they had corvée at Maissade after abolishing it had come out?

Answer. Just from what Haitians told me.

14. Question. Do you approve of killing wounded prisoners?

Answer. No, sir.

15. Question. Do you really think that conditions were good in d'armerie in the early part of 1919?

Answer. No.

16. Question. Why not?

Answer. Messages came in that telephone lines were being cut and burned.

17. Question. Do you consider the Gendarmerie d'Haiti responsible condition?

Answer. Not absolutely responsible.

18. Question. But in a way?

Answer. Well, I don't know.

in FRANK VERDIER, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant, United States Corps), was called as a witness, was duly sworn, and testified as follows:

Question. State your name and rank.

Answer. Frank Verdier, captain, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant, United States Marine Corps).

Question. Did you ever hear of any prisoners—that is, Cacos—being shot in a proper trial?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Where were you stationed in 1919, up to date?

Answer. I have been in Ouanaminthe since September, 1918.

Question. Did you ever hear that Caco prisoners were being treated inhumanly? I never heard any remarks about it.

Question. When did the order against corvée come out?

Answer. October 1, 1918.

Question. Did you ever hear that this order has been disobeyed?

Answer. I heard that it had been disobeyed at Maissade by the magistrate.

Question. During early part of 1919 did you have any trouble with Cacos in Ouanaminthe district?

Answer. Yes; in July, 1919.

Question. Did you ever hear that Caco prisoners had been shot in the street at Hinche?

Answer. I heard that some people had been shot in the cemetery at Hinche, but I don't know whether they were prisoners or Cacos.

Question. Who told you?

Answer. Some Haitian; I don't know his name.

Question. Did you speak to anyone about it?

Answer. I spoke to Captain Kelly about it, but he said that it was not so. Question. This was the only conversation you had on this subject?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Who told you of the corvée at Maissade?

Answer. I don't remember.

Question. Was he white or Haitian?

Answer. I think he was white.

Question. Did you ever have any conversation with Captain Bolte about prisoners or mistreating them?

Answer. I think that I told Captain Bolte that I had heard a rumor that some prisoners had been shot at Hinche.

nd Lieut. P. JULES ANDRE, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, was called as a witness. Fred J. Holly was called as interpreter and was duly sworn.

Lieutenant Andre was duly sworn and testified as follows:

Question. What is your name and rank?

Answer. P. Jules Andre, second lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

Question. It has been reported that there has been a lot of killing of prisoners. Do you know anything about this?

Answer. I never witnessed any shooting, as I was at Thomonde; but I heard of some executions at Hinche and at a suburb of Hinche called Latte.

Question. Who was in command at these places?

Answer. Captain Lavole.

Question. Did you ever hear of any other murders of any prisoners in the north?

Answer. Yes; At Maissade; one named Garliner.

Question. By whose orders was the murdering done at Maissade?

Answer. I don't know.

Question. Wasn't it generally known throughout the gendarmerie that these were the result of orders from Major Wells?

Answer. No.

Question. Can you give any reasons for these killings?

Answer. The officers acted pretty much as they liked, as they were not controlled by their superior officers.

Question. Do you know whether they had corvée at Maissade during the months of January, February, and March of this year?

Answer. They had it in December last year and in January and February of this year.

Question. By whose orders was this corvée ordered?

Answer. I don't know; but I presume it was by the order of Major Wells.

10. Question. Is it not generally known that this corvée was ordered by Wells?

Answer. I presume it was, as he was in command of that district. All orders came from him.

11. Question. What effect did this corvée have on the feelings of the people in the north?

Answer. A very bad effect, and I think that it was the cause for the rebellion in the north.

12. Question. Did you see much of Major Wells?

Answer. I know him very well, because he was my captain. He was a colonel.

13. Question. Was he in the habit of using intoxicating liquor very often?

Answer. I never saw him intoxicated, but I know he drank.

14. Question. Do you know Major Doxey?

Answer. Yes, sir; very well.

15. Question. Was Major Doxey responsible in any way for the corvée?

Answer. I think not, because he never had anything to do with corvées.

16. Question. Did Major Doxey know anything about the killing of prisoners at Hinche?

Answer. I don't know, because I was at the Cape and so was Major Wells.

17. Question. Is there any bad treatment of prisoners in the north at the present time; and, if not, what is the last case of that kind that you know of?

Answer. No; not at the present time. The last case was in March.

18. Question. Did the maltreating of prisoners stop when General Wells issued that order?

Answer. Yes.

FREDERICK C. BAKER was called as a witness and was duly sworn and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name?

Answer. Frederick C. Baker.

2. Question. Have you ever been connected with the Gendarmerie in Haiti, and, if so, for how long?

Answer. I have. I was attached to and serving with the Gendarmerie d'Haiti for a period of three years, my service terminating April 1, 1919.

3. Question. It has been reported that marines and gendarmes were killing Caco prisoners. Do you know anything about this?

Answer. Only from hearsay.

4. Question. During your time in the gendarmerie, were you ever ordered to "bump off" or not to take any prisoners?

Answer. I was on one occasion. About November 1, 1918, while I was district commander, district of Gonaïves, Haiti, Malsade was attacked and certain destructions committed there. On the date following the attack, my then department commander, Maj. C. H. Wells, called me by private message to Cape Haitien to Gonaïves, and related the details of the attack and that I proceed with a patrol from Gonaïves to Malsade. He further stated that prisoners, if any were undesirable, useless, and he desired them removed, by this expression, of course, meant to kill them. I followed out the patrol so far as going to Malsade and making a general patrol, no prisoners were captured, therefore none killed.

5. Question. Do you know of anyone else who received like orders?

Answer. From Capt. Ernest Lavole, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, Lieutenant Williams, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, and Lieutenant Williams, Gendarmerie d'Haiti; that they had received the same and similar orders.

6. Question. Did you ever hear that any of the above-named officers issued these orders?

Answer. I have been informed and believe that Captain Lavole issued these orders and was acting under the orders of Major Wells when he killed 19 prisoners at Hinche in January, 1919.

7. Question. Was it generally talked about among the marine and gendarmerie officers, that prisoners were being bumped off?

Answer. In close circles among the gendarmerie officers whom I knew and with whom I most associated it was understood I believe, to be nothing to bump off as nearly as possible all prisoners taken. It was not discussed by them all and it was generally understood among them.

8. Question. Was this understanding caused entirely by orders received from Major Wells?

To the best of my belief the whole incentive behind the executions reverse the orders and sanction given the act by Major Wells.

on. Were you very well acquainted with Major Wells?

I was. I was closely associated with Major Wells from November, January, 1919, serving as his assistant on road construction in the the north and by virtue of nature of this that I became close to him as it were weeks at a time continually in his company and with him entry.

stion. What was the attitude of Major Wells with reference to rebellion trouble in the north?

Major Wells often instructed men, along with others, to use the on all reports and except in cases of necessity or to comply with lar order to make no reports at all. He often explained this by at Port au Prince was too busy and had no time to receive or read details. He stated that he would be satisfied as long as the country state of good police, and he neither cared nor wanted to hear of the executions to accomplish this end.

stion. Did Major Wells ever express any desire not to hear of these

He often stated that he did not want to hear of these things.

stion. Have you ever seen Major Wells under the influence of liquor? I have; numerous times.

stion. Is it possible that some of these bumping-off orders were due to that he had been drinking?

I would think it possible that some were, although at the time he order to bump off prisoners taken in or around Maissade I do not at he was in the slightest affected by the influence of liquor.

stion. Was Major Doxey entirely familiar with everything that was in the north?

It is my opinion that he was. He was closer to Major Wells than officer in the department of the north and appeared always to counsel se with Major Wells in all matters of importance pertaining to He was in and out of Hinche frequently and it would seem incon- that he was entirely unconscious of the things that were going on.

stion. Did he ever express any orders as to bumping off prisoners?

Not to my knowledge.

stion. Was it generally known or talked about that all the conditions referred to had been explained and gone over by General Catlin on to St. Michel in March, 1919?

It was. From others and all practically who had been interro- General Catlin I learned that practically every phase of the conditions have related were brought to the attention of General Catlin at some ing his investigations at St. Michel and Hinche stion. At any time after General Catlin's conference was an order either General Catlin or Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams or Major Wells e conditions must change?

r. There was. I received an order from the chief of the gendarmerie ng in detail the execution of Caco or other prisoners.

stion. What date was the order against corvée issued?

r. October 1, 1918.

stion. Was this order ever disobeyed?

r. It was. This order was disobeyed in the districts of Maissade he from October 1, 1918, until some time in March, 1919.

stion. Was this order disobeyed by instructions from anybody?

r. Captain Lavole and Lieutenant Williams, when I inquired of them pacity as inspector of roads in the north as to by whose authority and ence funds were coming to carry on their work, informed me that Vells had ordered them to construct roads between St. Michel and e and between Maissade and Hinche with corvée labor, and that he had the magistrates of Maissade and Hinche to make a certain contribution ich the corvée would be fed.

stion. What effect did the breaking of this order against corvée labor the people in the north?

r. It is my opinion that the corvée illegally formed after October 1, d after the Haitian public generally knew and well understood that all and forced labor had been ordered suspended constituted the chiefest the dissatisfaction which led to revolution, and it is well known that the first Caco forces were largely recruited from this last formed opinion is based on my experience of handling corvée labor during 1917 and the spring of 1918, when I had under me and personally directed the largest corvée ever formed in Haiti, numbering 3,000 men. Under existing conditions the members of my corvée, knowing that they were legally to be called up to do road work, offered no resistance and contented during the entire operation; that is, the construction of the road from Gonaïves to the Limbe River, and the first discontent over this subject was in the district of Maïssade and Hinche when these prisoners that they were being forcibly detained, worked under guard, and the President of Haiti as well as the chief of the Gendarmerie ordered the suspension of corvée labor throughout the Republic.

22. Question. From your conversation with marine and gendarmes can you give an estimation of illegal executions in the district of Hinche?

Answer. Aggregating all reports and rumors I would judge they exceed over 400 at least, and in this number there are included a percentage of persons suspicioned or whose identity was never known.

23. Question. Was this estimate a low or high estimate?

Answer. This is a low estimate.

7. First Lieut. HAROLD H. WOOD, Gendarmerie d'Haiti. (corps United States Marine Corps), was called as a witness and was duly sworn and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name and rank?

Answer. Harold R. Wood, first lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (United States Marine Corps).

2. Question. Do you know anything of the unlawful killing of Cacos?

Answer. No, sir.

3. Question. Have you heard in any way of the unlawful killing of prisoners?

Answer. I had heard of some of them being killed.

4. Question. Where?

Answer. In Hinche and Maïssade.

5. Question. Did you ever hear by whose instructions this was done?

Answer. I know nothing of instructions about actual killings of prisoners but instructions were said to have been issued not to take any prisoners.

6. Question. By whom were these orders issued?

Answer. They were said to have been issued by the department Colonel Wells.

7. Question. Was Major Doxey cognizant of these instructions when he had been issued?

Answer. As to that I don't know, because at that time I saw Major Doxey once, having passed him on a road.

8. Question. Do you know whether Major Doxey was in or around Hinche about this time?

Answer. No, sir; Major Doxey was not there.

9. Question. Do you know Lieutenant Spear?

Answer. No, sir.

8. Captain JOHN L. DOXEY, United States Marine Corps, was called as a witness and was duly sworn and testified as follows:

1. Question. State your name and rank.

Answer. John L. Doxey, captain, United States Marine Corps.

2. Question. What duty were you performing between the months of December, 1918, and March, 1919?

Answer. I was district commander of the district of Cape Haitien.

3. Question. Did this work take you into the Hinche district or the towns of Maïssade and Hinche?

Answer. I was directed to go into the Hinche district on about November 1918, and remained there until October 30 or 31. Again I was ordered about February 17 and remained there until March 31, 1919.

4. Question. While in the Hinche district, did you at any time witness or hear of unlawful killing of Caco prisoners?

Answer. Some time in March I heard rumors of this.

5. Question. What were these rumors?

Answer. All that I remember was killing of prisoners and that I was ordered to make an investigation.

6. Question. Where did rumors say these prisoners had been killed?

Just in the Hinche district.

Question. Not in Hinche?

Answer. No; not necessarily; in the district of Hinche.

Question. Can you give the approximate date?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. What attempt, if any, did you make to investigate these rumors?

Answer. None.

Question. Can you give any reasons for not investigating these rumors?

Answer. None; except that I was not directed to investigate these rumors, and good there would be an investigation.

Question. Your theory is, then, that if you heard of something wrong in the district that you would not investigate it unless ordered? Is that correct?

Answer. No, sir; that was not in my district at that time.

Question. Did you not say that some time in March you were ordered out of the Hinche district again?

Answer. About the 17th of February until the 7th of March.

Question. Then you did not hear these rumors in the Hinche district, but in the other?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. Did you ever mention these rumors to Major Wells?

Answer. Not that I remember.

Question. Did you ever hear that certain gendarmerie officers had orders to bump off prisoners?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Was the killing of prisoners you referred to the killing of 19 who were shot in the cemetery at Hinche?

Answer. No, sir; I do not recall any particular incident in regard to these, but understood that there was to be an investigation of conditions in the district of Hinche.

Question. There was an investigation, was there not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. You had nothing whatever to do with the district of Hinche when you heard these rumors?

Answer. No; I can not recall just when I heard these rumors. I don't know if it was before or after.

Question. Well, had it been while you were in charge of that district when you have investigated it?

Answer. Yes; I would have if I were in charge of the district.

Question. Do you know Captain Lavoie, Gendarmerie d'Haiti?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you know Captain Bolte, Gendarmerie d'Haiti?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you know Lieutenant Williams, Gendarmerie d'Haiti?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you know Mr. Baker, formerly of the gendarmerie?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Have you ever had any conversation with the above-named persons in reference to the killing of Caco prisoners or the unlawful killing of civilians?

Answer. On about March 10 I received written orders in regard to what action would be made of prisoners, and I personally instructed Lavoie, and others, in the district, as I recall now in this order, and explained the same to each officer and each gendarme before they left on patrol. There has been a conversation that I can not recall at this time.

Question. You state positively then that you do not remember of any action held with the gendarme officers aforementioned with regard to the killing of prisoners or Cacos in the Hinche district.

Answer. I don't recall any as I stated that I did not have anything to do with the same.

Question. If you have had any conversation with any one of the aforementioned gendarmerie officers before March it would surely have arrested your mind, would it not?

Answer. Not necessarily, because during this time there was a great deal of gossip going on and I did not go in for either.

Question. Did you not consider it necessary then to consider the rumors in the district you command?

Answer. I did not command the district of Hinche until about March 8 and did not interest myself in any thing that happened prior to that date, but did after this date, and every rumor or report of killing had made investigation or report of it.

28. Question. Did you ever find that on an investigation that any of the rumors were true?

Answer. I remember of one prisoner who was killed. I believe Major Wells while on a detail getting sugar cane. I investigated this and made a report of it as required then by regulations, and later was directed to make a more detailed report, which I submitted and was accepted.

29. Question. Who did the killing?

Answer. A private in the gendarmerie.

30. Question. What duty were you performing at Hinche between November and October 31.

Answer. To operate patrols and to try to capture Charlamagne.

31. Question. Were you in command of the Hinche district at that time?

Answer. No, sir.

32. Question. Were you the senior officer present?

Answer. After the 22d I was.

33. Question. The second time you went to the Hinche district on February 17, was it not? What was your duty then?

Answer. To see that there was no friction between the gendarmes and the marines.

34. Question. Were you the senior officer present then?

Answer. No, sir; not at all times. Colonel Hooker would come.

35. Question. If you heard any rumors of killings of prisoners on February 17 and March 7, would you have investigated them?

Answer. Not necessarily. I would have reported it to Major Wells.

36. Question. Did you ever make any report to Major Wells with reference to the killing of Cacos or prisoners before the investigation of General Catlin?

Answer. I would have perhaps told him that I heard rumors of killings in the district.

37. Question. Do you know of any investigation he ever made on this subject?

Answer. I don't recall if he did or not make an investigation.

38. Question. Would you know if he made an investigation?

Answer. No, not necessarily.

39. Question. Will you state, positively, that you knew absolutely of the killing of certain prisoners in Hinche in January, 1919, by Captain Lavoie.

(Captain Doxey was informed of his rights in this question, and had a perfect right to refuse to answer it if it in any way incriminated him.)

Answer. I heard rumors, but of no specific case. It was reported that Captain Lavoie had something to do with the killing of prisoners in January. If I remember, it was in conversation with General Catlin.

40. Question. Will you make the positive assertion that you did not know of this occurrence before your conversation with General Catlin?

Answer. No, sir; but I believe it to be correct.

Mr. ERNEST J. LAVOIE was called as a witness, was duly sworn, and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name?

Answer. Mr. Ernest J. Lavoie.

2. Question. Have you ever been connected with the Haitian army?

Answer. Yes.

3. Question. During your connection with the gendarmerie were you cognizant of the fact that there was any unlawful killing of Cacos?

Answer. Yes.

4. Can you state whom these instructions with reference to the killing of Cacos were given by?

Answer. That is a very difficult question to answer.

5. Question. Were you ever given instructions to hump off prisoners?

Answer. Yes.

6. Question. Who gave you these instructions?

Answer. Colonel Wells.

7. Question. Please state the circumstances.

Answer. It was in conversation at Hinche the first night I was there, in the presence of Captain Verdier. "The only way to stop ake it as hard as we could for them, as the gendarmerie had to handle them. Such men as Saul Peralte should be bumped off. On your return in the morning you can tend to that, Verdier." And he said, "Never mind sending prisoners into Cape Haitien; you can handle them yourself at Hinche." Question. Will you state positively that you never received any instructions from Colonel Wells to bump off prisoners?

A. In substance he told me that I shouldn't send any prisoners on into Hinche; that I could handle them right in Hinche, and not take them to the Cape; that I could be bumped off.

Question. Col. RICHARD S. HOOKER, United States Marine Corps, was called in, was duly sworn, and testified as follows:

Question. State your name, rank, and present station.

A. Richard S. Hooker; lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps; acting as assistant chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, Port au Prince, Haiti. Question. What duty have you been performing since your arrival in Haiti in the month of this year?

A. From January, 1919, to July 20, 1919, I resumed my duties at Cape Haitien as regimental commander of the Second Regiment and district commander of northern Haiti, when I was appointed assistant chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti. I continued the same duties until October 9, 1919, when I resumed my duties in the gendarmerie in Port au Prince.

Question. State fully all you know of the disturbances in northern Haiti since your coming to your knowledge as district commander, stating particularly of the treatment of prisoners, corvée, or other treatment of which would be likely to cause discontent and tend to continue the trouble.

A. When I arrived in Port au Prince from the United States, January 1, 1919, General Catlin told me that he was not satisfied with conditions in the north and stated that his information was not direct. He directed me to go to the north and let him know. I arrived in the Cape January 1, 1919. On rumors and general gossip I gathered that in the district of central Haiti there was rough treatment was going on and from several Haitians that corvée was still in force. Major Wells, then colonel in the gendarmerie, practically told me in the presence of Major Doxey that they, meaning the bandits, were being hanged and were being bumped off and that no official reports were being made. I did not take this seriously at the time. I went to Port au Prince after the latter part of January or early part of February and in conversation with General Catlin told him that I knew there was too much rough work and that corvée was still in existence. General Catlin then gave me verbal instructions to go into the Hinche district and submit a report to him as to what was found there. This report I forwarded about the middle or latter part of February, in writing, and in which I stated that I had seen 150 men actually doing forced labor and had seen gendarmes maltreating inhabitants. In Hinche I saw a gendarme from whipping a woman in the open market because her dress was more than he thought it should have cost. I reported this to Captain Lavoie in Major Doxey's presence. I saw a prisoner being taken by three gendarmes with the butts of their rifles. I heard from Pere Lerue of Hinche, and from Pere Lerue, of San Michel and Maissade, that the people were in a state of terror and being killed at will. The bishop of Cape Haitien told me the same thing. This I did not see nor could find at that time to prove, but I could see that a reign of terror existed. When my report was received by General Catlin I was sent for and had a discussion with General Williams and Major Wells were present. My report was denied and the existence of corvée was denied by Major Wells. From his March 6 or 7 verbal reports and conferences were held, when General Catlin, on account of conflicting testimonies, decided to make a personal investigation himself. On March 7 he arrived in San Michel, accompanied by General Williams and Mr. Holly, where I met him. Major Wells and Major Doxey were also there. We all started the next morning; we went to Hinche. On coming into the town there were some workmen on the road. General Catlin stopped and after being told by several that they had been working nothing, that some had been working since February, and that in the part of their work they spent the night in prison. They stated that they had received 30 cents Haitian a day for about a week, but that General Williams had promised them a gourde a day on the coming Monday. General Catlin told them that those who were not there voluntarily to stop to the other side of the road. All but three did so. Two of these three that they were chiefs of the work and well paid and the other stated he had not stepped over because he lived in Maïssade proper. The General's verbal testimony for about three or four hours, and the gist of the testimony was that corvée had been going on and that several persons had been killed through the false testimony of the Magistrate Martial Prevail to Lieutenant Williams. There was no direct proof to many of the stories, but Lieutenant Williams admitted to having executed three or four and later five or six. Several witnesses testified to the death of Garnier, the notary, and Lieutenant Williams admitted that the man had died. A report made against them by five citizens of Maïssade. They were confined in Hinche and tried in Maïssade without being present. Garnier stated in the court that this was not the words to that effect. That night about 7 or 8 o'clock Garnier was found at Lieutenant Williams's house with the magistrate and at 2 o'clock the next morning found dead in a chair in the barracks yard, beaten with a club. In his same day testimony was received from the priest, Pere Belliot, the notary, Savique Perlate, and Juge de Paix Moncey Malary that many persons had been executed with a machine gun and that the corvée had been continuing in Maïssade. The first statement was corroborated by Mr. Lang in a statement. General Catlin and myself at the San Michel plantation. Captain Lavole admitted to having taken six prisoners and executed them for disobeying orders. Both Lieutenant Williams and Captain Lavole were silent as to where instructions came from allowing maltreatment, during General Catlin's statement. Marines were placed in all the towns as garrisons and to act as men for patrols to the gendarmes in March, and I issued instructions dated March 12, concerning their treatment of inhabitants. (Copy of instructions attached. A. Copy of commanding officer Fifty-third, Company B.) The instructions were repeated on many occasions and all officers and men there understood them. Such maltreatment of inhabitants as came to notice was subject to proof and not idle rumors were punished by general court-martial. On June 7 I investigated a report made against Captain Hamilton as giving orders to shoot prisoners if sure they were Cacos. On questioning he stated to me before Colonel Wise that he had an order in his files from General Williams dated, March 10, forbidding the shooting of prisoners. Major Wells had verbally told him that that order did not apply to prisoners who were actually in prison and that he should go ahead executing prisoners and say nothing about it. I recommended, and Captain Hamilton brought to trial before a general court-martial for murder. This is the direct case where I personally was told by one who had himself received Major Wells's order to execute prisoners. There were many rumors and the impression throughout the north was that such orders existed. I have heard many of prisoners being wantonly killed, but upon investigation I have found that were untrue and usually circulated by men who were trying to make the out to be bad men. I heard that Lieutenant Ryan had killed two natives without cause and recommended and brought him to trial before a general court-martial for murder.

4. Question. Do you know anything of Lieutenant Spear's actions?

Answer. No. I was at Hinche and in the north. He was in the north. I know nothing about him except that there was such an officer.

5. Question. Do you know of any order forbidding corvée?

Answer. Yes. On October 1, 1918, the chief of the gendarmerie issued an order, and later on, October 18, he issued an order stopping it. This was because the corvée was going on in the Hinche-Maïssade-Saint district, because these places were not mentioned in his first order. This was a proclamation or notice from the brigade commander to the same effect.

6. Question. Do you know positively that the corvée continued after that order?

Answer. Yes; in February, 1919, I myself saw the corvée in operation in Maïssade. Two groups of between 50 and 75 men each were working on the roads, and a third group of about 45 in the market place of Maïssade.

7. Question. Do you know if Major Wells gave orders or knew that the corvée was still in operation there?

Answer. I don't know, but Major Wells was in command of that district and the roads were being built, which Major Wells knew; therefore he must have known that there was corvée.

ALFRED HOLLY was called as a witness, and testified as follows, after uly sworn:

estion. What is your name and occupation.

er. John Alfred Holly, translator at brigade headquarters, United Marine Corps, Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti.

estion. In March, 1919, did you act as interpreter for General Catlin investigation at Maissade?

er. Yes.

estion. Repeat as nearly as possible the conversation you translated for Catlin.

er. At Maissade the greater part of the investigation was devoted to ring of evidence as to the continuance of and manner of conducting com-corvée, as to the treatment of the men, and the manner in which they -cruited, and as to the wages paid them. Briefly stated, the evidence to show that the peasants were "invited"—convened—to assemble at a place to attend an "audience" to be given by Lieutenant Williams, command at Maissade. When the country folk arrived at the place of ous the lieutenant was not there, and they were told to go on to Maï-
When they arrived at this place they were locked up in prison for the nd the next morning they were put to work on the roads. At the time eral was speaking to them the majority of the men had been kept at or two months or more. Every night they were locked up in prison to em from running away. Some of the men declared that, as a matter they had been invited—asked—to come and work on the roads; that nsidered the invitation as an order, because such was the custom in nd because they knew of instances where those who refused to respond invitation were beaten and compelled to go, and that some who tried to ay were fired at. All of the men of the gang, with one exception, on sked the question by the general replied that they would much prefer rn home and work in their gardens, which, they said, were going to All of them owned lands in their own rights. The exception was the ader, who explained that he was to a certain extent responsible for bring-men there; he could not consistently say that he preferred to be at

In this case his presence with the gang was entirely voluntary. It nd that up to the time that the general was speaking to the men none n, with the possible exception of the gang leader, had been receiving the to which he was entitled. On being given permission to do so, the whole roke up and went home. There were complaints of ill treatment of the and of persons being beaten to death. One instance is that of the notary of the place, an old man by the name of Garnier. This man rested at the investigation of the justice of the peace and of the mayor ommune (magistrate communal), taken to the bureau of the gendarmeabout 7 o'clock in the evening, and was beaten by the lieutenant himself fter 9 o'clock, when he was put in a rocking chair, in which he died ne during the night. The notary's offense was that of having remon-with the judge as to the severity of a sentence rendered by him in a which the magistrate communal was the plaintiff. I can not recall ticulars of the case, but I do remember that the sentence was heavy, prisonment, and the notary thought that in view of the fact that there erious doubts as to the justice of the cause, the fine should have been red to be a sufficient penalty. Lieutenant Williams's action in this mat-ned to have been due to his friendship or sympathy for both the mayor judge. There were complaints of unlawful capture of cattle and other s that were sent to the pound, and which under various pretexts the ant refused to return to the owners. Many, and among them all the nes stationed at Maissade at the time, testified that Lieutenant Will-ad summarily executed some 12 or 16 persons, some with his own hands, ried their bodies in the yard back of his office. The spot where the were buried was pointed out, but the grass had been leveled down t was learned that General Catlin was coming to hold an investigation.

de was the only place among those that were visited where the gen-bitterly complained of being ill treated by their chief. All the evidence at this place showed that the lieutenant, the mayor, and the judge all together and that the one was the accomplice of the others. The above he best of my recollection, a true and faithful relation of the conversa-at took place at Maissade in the month of March, this year, between General Catlin, then chief of the occupation, and the inhabitants of that district, that nothing has been added or withheld that in one way or the other would alter the value of the facts as they were given to the general.

11. The undersigned questioned many others, both civilian and commissioned officers, but while they all admitted of hearing many rumors of murdering Caco prisoners, none of them were able to testify under oath that such was so and what they had heard it. Almost everyone stationed in Haiti during the early part of this year seemed to have some knowledge of the fact that both marine and gendarmes were killing prisoners. It was very difficult to get any witnesses to testify directly, as, in the opinion of the undersigned, they were all equally culpable. As far as Lieutenant Spear is concerned, no one seemed to know anything about him, and I am inclined to believe that his statement before the court that he had killed prisoners was deliberately untrue.

12. That there were killings, and many of them, is undoubtedly true, but I believe that all of these can be directly traced to Maj. Clarke H. Wells, who was in command of the district.

13. The gendarme officers in the district were all noncommissioned officers of the old Marine Corps, men who believed in their officers and to whom it was to be obeyed to the letter. These officers received instructions from Major Wells to "bump off" Caco prisoners, and they carried their orders out to the best of their ability. I do not feel that under the circumstances they should be held responsible and that the responsibility should be put where it belongs, on the shoulders of Major Wells.

14. Captain Doxey's testimony was undoubtedly colored by the fact that he was attempting to shield himself; and even if his testimony was true he showed the greatest disregard for his duty when he neglected to report all rumors to Major Wells. His work in Hinche seemed to be to get by and do nothing.

15. I am convinced that Corpl. Edward J. Sieger, United States Marine Corps, deliberately lied in his testimony. Sufficient evidence was brought out to show that he was included in the ones who received the "bump off" order.

16. Sergt. Doras R. Williams, United States Marine Corps, who was in command of Maissade as a lieutenant of the gendarmerie, could give quite a lot of information if he desired, but he is now in the United States, probably discharged.

17. Further, the fact that General Catlin made an investigation at San Juan would tend to prove that something wrong had happened. I have searched the files for any correspondence on this subject, but found none.

18. Attached, marked "A," "B," and "C," is the only data on this subject found in the files of the brigade.
